PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 80th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, MAY 21, 1947

(Legislative day of Monday, April 21, 1947)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Charles W. Sheerin, D. D., rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O God, our Heavenly Father, guide, we beseech Thee, this body in its deliberations and work. In these days of confusion and doubt, we pray Thee that, as we seek for truth, we may find that the search leads us to Thyself. Give us courage to speak honestly and reverence to speak humbly; and when our minds are perplexed and we cannot find Thee, give us patience to go on with our daily duties.

Thou hast taught us that Thou wilt require much from those to whom much is given; grant that we in this country, whom Thou hast called to so goodly a heritage, may extend more abundantly that which we so richly enjoy in learning to serve our fellow men, and thus may we know the glory of serving Thee. May men everywhere learn that with mutual forbearance and good will Thy paths may be discovered. When we are weary, comfort us with the remembrance that we have not shirked. When we are ill rewarded, save us from bitterness and give us sympathy with all who suffer wrong. Lead us ever more deeply into the knowledge of Thy life and ours, and make us faithful interpreters of life to our fellow men and an example to all who love liberty in government and the welfare of mankind.

We ask this through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. WHITE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, May 20, 1947, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had severally agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills of the House:

H. R. 193. An act to amend section 35 of the Mineral Leasing Act of February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. 437; 30 U. S. C., sec. 191), as amended;

H. R. 1584. An act authorizing the erection and operation of a memorial museum and shop on the Fort Hall Reservation, Idaho; and

H. R. 2123. An act to amend the Locomotive Inspection Act of February 17, 1911, as amended.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 261. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of California, Northern Division, to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of all persons for reimbursement for damages and losses sustained as a result of a flood which occurred in December 1937 in levee district No. 10, Yuba County, Calif.;

H. R. 408. An act for the relief of Lawson Ashby; Mrs. Ora Ashby; and Lawson Ashby, the legal guardian of Betty Mae Ashby, a minor; Darrel Ashby, a minor; Kenneth Ashby, a minor; and Vernon Ashby, a minor;

H. R. 436. An act for the relief of Roger Edgar Lapierre;

H. R. 651. An act for the relief of the estate of Rubert W. Alexander;

H. R. 836. An act for the relief of Mrs. Augusta McCall;

H. R. 888. An act for the relief of certain owners of land who suffered loss by fire in Lake Landing Township, Hyde County, N. C.;

H. R. 893. An act for the relief of Myron R. Leard;

H. R. 984. An act for the relief of A. J. Crozat, Jr.;

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

By unanimous consent, the following routine and other business was transacted:

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the PRESIDENT pro tempore:

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Finance:

"Senate Joint Resolution 6

"Joint resolution memorializing and petitioning the President and Congress of the United States to pass appropriate legislation to enable veterans who obtained guaranteed loans prior to December 28, 1945, to come within provisions of Public Law 268

"Whereas the Seventy-eighth Congress of the United States passed Public Law 346 cited as Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, a section of which enabled veterans to obtain loans for the purchase of homes, farms and business property, which loans were guaranteed up to 50 percent by the Veterans' Administration provided the aggregate amounts did not exceed $2,000, with an interest rate not exceeding 4 percent per annum, as provided in title III, chapter V, of said law; and

"Whereas the Seventy-ninth Congress passed Public Law 268, an amendment to the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, which among other amendments, provided the guaranty up to 50 percent by the Government on veterans' loans for homes, farms, and business, provided that the aggregate amount guaranteed shall not exceed $2,000 in case of non-real-estate loans, nor $4,000 in case of real-estate loans; or a prorated portion on loans of both types or combinations thereof, with an interest rate not exceeding 4 percent per annum, as provided in title III, chapter V, of said law; and

"Whereas no provision was made for veterans who obtained such loans prior to the aforesaid amendment to take advantage of the increased Government guaranty and more liberal interest rate: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and the Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the President and the Congress of the United States are hereby respectfully memorialized and requested to take such steps as may be necessary by legislation or otherwise, to enable all veterans to have the opportunity of coming within the provisions of the aforesaid amendment; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate prepare and transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, to the President pro tempore of the Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Public Lands:

"Senate Joint Resolution 17

"Joint resolution relative to the development of deposits of mineral ores in the United States

"Whereas the discovery and development of mineral ores has been a major factor in the industrial growth of the western portion of the United States; and

"Whereas although many surveys and other works have been accomplished by men of ability and integrity in the United States Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines, it remains a fact that the mineral resources of this country have been discovered and developed largely by the adventurous resident population of these Western States, their efforts having been spurred on under our traditional mining laws by the knowledge that discovery of ore deposits on the public domain could lead to ownership and development of the deposit by the discoverer; and

"Whereas in recent years the policy of the Department of the Interior has been to modify this traditional right to enter upon the public domain for the purpose of search for and discovery of ore deposits, and to restrict the right of development by the discoverer to a mere leasehold from the Government; and

"Whereas this policy is inimical to the development of the Western States in that it robs the individual mining man of his incentive to undergo the hardships and privations incident to discovery and development of the ore deposits which under private ownership create new wealth and develop the community, and instead builds up in the Government of the United States an absentee landlordism in powerful bureaucratic authority contrary to democratic government and the American way of life; and

"Whereas depletion of known ore deposits progressed rapidly during the unprecedented production of the war years, and it is now imperative that new ore deposits be discovered and developed immediately: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Interior are hereby memorialized to abandon the policy of prohibiting entry upon large areas of the public domain, and to abandon also the policy of restricting to leasing right only the development of ore deposits discovered on the public domain, and to follow the intent of Congress as expressed in the traditional mining laws of the United States, by encouraging entry upon the public domain for the purpose of searching for ore deposits, and giving assurance that the discoverer of such ore deposits may acquire title and develop such deposits under private ownership; all to the end that the greatest possible impetus may be given to the search for new ore deposits and the most rapid development of such properties, in order that needed deposits may early be made available for industrial use throughout the United States and that throughout the western United States new and stable communities may continue to grow up in the course of development of such properties, to the greater development of California and the other Western States, to the strengthening of our democratic way of life, and to the enrichment of the whole United States; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of the Interior, to the President pro tempore of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative from the State of California in the Congress of the United States."

A petition of the members of the Tampa (Fla.) Townsend Club, No. 3, praying for the enactment of the so-called Townsend plan to provide old-age assistance; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A petition signed by 423 citizens of San Juan, Puerto Rico, praying for the enactment of Senate bill 265, to prohibit the transportation of alcoholic-beverage advertising in interstate commerce; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

The following report of a committee was submitted:

By Mr. MAYBANK, from the Committee on Banking and Currency:

S. 1230. A bill to amend sections 2 (a) and 603 (a) of the National Housing Act, as amended; without amendment (Rept. No. 195).

INCREASE IN EXPENDITURES OF COMMITTEE ON RULES AND ADMINISTRATION

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, I report favorably from the Committee on Rules and Administration Senate Resolution 114, submitted on May 19 by me. The resolution is reported unanimously by the committee, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the resolution for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the limit of expenditures authorized under Senate Resolution 54, Eightieth Congress, agreed to January 17, 1947 (authorizing the expenditure of funds and the employment of assistants by the Committee on Rules and Administration in carrying out the duties imposed upon it by subsection (o) (1) (D) of rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate), is hereby increased by $85,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BARKLEY. Reserving the right to object, may I ask the Senator whether the report from the Committee on Rules and Administration is unanimous?

Mr. BROOKS. It is unanimous.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I understand, it provides additional funds in connection with some duties in regard to contested elections?

Mr. BROOKS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

CROP INSURANCE—REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. AIKEN, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, submitted a report (No. 196) and recommendations on the audit report of the Comptroller General of the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1945.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MAGNUSON:

S. 1323. A bill to exclude certain lands from becoming a part of the Colville Indian Reservation; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. SALTONSTALL:

S. 1324. A bill to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act so as to make such act applicable to the officers and employees of the National Library for the Blind; to the Committee on Civil Service.

By Mr. WILEY:

S. 1325. A bill to encourage employment of veterans with pensionable or compensable service-connected disabilities through Federal reimbursement to any employer, insurer, or fund, of amounts of workmen's compensation paid on account of disability or death arising out of such employment; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. AIKEN (for himself and Mr. McCLELLAN):

S. 1326. A bill to amend the Federal Crop Insurance Act; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. MORSE:

S. 1327. A bill to provide automobiles and other conveyances for disabled veterans; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

S. 1328. A bill to increase the number of copies of the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD furnished to the Vice President and each Senator; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

By Mr. THOMAS of Utah (for himself and Mr. LODGE):

S. J. Res. 117. Joint resolution providing for acceptance by the United States of America of the constitution of the International Labor Organization instrument of amendment, and further authorizing an appropriation for payment of the United States share of the expenses of membership and for expenses of participation by the United States; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated:

H. R. 261. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of California, Northern Division, to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of all persons for reimbursement for damages and losses sustained as a result of a flood which occurred in December 1937 in levee district No. 10, Yuba County, Calif.;

H. R. 408. An act for the relief of Lawson Ashby; Mrs. Ora Ashby; and Lawson Ashby, the legal guardian of Betty Mae Ashby, a minor; Darrel Ashby, a minor; Kenneth Ashby, a minor; and Vernon Ashby, a minor;

H. R. 436. An act for the relief of Roger Edgar Lapierre;

H. R. 651. An act for the relief of the estate of Rubert W. Alexander;

H. R. 836. An act for the relief of Mrs. Augusta McCall;

H. R. 888. An act for the relief of certain owners of land who suffered loss by fire in Lake Landing Township, Hyde County, N. C.;

H. R. 2915. An act for the relief of Mrs. Frederick Faber Wesche (formerly Ann Maureen Bell); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 3493. An act making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

ANNOUNCEMENT OF ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY HEARINGS

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, a week from today, May 28, in the Senate Office Building caucus room, a subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, consisting of Senators SMITH, HICKENLOOPER, THOMAS of Utah, and HATCH, and myself as chairman, will open hearings on the St. Lawrence seaway project, Senate Joint Resolution 11, which was introduced by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] on behalf of himself and 15 other Senators, including myself.

Prior hearings on this very subject before the Foreign Relations Committee were held in 1933 and 1946. In the latter years they covered 1,400 printed pages of testimony. In 1941 the House Rivers and Harbors Committee held hearings on this subject, and they covered 2,400 pages of testimony. The issues of the seaway project have been long and widely debated in public forums and the press.

In view of this extensive consideration of the matter, I feel that it is unnecessary and inadvisable to rehash the issues already discussed, to go over ground that has already been covered, and to waste thereby the precious time of legislators and of witnesses, as well as to expend the money of taxpayers.

PHASES NOW TO BE CONSIDERED

I have, therefore, indicated that the hearings will be confined largely, until the subcommittee determines otherwise, to two phases of the legislation:

(a) The self-liquidation phase; and

(b) The national defense phase.

Under (a) there will be considered that entirely new provision of the bill which provides for placing the project on a self-sustaining basis by tolls on vessels using it, which are to defray the costs of operation, maintenance, repairs, and interest, so that the project will not be a burden on the taxpayer. The subcommittee will secure the most accurate statistics and estimates available from the finest type of engineering personnel and other qualified experts as to the currently expected cost of the project, the expected traffic, and related matters.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Under (b), the national defense part, I expect testimony to develop, for instance, for the affirmative, which will demonstrate that this project is necessary, in this atomic age, as a means of national security. Included in this matter is the question of the ore and power facilities that will be vital in this age to furnish matériel for our armed forces, as well as our private needs.

IMPARTIAL TREATMENT OF BILL

Mr. President, I am a cosponsor of the bill, but I want to make it absolutely clear that the subcommittee is going to seek light on this matter with complete impartiality, and with complete equality of opportunity afforded to both sides of the controversy.

I feel that it is necessary, however, that we take as short a time as possible in evaluating this legislation, and that we then report it to the full committee, and I trust soon thereafter to the full Senate, in order that, if it is at all possible, the Senate may take action on it one way or another at this session.

The Senate of the Eightieth Congress I believe is confronted, in this issue, with a challenge to show how speedily and adequately it can handle a long-standing, much-debated problem.

INVITATION OF WITNESSES

I, therefore, invite all those of my colleagues and others who may be interested in testifying on this subject, and specifically on the two phases which I have mentioned above, to communicate with this subcommittee of the Foreign Relations Committee. The testimony will, as I have indicated, however, be strictly limited in time—15 minutes, usually, at the most—and limited in nature. All witnesses will be asked to confine their remarks to concise, factual presentations, with as few generalities as possible, and as much statistical support as possible.

We expect to hear orally from very prominent witnesses from Federal, State, and local governments, as well as from private life.

I am issuing invitations to many of those who cannot be heard in the hearings, but who have previously indicated an interest in this subject, to convey to me briefly in writing their current views on the project, particularly on the two phases of it that I have specified above. I regret that all the well-qualified individuals who are deeply interested in this legislation will not have the opportunity to be heard because of the time limitation we are placing on the hearings, but I am sure that they will understand the reasons therefor in the public interest.

Mr. WHITE subsequently said: Mr. President, I wish to say a very brief word in response to what the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] has said in the way of notice to Members of the Senate. I can only gather from his statement that it is the purpose of the majority of a subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to make short shrift in the hearings of any opposition there may be. We have been told in effect that we are to be limited in time, and we are told in effect that we are to be limited in our interrogations of those who may be in favor of this new proposal and as to the substance of testimony which may be offered by those opposed to this waterway project.

I want this to be a matter of protest from me as to any such proceeding. I think a Senator of the United States on a question of this importance has a right to have something to say about the testimony that shall be taken before a committee. I think a Senator of the United States has a right to express his views before a committee. We should not in this arbitrary manner and in advance of any meeting where the matter has been discussed by the full committee be advised of the proposed limitations. I think there is no possible justification for the notice which has just been given to the Senate and to those of us who hold contrary views about this hearing

PRESENTATION OF AWARD TO J. EDGAR HOOVER

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, Mr. G. A. Richards, president of radio stations WJR, Detroit; WGAR, Cleveland; and KMPC, of Los Angeles, yesterday announced the presentation in Washington of the G. A. Richards 1946 WJR good will award for the outstanding speech on Americanism broadcast on the radio, to Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, Director of the FBI.

In conferring this award on Mr. Hoover in Washington, Mr. Richards observed that the address delivered by Mr. Hoover at the annual convention of the American Legion in San Francisco on September 30, 1946, struck the keynote of the day in building the defenses of Americanism against the insidious advances of communism which have penetrated our shores.

Mr. Hoover, in accepting the award, commended Mr. Richards for his civic consciousness and his desire to focus widespread public attention upon the theme of Americanism and the responsibilities of citizenship.

I think Mr. Richards is to be commended for establishing the G. A. Richards award, to be conferred annually on the American citizen who makes the outstanding radio speech on the subject of Americanism and the preservation of our constitutional form of government, to which principles, of course, he and his stations are dedicated. In addition to the award for the outstanding speech on Americanism, he advises us that in the future awards will be made for speeches selected by a board of judges which will be announced later, to receive second, third, fourth, and fifth recognition. Besides the plaques, the awards in the future will consist of cash prizes.

Mr. President, I know that all Members of the Senate have read the two addresses delivered by Mr. Hoover. I certainly hope that every citizen, and particularly those of school age and in our colleges will read these outstanding speeches on Americanism as Mr. Hoover sees it. I agree with what Mr. Hoover stated in them.

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY TODAY—ADDRESS BY SENATOR GREEN

[Mr. McGRATH asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address entitled "The Republican Party Today—A Reply to the Chairman of the Republican National Committee," delivered by Senator GREEN at Providence, R. I., on May 19, 1947, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY THE CHIEF JUSTICE AT PRESENTATION OF INTERNATIONAL HUMANITARIAN AWARD TO JAMES F. BYRNES

[Mr. MAYBANK asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the address delivered by the Chief Justice of the United States on the occasion of the presentation to former Secretary of State Byrnes of the Variety Club International's humanitarian award, which appears in the Appendix.]

WHAT LABOR WANTS—ARTICLE FROM THE AMERICAN LEGION MAGAZINE BY DAVE BECK

[Mr. MAGNUSON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "What Labor Wants," by Dave Beck, appearing in the American Legion Magazine for May 1947, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE WEST IN REVOLT—EDITORIAL FROM THE RALEIGH (N. C.) NEWS AND OBSERVER

[Mr. HATCH asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "The West in Revolt," published in the May 10, 1947, issue of the Raleigh (N. C.) News and Observer, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE HOUSE AND SENATE LABOR BILLS—ARTICLE BY DONALD R. RICHBERG

[Mr. HATCH asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "The House and Senate Labor Bills," by Donald R. Richberg, published in the May 15, 1947, issue of the Washington Daily News, which appears in the Appendix.]

FOOD PRICES—EDITORIAL FROM THE BOSTON POST

[Mr. LODGE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "Why Food Stays High," published in the Boston Post, which appears in the Appendix.]

JUVENILE DELINQUENCY: ITS CAUSE AND CURE—ADDRESS BY HERBERT GARRETT, JR.

[Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address entitled "Juvenile Delinquency: Its Cause and Cure," delivered by Herbert Garrett, Jr., of Woodruff, S. C., in the South Carolina speech contest of the Knights of Pythias, which appears in the Appendix.]

BOARD OF VISITORS TO THE COAST GUARD ACADEMY

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, under authority of the standing rules of the Senate, some days ago I appointed, acting as chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, two Senators as a Board of Visitors to the Coast Guard Academy at New London. Because of the pendency of the present tax bill and its importance and its interest to all Members of the Senate, the Senators designated by me find it impossible to go at the time originally contemplated. I am giving notice that by arrangement with those two Senators, they will visit the Coast Guard Academy, in their capacity as a Board of Visitors, at a later time, to be arranged.

NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION—MAGNUSON-FULBRIGHT AMENDMENT

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I desire, for the information of the Senate, to submit a brief statement regarding a matter that took place yesterday. At that time, I submitted an amendment to the bill passed yesterday by the Senate, the amendment relating to the appointment of the so-called Director of the National Science Foundation. The amendment contained a provision that the Director might be removed by the President or the Foundation.

The amendment was originally submitted in that manner, but, before its actual presentation, I went to the distinguished Senator from New Jersey and said that I was first going to attempt to submit the amendment with the words "or the Foundation" stricken from the amendment. That meant that the Director would be removable by the President. There were two copies of the amendment at the desk, one a carbon copy and the other an original, which included the three words "or the Foundation." I took the carbon copy and submitted that. That was the copy that was read by the clerk, and that was the copy obviously that today's RECORD shows was voted on by the Senate.

About 5 minutes later, while I was busy, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] asked that the amendment be read again, but I did not hear his request. Inadvertently, the clerk read the original copy, which included the words "or the Foundation." The Senator from West Virginia changed his vote upon finding those words to be in the amendment; and I am sure that but for the confusion which existed in the Senate at that time, during the vote, probably the Senator from New Jersey himself would have voted against the amendment.

I regret what happened, but I intended to submit the original amendment, omitting the three words. The amendment in that form was submitted, and that is what was voted on by the Senate. I merely wanted to make this explanation.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] has called the attention of the Senate to a situation which arose yesterday during consideration of and voting on the National Science Foundation bill. As stated by him, the vote which concerns the situation I now speak of had to do with the method of appointing the Director. The amendment as originally drawn and offered by the Senator from Washington provided that the Director could be removed by the President or the Foundation. The Senator from Washington struck out the words "or the Foundation," leaving the removal of the Director solely within the discretion and power of the President. I am informed there were two copies of the amendment at the desk, one copy not containing the deletion of the words "or the Foundation." When the amendment was read the second time and prior to the vote, through a mistake it was read containing the words "or the Foundation." The President pro tempore will recall that I changed my vote. I voted in favor of that amendment at first because I believed that when I voted it contained the power in the Foundation to remove the Director. Before the vote was announced I was advised of the change that had been made in the amendment, and I changed my vote.

I make this statement, Mr. President, because I feel that other Senators—in fact one so stated to me this morning—voted on the amendment under the misapprehension that the words "or the Foundation" were still in the amendment. I think the RECORD ought to be clear upon the subject. For that reason, I make the statement at this time.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. REVERCOMB. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Has the Senator considered a motion to reconsider first the bill, and then the vote by which the amendment was agreed to?

Mr. REVERCOMB. I have considered it, and desire to take up the question later, if it is proper to do so.

Mr. FERGUSON. Does not the rule require that a motion for reconsideration be made the following day?

Mr. REVERCOMB. That is a question about which I wish to inquire.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. FERGUSON. What is the time limit within which a motion to reconsider may be filed in the ordinary course?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion may be made today or tomorrow, under the rule.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, following up what the distinguished Senator from West Virginia has said, I should like to state that I have talked with several Members of the Senate this morning. I myself was laboring under a misapprehension as to the words in controversy yesterday. Had I known that the words "or the Foundation" were definitely out of the amendment I would have voted differently than I did. Had it not been for the fact that my vote as a sponsor of the bill was determinative of that question I would not raise the point now; but it is a fact that if I had been informed, as I should have been, I would have voted differently. I am not trying to evade any responsibility. I should have known what I was voting on. However, the fact remains that without the discretion in the Foundation I would not have voted for the amendment. Therefore, I shall move that the vote be reconsidered. I am advised that I must first move that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered and then move to reconsider the vote on this particular amendment. I ask the parliamentary question whether the motion is in order. If so, as a proponent of the bill, I am glad to make both motions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is privileged and is in order. The Senator can enter the motion and call it up later or he can pursue the subject now.

Mr. SMITH. I prefer to enter the motion now and call it up later, because I do not wish to interfere with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] in the matter which he is to present to the Senate today. I wish to enter the motion and call it up later.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will be entered.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. What is the motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is to reconsider the vote on the passage of the National Science Foundation bill for the purpose, as the Chair understands, of subsequently moving to reconsider the vote by which the so-called Magnuson-Fulbright amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LUCAS. Was not a motion made to reconsider the vote on the very amendment we are discussing, and was not a motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider agreed to? I make the inquiry whether, in connection with a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, it is in order to move to reconsider the vote on an amendment with respect to which a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is unable to answer the Senator's question until he consults the RECORD to see precisely what happened.

Mr. LUCAS. As I recall, I made a motion to reconsider the vote as the result of a division, with respect to this very amendment. Then there was a yea-and-nay vote on the amendment, and it was agreed to. I made a motion to reconsider that vote, and that motion was laid on the table. After that the bill was passed, and no motion was made to reconsider it after it was passed. I think I am correct. If so, I make a point of order against the reconsideration of any amendment with respect to which a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Senator from New Jersey is not pursuing the matter at the present time. He is merely entering the motion. The Chair wishes to consult the RECORD at first hand before passing upon the question raised by the Senator from Illinois. The Chair will do so, and rule later.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HILL. Do I correctly understand that the Senator from New Jersey has entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the National Science Foundation bill was passed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore subsequently said: The Chair is now prepared to rule on the point of order raised by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS]. The Chair has examined the RECORD, and finds that no motion to table occurred in connection with the treatment of the Magnuson-Fulbright amendment. The history of the situation is as follows:

The Magnuson-Fulbright amendment was disagreed to by the Senate on a division. The Senator from Illinois moved to reconsider the vote, which motion was agreed to by a vote of 40 to 39. The question then recurred on agreement to the amendment, and the Senate agreed to the Magnuson-Fulbright amendment by a vote of 42 to 41. That is the end of the RECORD with respect to that amendment. Therefore there was no motion to lay on the table involved in the record of the Magnuson-Fulbright amendment.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the able Presiding Officer is correct. I have consulted the RECORD. My motion to lay on the table was in connection with the vote on a division. It was not made following the yea-and-nay vote. The Chair is quite correct.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McFARLAND. How many times can the Senate reconsider a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Only once.

Mr. McFARLAND. Has not this question been reconsidered once?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not this amendment.

Mr. McFARLAND. As I understand, the amendment was reconsidered. It was lost on a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote which was reconsidered was the vote by which the amendment was rejected. The vote by which the amendment was agreed to has never been reconsidered.

REDUCTION OF INDIVIDUAL INCOME TAX PAYMENTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce individual income tax payments.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point the bill, House bill 1, showing the Senate committee amendments, followed by the report of the Senate Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the bill and report (No. 173) were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Individual Income Tax Reduction Act of 1947."

SEC. 2. Reduction in normal tax and surtax on individuals.

(a) Reduction in normal tax on individuals: Section 11 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to the normal tax on individuals) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 11. Normal tax on individuals.

"There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every individual a normal tax determined by computing a tentative normal tax of 3 percent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits against net income provided in section 25, and by reducing such tentative normal tax as provided in section 12 (g). For alternative tax which may be elected if adjusted gross income is less than $5,000, see Supplement T."

(b) Reduction in surtax on individuals: Section 12 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to the rate of surtax on individuals) is hereby amended by striking out "by 5 percent thereof" and inserting in lieu thereof "as provided in subsection (g) of this section."

(c) Reduction of tentative normal tax and tentative surtax: Section 12 (g) of the Internal Revenue Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(g) Reduction of tentative normal tax and tentative surtax.—

"(1) In the case of taxable years beginning after December 31, 1947, the combined normal tax and surtax under section 11 and subsection (b) of this section shall be the aggregate of the tentative normal tax and tentative surtax, reduced as follows:

If the aggregate is:	The reduction shall be:
Not over $200	33⅓ percent of the aggregate.
Over $200 but not over $279.17.	$67.
Over $279.17 but not over $50,000.	24 percent of the aggregate.
Over $50,000 but not over $250,000.	$12,000, plus 19¼ per cent of excess over $50,000.
Over $250,000	$50,500, plus 15 percent of excess over $250,000.

In no event shall the combined normal tax and surtax exceed 76½ percent of the net income of the taxpayer for the taxable year.

"(2) In the case of taxable years beginning in 1947, the combined normal tax and surtax under section 11 and subsection (b) of this section shall be the aggregate of the tentative normal tax and tentative surtax, reduced as follows:

If the aggregate is:	The reduction shall be:
Not over $200	19¼ percent of the aggregate.
Over $200 but not over $265.52.	$38.50.
Over $265.52 but not over $50,000.	14½ percent of the aggregate.
Over $50,000 but not over $250,000.	$7,250 plus 12 percent of excess over $50,000.
Over $250,000	$31,250 plus 10 percent of excess over $250,000.

In no event shall the combined normal tax and surtax exceed 81 percent of the net income of the taxpayer for the taxable year.

"(3) Whenever it is necessary to ascertain the normal tax and the surtax separately, the surtax shall be an amount which is the same proportion of the combined normal tax and surtax as the tentative surtax is of the aggegate of the tentative normal tax and tentative surtax; and the normal tax shall be the remainder of such combined normal tax and surtax.

"(4) In the application of this subsection, the combined normal tax and surtax shall be computed without regard to the credits provided in sections 31, 32, and 35."

(d) Taxable years to which applicable: The amendments made by this section shall be applicable with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1946. For treatment of taxable years beginning in 1946 and ending in 1947, or beginning in 1947 and ending in 1948, see section 6.

SEC. 3. Individuals with adjusted gross incomes of less than $5,000.

(a) In general: Section 400 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to optional tax on individuals with adjusted gross incomes of less than $5,000) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 400. Imposition of tax.

"In lieu of the taxes imposed by sections 11 and 12, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of each individual whose adjusted gross income for such year is less than $5,000, and who has elected to pay the tax imposed by this supplement for such year, a tax as follows:

(b) Taxable years to which applicable: The amendment made by this section shall be applicable with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1946. For treatment of taxable years beginning in 1946 and ending in 1947, or beginning in 1947 and ending in 1948, see section 6.

SEC. 4. Additional credit against net income for normal tax and surtax.

(a) Exemption for age: Section 25 (b) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to credits against net income for normal tax and surtax) is hereby amended by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (C) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and by adding after subparagraph (C) the following:

"(D) an additional exemption of $500 for the taxpayer if he has attained the age of 65 on or before the last day of his taxable year;

"(E) an additional exemption of $500 for the spouse of the taxpayer if—

"(i) a joint return is made by the taxpayer and his spouse under section 51 and the spouse has attained the age of 65 on or before such last day, in which case the aggregate exemption of the spouses under subparagraph (D) and this subparagraph shall not exceed $500 with respect to each spouse who has attained the age of 65 on or before such last day; or

"(ii) a separate return is made by the taxpayer, and his spouse has attained the age of 65 on or before such last day and has no gross income for the calendar year in which the taxable year of the taxpayer begins and is not the dependent of another taxpayer."

(b) Technical amendments.—

(1) Section 58 (a) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to requirement of declaration of estimated tax) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(1) His gross income from wages (as defined in section 1621) can reasonably be expected to exceed the sum of $4,500, plus $500 with respect to each exemption provided in section 25 (b); or"

(2) Section 1622 (h) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to withholding exemptions) is hereby amended by striking out subparagraphs (A) and (B) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(A) An exemption for himself, and an additional exemption for himself if he has attained the age of 65 or will attain such age before the expiration of the taxable year under chapter 1 in respect of which amounts deducted and withheld under this subchapter in the calendar year in which such day falls are allowed as a credit.

"(B) If the employee is married, any exemption to which his spouse is entitled under subparagraph (A), but only if such spouse does not have in effect a withholding exemption certificate claiming such exemption."

(3) In the case of an individual entitled to an additional withholding exemption under section 1622 (h) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code by reason of the amendment made thereto by paragraph (2) of this subsection, the term "status determination date" as used in section 1622 (h) (3) (B) of such Code includes also the ninetieth day after the date of the enactment of this act.

(4) Section 23 (x) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to deduction of medical, etc., expenses) is hereby amended by striking out the second and third sentences thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "The maximum deduction for the taxable year shall be $1,250, except that if more than one exemption is allowed under section 25 (b) for the taxable year (exclusive of an exemption under section 25 (b) (1) (D)) the maximum deduction for the taxable year shall be $2,500."

(c) Taxable years to which applicable: The amendments made by this section shall be applicable with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1946. For treatment of taxable years beginning in 1946 and ending in 1947, see section 6.

SEC. 5. Reduction in withholding of tax at source on wages.

(a) Percentage method: Section 1622 (a) and section 1622 (b) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to percentage method of withholding) are hereby amended to read as follows:

"(a) Requirement of Withholding.—Every employer making payment of wages shall deduct and withhold upon such wages a tax equal to the sum of the following:

"(1) 12 percent of whichever of the following is the lesser:

"(A) the amount by which the wages exceed the number of withholding exemptions claimed, multiplied by the amount of one such exemption as shown in the table in subsection (b) (1); or

"(B) the amount shown in the second column in the table in subsection (b) (1);

"(2) 18 percent of whichever of the following is the lesser:

"(A) the amount by which the wages exceed the sum of—

"(i) the number of withholding exemptions claimed, multiplied by the amount of one such exemption as shown in the table in subsection (b) (1); plus

"(ii) the amount shown in the second column in the table in subsection (b) (1); or

"(B) the amount shown in the third column in the table in subsection (b) (1);

"(3) 14 percent of the amount by which the wages exceed the sum of—

"(A) the number of withholding exemptions claimed, multiplied by the amount of one such exemption as shown in the table in subsection (b) (1); plus

"(B) the sum of the amounts shown in the second and third columns in the table in subsection (b) (1).

"(b) (1) The table referred to in subsection (a) is as follows:

"Percentage method withholding table

"Pay-roll period	1 Amount of one withholding exemption	2 Maximum amount subject to 12 percent rate	3 Maximum amount subject to 18 percent rate

SEC. 6. Fiscal year taxpayers.

Section 108 of the Internal Revenue Code is hereby amended by striking out "(d)" at the beginning of subsection (d) and inserting in lieu thereof "(f)", and by inserting after subsection (c) the following:

"(d) Taxable years of individuals beginning in 1946 and ending in 1947: In the case of a taxable year of an individual beginning in 1946 and ending in 1947, the tax imposed by sections 11, 12, and 400 shall be an amount equal to the sum of—

"(1) that portion of a tentative tax, computed as if the law applicable to taxable years beginning on January 1, 1946, were applicable to such taxable year, which the number of days in such taxable year prior to January 1, 1947, bears to the total number of days in such taxable year, plus

"(2) that portion of a tentative tax, computed as if the law applicable to such taxable years beginning on January 1, 1947, were applicable to such taxable year, which the number of days in such taxable year after December 31, 1946, bears to the total number of days in such taxable year.

"(e) Taxable years of individuals beginning in 1947 and ending in 1948: In the case of a taxable year of an individual beginning in 1947 and ending in 1948, the tax imposed by sections 11, 12, and 400 shall be an amount equal to the sum of—

"(1) that portion of a tentative tax, computed as if the law applicable to taxable years beginning on January 1, 1947, were applicable to such taxable year, which the number of days in such taxable year prior to January 1, 1948, bears to the total number of days in such taxable year, plus

"(2) that portion of a tentative tax, computed as if the law applicable to taxable years beginning on January 1, 1948, were applicable to such taxable year, which the number of days in such taxable year after December 31, 1947, bears to the total number of days in such taxable year."

REPORT NO. 173

The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce individual income-tax payments, having had the same under consideration, report favorably thereon, with amendments, and, as amended, recommend that the bill do pass.

I. GENERAL STATEMENT

This bill provides an immediate reduction in individual income taxes. The heavy rates now in effect constitute a serious restriction on consumer expenditures, retard new investment, and inhibit managerial initiative. A general reduction of these rates at the present time would contribute to the maintenance of the existing high levels of employment and output.

The amount of tax reduction possible at this time is limited by the present high level of expenditures and by the need for a reduction in the Federal debt of $258,000,000,000. With the Senate expenditure ceiling of $33,000,000,000 for the fiscal year 1948, and estimated receipts of $41,400,000,000, $8,400,000,000 will be available for tax reduction and debt retirement. The tax reduction recommended by your committee amounts to $3,200,000,000 in the fiscal year 1948, leaving $5,200,000,000 for debt retirement and contingencies.

H. R. 1 as it passed the House provided a reduction which, with income payments of $170,000,000,000, would amount to $4,900,000,000 in the fiscal year 1948. Your committee believes that a more conservative reduction should be made at this time. For that reason the bill as amended by your committee provides that only approximately one-half the eventual reduction will be made for the calendar year 1947. The full reduction will be effective in 1948.

All income taxpayers will receive relief under this bill. The largest percentage reduction will be received by taxpayers having incomes of $1,000 or less, and the smallest relief will be received by persons with incomes of $302,000 or more. A special exemption of $500 is given to persons 65 and over who as a group have suffered with unusual severity as a result of the rise in the cost of living and the changes in the tax system since the beginning of the war.

II. SUMMARY OF CHANGES IN EXISTING LAW

A comparison of the effective individual income-tax rates under present law, under H. R. 1 as it passed the House, and under H. R. 1 as amended by your committee is shown in table I. The rates proposed by your committee are shown both for the calendar year 1947 and for the calendar year 1948 and subsequent years.

Table II shows in summary fashion the reductions in taxes under the bill as passed by the House and as amended by your committee.

The changes in existing individual income-tax law provided by H. R. 1 as amended by your committee are listed below. A somewhat more detailed description can be found in part VI of this report.

A. The present tax burdens of individuals are reduced as shown below. The great mass of wage earners will experience the benefit of the full reduction during the whole of the second half of the calendar year 1947, since under your committee bill withholding from wages at rates reflecting the full reduction starts on July 1, 1947. The committee bill will thus obviate the necesssity for making refunds on that part of the 1947 tax which was collected or will be collected during the first 6 months of the calendar year 1947. However, since it is impracticable to split an income-tax year, the reductions actually computed under the bill for the full calendar year 1947 are approximately one-half those of subsequent years.

1. The tax on surtax net incomes of $1,000 or less is reduced in the calendar year 1947 by 15 percent and in the calendar year 1948 by 30 percent. The reduction provided by the House amounted to 30 percent for both 1947 and 1948.

2. The tax on surtax net incomes of $1,000 to about $1,400 is reduced for the calendar year 1947 by an amount varying from 15 percent to 10 percent and for the calendar year 1948 by an amount varying from 30 percent to 20 percent. The reduction provided by the House varied from 30 percent to 20 percent for both 1947 and 1948.

3. The tax on surtax net incomes of about $1,400 to about $80,000 is reduced for the calendar year 1947 by 10 percent and for the calendar year 1948 by 20 percent. The reduction provided by the House amounted to 20 percent for both 1947 and 1948.

4. The tax on surtax net incomes of about $80,000 to about $302,000 is reduced for the calendar year 1947 by 10 percent on approximately the first $80,000 for surtax net income and by about 7.5 percent on the remainder; for the calendar year 1948 by 20 percent on approximately the first $80,000 of surtax net income and by 15 percent on the remainder. The reduction provided by the House amounted to 20 percent for both 1947 and 1948, the same reduction as that provided for persons with incomes between $1,400 and $80,000.

5. The tax on surtax net incomes of about $302,000 and over is reduced for the calendar year 1947 by 10 percent on approximately the first $80,000 of surtax net income, by about 7.5 percent on approximately the next $223,000 of surtax net income, and by about 5.25 percent on the remainder; for the calendar year 1948 by 20 percent on approximately the first $80,000 of surtax net income, by 15 percent on approximately the next $223,000 of surtax net income, and by about 10.5 percent on the remainder. The reduction provided by the House for both 1947 and 1948 amounted to 20 percent on about the first $302,000 of surtax net income and about 10.5 percent on the remainder.

B. Persons of 65 or over are given an additional exemption of $500 beginning in 1947. The House bill provided a similar exemption for taxpayers 65 and over but required individuals who qualified for it to include in their gross income the first $500 of any pensions, annuities, or officers' retirement pay which otherwise would not have been subject to tax under existing law. The latter requirement was omitted from the Senate bill.

III. THE FISCAL OUTLOOK FOR THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT IN 1947 AND 1948

1. Fiscal year 1947

The fiscal outlook of the Federal Government for the year ending June 30, 1947, has undergone considerable change since the President submitted his budget message on January 3. That message contained a forecast of receipts for the fiscal year 1947 of $40,230,000,000, expenditures of $42,523,000,000, and a deficit of $2,293,000,000. However, subsequent collection and expenditure experience made it clear that in the budget message revenues had been underestimated and expenditures overestimated. This was confirmed by the President in a press release on April 19, 1947, containing the prediction that there would be a surplus of $1,250,000,000. In going from a deficit of $2,293,000,000 to a surplus of $1,250,000,000, the President revised his revenue estimates upward by $2,270,000,000 to $42,500,000,000 and his expenditures downward by $1,273,000,000 to $41,250,000,000. The committee requested the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation to make an independent estimate of collections in the fiscal year 1947. The results indicated that even the revised Treasury estimate of receipts is probably about $1,000,000,000 too low and that the surplus for the fiscal year 1947 is likely to be about $2,300,000,000.

The surplus in 1947 is significant for at least two reasons. First, it has been argued that tax reduction should be postponed until it is possible to balance the budget and make some payment on the debt. The estimated surplus for 1947 indicates that these conditions will be met even before the fiscal year 1948 begins.

Second, the conditions which produced the high level of receipts for fiscal 1947 will favorably affect collections in the fiscal year 1948. The administration has indicated that a record high level of income payments in the latter part of the calendar year 1946 and forepart of calendar 1947 was a major reason for the unanticipated increase in receipts in the fiscal year 1947. Since a substantial portion of the receipts from the individual income tax and a still larger portion of those from the corporate income tax for any given year are based on the tax liabilities of the prior year, it is clear that even if income levels in the fiscal year 1948 are no higher than estimated by the Treasury, receipts in the fiscal year 1948 are certain to be above the Treasury's estimate as submitted in the budget message. That estimate was based upon the assumption that income payments for the calendar year 1947 were $166,000,000,000. As a matter of fact the official estimate of income payments for the first quarter of the calendar year 1947 is $176,900,000,000. This does not take into account the wage adjustments which are now being made. It therefore appears unlikely that the April, May, and June levels will be much lower. Hence the Treasury forecast of $166,000,000,000 for the calendar year 1947 appears to be considerably too low.

This bill as amended will have no significant effect on tax collections in the fiscal year 1947.

2. Fiscal year 1948

Table III shows the effects of H. R. 1 as passed by the House and as amended by your committee upon the budget of the Federal Government in the fiscal year 1948, under two different assumptions concerning income payments:

For purposes of the legislative budget the Senate expenditure ceiling for the fiscal year 1948 is $33,000,000,000. With income payments at $170,000,000,000, receipts under present law are estimated at $41,400,000,000. This leaves a surplus of $8,400,000,000. With income payments of $170,000,000,000, H. R. 1 as amended by your committee will reduce revenues by $3,200,000,000, leaving $5,200,000,000 for debt retirement and contingencies. H. R. 1 as passed by the House would leave $3,500,000,000 for these purposes.

With the expenditure ceiling of $33,000,000,000 fixed by the Senate, substantial debt retirement and the tax reduction provided by your committee would be possible even if income payments in the fiscal year 1948 should be as low as $165,000,000,000. At this level of income payments, receipts under present law would be $40,300,000,000. The loss under H. R. 1 as amended would be $3,100,000,000, leaving $4,200,000,000 for debt retirement and contingencies. On this same basis H. R. 1 as it passed the House would leave $2,500,000,000 for these purposes.

By unanimous action the Senate has endorsed a debt reduction of $2,600,000,000 for the fiscal year 1948. Your committee believes that H. R. 1 as amended will give more adequate assurance that the debt reduction of $2,600,000,000 will be realized. The bill is fashioned to meet the Senate view on debt and expenditure reduction.

Your committee believes that the estimate of the receipts for the fiscal year 1948 should be based upon a level of income payments of $170,000,000,000. This represents a decrease of about $7,000,000,000 from the current level. The estimate of $170,000,000,000 represents a conservative position. Allowances are made for some downturn in business, moderate price reductions, and some reduction in employment.

This forecast of $170,000,000,000 for income payments in the fiscal year 1948 can be compared with an estimate of $168,000,000,000 used by the Treasury Department in the preparation of its revenue estimates for this year. However, there is a great difference between your committee's judgment of what $170,000,000,000 would mean in terms of business conditions and the Treasury's interpretation of its $168,000,000,000 figure. The Treasury believes the latter represents full employment in an absolute sense. This is indicated by the Secretary's statement that there will be no room for expansion in the volume of output of goods and services during the fiscal year 1948.

As noted above, income payments during the first quarter of the calendar year 1947 were $176,900,000,000. When confronted with the question as to why a continuance of the present levels of employment and output would not produce income payments in the fiscal year 1948 of at least $176,000,000,000, the Secretary replied that price reductions were anticipated. This reduction in selling prices, combined with the Secretary's assumption that no expansion in volume of output was possible, enabled him to conclude that a level of income payments of $168,000,000,000 was consistent with a forecast of full employment and maximum production.

Other statements inserted in the testimony of Dr. Haas, Director of the Division of Research and Statistics of the Treasury Department, imply that the price cuts which the Secretary has in mind will take place before the end of the present fiscal year. On page 58 of the hearings the following statement appears:

"The income level in June 1948 was assumed to reach an annual rate of $169,000,000,000, rising gradually through the fiscal year."

If income payments are to reach an annual rate in June 1948 of $169,000,000,000, and average $168,000,000,000 for the period July 1947 to June 1948, and "rise gradually" during this same period, it is inevitable that the level in July 1947 must be $167,000,000,000. This means that the level of income payments must drop by about $10,000,000,000 between May 1947 and July 1947. The Secretary's testimony indicates that this will take place as a result of price cuts and that there will be no untoward repercussions in employment or the volume of business activity.[1]

In the opinion of your committee the Secretary's forecast has certain weaknesses. The economy is not as fully employed as the Secretary seems to believe. Unemployment as reported by the Department of Commerce is running now at about 2,400,000 persons. This compares with 650,000 persons during the autumn of 1944, when it can reasonably be said that the economy was fully employed in a fairly absolute sense. Moreover, since the fall of 1944, the average weekly hours of workers in manufacturing industry have dropped from 45 to 40. In the opinion of your committee there is more room for expansion in the volume of output than the Secretary seems to believe.

The Secretary's assumption that substantial cuts in prices will take place in the immediate future is open to question on several grounds. First the price-cut program is a voluntary one which to date at least has not been generally accepted. Therefore its future effectiveness certainly is not assured. Second, the Secretary seems to believe that the price-cutting program can be realized in spite of the wage increases which are now being made. The validity of this assumption is by no means obvious. Third, the Secretary's belief that a general price reduction can occur without raising the level of production is based on what your committee considers an unsound premise; namely, that we have reached an absolute maximum volume of output. Fourth, if general price reduction should be accomplished without increasing the volume of output, it appears likely that the additional funds in the hands of the consumers, would result in prices being bid up again. The committee is unwilling to rely exclusively on price cutting in trying to prevent deflation.

If your committee believed it advisable to base its estimates for the fiscal year 1948 on the continuance of the present levels of employment and output, as the Secretary of the [1] Your committee has difficulty reconciling the Secretary's opinion that this price adjustment can take place without a recession with certain other implications of his testimony. The Secretary forecast a level of income payments of $166,000,000,000 for the calendar year 1947. Income payments during the first quarter of this calendar year were about $177,000,000,000 at an annual rate. Therefore the remaining three quarters must average $162,000,000,000. Dr. Haas' statement cited above implies that the income payments during the last half of this calendar year must average between $167,000,000,000 and $168,000,000,000. This leaves only the second quarter of the year unaccounted for. To arrive at the average of $166,000,000,000 for the full year, it is necessary to have an average level of income payments during the second quarter of about $153,000,000,000. Since the quarter will begin at a level around $177,000,000,000, an average for the quarter of $153,000,000,000 requires a low point during the quarter of between $120,000,000,000 and $130,000,000,000. The drop from $177,000,000,000 to $120,000,000,000, or $130,000,000,000 within the space of 1 or 2 months is clearly inconsistent with the Secretary's notion that the only readjustment called for is in selling prices.

Treasury has done, it would forecast income payment estimates for the fiscal year 1948 of between $175,000,000,000 and $180,000,000,000.

IV. SUMMARY OF ESTIMATED REVENUE EFFECT OF TAX REDUCTION

With an income payment level of $170,000,000,000, individual income tax liabilities under your committee's bill are estimated at about $13,700,000,000 on the basis of the full-rate reduction, or $15,600,000,000 with half of the full-rate reduction.[2] The "half" reduction is effective for calendar year 1947 and the "full" reduction for 1948 and subsequent calendar years. This represents a liability reduction from present law of about $2,100,000,000 in the case of the "half" reduction and $4,000,000,000 with the "full" reduction.[3] On the basis of income payments of $170,000,000,000, H. R. 1 as it passed the House would reduce the liabilities under present law by about $4,000,000,000. Table IV shows the changes in liabilities resulting from the House and Finance Committee bills with income payments of $170,000,000,000 and $165,000,000,000. Tables showing the distribution of liabilities among different income groups are shown in part VII of this report.

[3] About one-half of the rate reduction and all of the increase in exemptions is made effective in the calendar year 1947.

[4] The full reduction in rates is effective in calendar year 1948 and subsequent years. This reduction is somewhat smaller than that provided under H. R. 1 as passed by the House, but when the data are rounded the differences disappear.

The proposed tax reduction expressed on a liability basis indicates the decrease in the obligations incurred by taxpayers during the year. The reduction expressed on a collection basis indicates the actual loss in the receipts of the Government during that year. The former is useful in illustrating the ultimate effect of the reduction. The latter is necessary to determine the immediate effect of the reduction on the Federal Budget.

Table V presents the effects of the tax reduction proposed by the House and by your committee on a collection basis for the fiscal year 1948 under different assumptions of income payments. For the purposes of this report it is assumed that the level of income payments in the first half of the calendar year 1947 will be $176,000,000,000, and in the fiscal year 1948, $170,000,000,000. On this basis, it is estimated that your committee's bill will reduce collections in the fiscal year 1948 by $3,200,000,000. The bill as passed by the House would reduce collections (or increase refunds) by $4,900,000,000.

$176	$170	4.9	3.2	1.7

Source: Staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation

The chief reason for the greater reduction in collections (or increase in refunds) under the House bill is the fact that it makes the full reduction effective for the entire calendar year 1947. Your committee's bill has approximately the same effect as providing the reduction for only the last half of the calendar year 1947.

With minor exceptions, the collections made in the fiscal year 1948 are composed of part of the liabilities incurred in the fiscal year 1947, and part of the liabilities incurred in the fiscal year 1948. Similarly, part of the reduction in the fiscal year 1947 liabilities, and part of the reduction in the fiscal year 1948 liabilities, are reflected in lower collections in the fiscal year 1948. On the other hand, part of the reduction in liability in the fiscal year 1947 is reflected in lower collections in the fiscal year 1947, and part of the reduction in the fiscal year 1948 liabilities is reflected in lower collections in the fiscal year 1949.

The estimates presented above do not take into consideration the stimulating effect which this bill will have upon the economy. As a result, it appears likely that the revenue losses involved have been overstated.

V. GENERAL DISCUSSION OF RECOMMENDED INDIVIDUAL INCOME-TAX REDUCTIONS

1. Why a tax reduction is needed now

Much of the discussion in your committee's hearings was concerned with the problem of whether a tax reduction is appropriate at the present time. This discussion was concerned with the economic effects of a tax reduction and its implications with respect to debt retirement.

A tax reduction at the present time should appear particularly desirable to those who hold the view that a down-turn in business conditions is likely during the fiscal year 1948.

There is a good deal of uncertainty among those holding this view as to whether the downturn will begin shortly or whether some time will elapse before the turning point is reached. In any case a tax reduction will be a hedge against recession and cumulative deflation, and should be enacted now. A tax reduction cannot become fully effective until some time after the legislation is enacted. In the hearings before the House Ways and Means Committee, the Secretary of the Treasury suggested that it takes 12 months for the full economic effects of a tax reduction to be realized. It should be noted that this lag in the economic effectiveness of a tax reduction means that even if inflationary factors, due to temporary shortages of materials and manpower, should continue to be important in the next few months, they would not be aggravated by a tax reduction now.

Moreover, those who predict some recession should keep in mind that Congress might not be in session if the downturn in business conditions occurred or action by Congress might of necessity be delayed. This, combined with the lag in the economic effectiveness of a tax reduction, suggests that its postponement might well mean that no counteractive tax measures could be taken until a drastic deflation was well under way.

It is argued by some that no matter how large the surplus in the fiscal year 1948 turns out to be, all of it should be used for debt-retirement purposes. Your committee attempted vainly to obtain an expression of opinion from the Secretary of the Treasury on this issue. While debt retirement is highly desirable from the point of view of maintaining the credit status of the Government, it must not be forgotten that one short-run effect of this action is to reduce consumer purchasing power. When the economy appears to be in danger of receding from a high level of operation, a very large debt retirement carried out during a short period of time may well be a major factor in precipitating a recession. For this reason it appears desirable to make a contribution to the credit status of the Government by carrying out a substantial amount of debt retirement in the fiscal year 1948, and also to provide against a recession in business conditions by a concurrent tax reduction. The latter will not only offset the loss of consumer purchasing power inherent in the debt-retirement process, but also stimulate the investment and managerial efforts of the business community which are essential to the continuance of the present levels of production and employment.

2. Why the reduction should be made in the industrial income tax

Your committee agrees with the House Ways and Means Committee that it is desirable to concentrate any reduction which can be made at this time in the individual income tax. Only through the individual income tax is it possible to give relief to all persons bearing heavy tax burdens.

Furthermore, a reduction in the individual income tax is the only way in which a reduction can be made in a single tax which will both increase consumer purchasing power and stimulate investment and managerial initiative.

3. Why the type of reduction provided in this bill was selected

The reduction in the individual income tax should be made in a fashion which is economically desirable. It should be effective in increasing purchasing power and stimulating venture capital and managerial initiative.

The additional income placed in the hands of the consumers by this bill will act as a check on any recession that may be forecast for the fiscal year 1948, and will tend to offset the reduction in consumer purchasing power which is involved in the debt-retirement operation. The importance of the effect of this bill on consumer purchasing power is shown in table VI, which indicates that 64 percent of the reduction will be given to persons with incomes of $5,000 or less, the primary source of consumer purchasing power.

[3] Although the rate reduction is halved in 1947, the additional exemption is not. Thus the reduction in liabilities in 1948 is not quite twice the reduction in 1947.

Your committee also is impressed with the long-run need for a stimulus to investment and managerial initiative. The extent of the stimulus provided by H. R. 1 as amended can best be seen by examining the proposed reduction in marginal tax rates; i. e., the rates on the top dollar of income received. In deciding whether or not to make a new investment or to take on added managerial responsibilities, it is these marginal rates with which the investor or manager will be concerned. They determine the additional tax he will have to pay on any additional income which he receives.

Table VII shows that the marginal tax rates are substantially lower under the bill than under existing law. For example, in 1948 an individual already having surtax net income of $18,000 will be taxed at 40 percent on additional income under the bill, rather than 50 percent as under present law. It is believed that this will make him less hesitant in assuming the risks of new investment. Similarly, an individual with a surtax net income of $100,000 will be more likely to make an investment if the additional return is taxed at 72 percent rather than at the 85 percent provided by existing law. It is believed that the reduced marginal rates also will have the effect of encouraging business managers to take on added responsibilities and work harder to make their businesses a success.

The amount of spendable income remaining after paying taxes is another measure of the effect of taxes on investment and managerial incentives. Table XI in part VII shows the spendable income left after taxes at various levels and the percent this is of income before taxes under both present law and your committee's bill. For example, a single individual with a net income of $20,000 under present law retains about 67 percent of this income after paying taxes, and in 1948 under your committee's bill about 73 percent. A single individual with a net income of $70,000 under present law has about 43 percent of his income left after paying his taxes, and in 1948 under your committee's bill 55 percent. The small percentage of net income left after taxes under existing law so reduces the advantage of making risky new investments or exercising managerial initiative as to serve as a strong deterrent to the maintenance of a high level of business activity. Under your committee's bill the taxpayer retains a larger portion of his income after taxes. This constitutes the first major step toward the removal of the deterrents to investment and initiative in present law.

[5] The exact breaking point in surtax net income under both the House bill and the bill as amended by your committee is $302,395.60.

[6] It should be borne in mind that the tax is subject to a ceiling of 81.5 percent of surtax net income under existing law, 76.5 percent under the House bill and under the Finance Committee's bill in 1948 and subsequent years, and 81 percent in 1947 under the Finance Committee bill.

The need for stimulating managerial incentives and the investment of venture capital is a major reason for the proposed reduction in the taxes of individuals in the middle and upper brackets. The decisions of the executives who receive relative large salaries are of greatest importance with reference to the development of industrial production. The savings of the middle and upper-bracket-income recipients are the principal sources of the venture capital for business expansion.

A study by the Bureau of Labor Statistics for the year 1941 [4] brings out the fact that the great bulk of the relatively speculative business investments are made by individuals with incomes of $10,000 and over. Individuals with such incomes accounted for no less than 89 percent of the investments in stocks, bonds, and unincorporated business made by the entire group covered in the study. Persons with smaller incomes not only save relatively little,[5] but are apt to keep what they do save in cash, Government bonds, insurance policies, savings accounts, etc. They cannot afford to assume the additional risks which speculative investments entail.

[4] U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics bulletin No. 822, Family Spending and Saving in Wartime.

[5] The BLS study indicated that 74 percent of the total saving was done by persons with incomes of $10,000 and over.

4. Why the full reduction was not allowed for the calendar year 1947

H. R. 1 as it passed the House provided for a retroactive tax reduction effective January 1, 1947. Your committee has amended the bill in a manner which roughly has the same effect as making the reduction on July 1, 1947. Stated more accurately your committee amended the bill to provide a reduction for the entire calendar year 1947 which is one-half as large as the reduction provided for the calendar year 1948. It is provided that the withholding tables set up in the House version of this bill shall go into effect July 1, 1947.

The principal reason for this amendment to the House bill is that it reduces the budgetary effect of H. R. 1 in the fiscal year 1948. Under the House version of the bill the revenue loss, in the form of reduced collections and increased refunds, would amount to $4,900,000,000 with income payments at $170,000,000,000. Under the bill as amended by your committee, the reduction for the fiscal year 1948 with the same income payments, will amount to $3,200,000,000.

This amendment will also eliminate the necessity for most of the tax refunds which would have occurred in the fiscal year 1948 as a result of the enactment of the House bill. A reduction which is retroactive to January 1, 1947, results in an overpayment of the tax due during the time intervening between January 1 and the date when the new withholding tables used in collecting the tax go into effect. It has been estimated that the resulting additional refunds would amount to $450,000,000. The method of reduction recommended by your committee would practically eliminate such refunds.

The stimulus to business which this bill brings results from the additional incentive to managerial initiative and the investment of venture capital. This stimulus consists primarily of the knowledge that from now on the net return allowed on a successful venture and the net reward paid for outstanding managerial achievement is going to be substantially greater than in the past. While the refunds provided by the retroactive feature are considerable, they occur only once and hence offer no continuing stimulus to plans for future investment or managerial action.

5. Why an exemption is needed for persons aged 65 and over

Your committee's bill introduces an additional exemption of $500 for each person who attained the age of 65 before the end of the taxable year. The exemption will benefit 3,700,000 taxpayers and will remove 1,400,000 persons from the rolls. The heavy concentration of small incomes among such persons reflects the fact that as a group they are handicapped in an economic if not in a physical sense. They have suffered with unusual severity as a result of the 54-percent rise in the cost of living and the changes in the tax system which have occurred since the beginning of the war. Unlike younger persons, the bulk of those who have attained the age of 65 were unable to compensate for price and tax changes during recent years by accepting full-time jobs at prevailing high rates of wages. For these reasons your committee believes that special relief is warranted at this time for persons who have attained the age of 65.

At the hearings on this bill the Secretary of the Treasury did not oppose the giving of special relief to persons aged 65 or over but argued that the appropriate method of doing so would be action under the Social Security Act. It is worth noting that the coverage of the social-security legislation is by no means universal. Relief under it would not extend to a great number of the people over 65 who now find themselves in an unusually straitened condition.

The Treasury has taken exception to the special exemption for persons aged 65 or over on the ground that it constitutes class legislation. It is difficult to see how the Treasury can take this view after having indicated it is studying the following types of class legislation: individual income tax exemptions, the treatment of family incomes, the taxation of pensions and annuities, the earned income credit, the special taxation of capital gains and losses, the taxation of small business, the double taxation of dividends, the taxation of American corporations doing business abroad, the taxation of cooperatives and other tax-exempt organizations, the 2-percent tax on consolidated returns, and the 85-percent credit for intercorporate dividends received.

The $500 exemption for all persons in this age group appears to be a more appropriate method of bringing relief than an extension of the system of exclusions for the benefit of particular types of income used under existing law. Certain persons who have attained the age of 65 are already benefiting by these exclusions. For instance, the annuities under the Railroad Retirement Act and the pay of Army and Navy officers retired by reason of medical survey have been excluded from gross income in full by statutory enactment. Benefits under the old-age and survivors' insurance system or the Social Security Act have been excluded by a Treasury decision. The presence of exclusions of this type has brought an insistent demand for the extension of similar treatment to other types of retirement income, such as the pensions and annuities received by former employees of State and local governments, retired school teachers, and beneficiaries under the civil-service retirement fund of the Federal Government. Your committee recognizes that existing exclusions work a discrimination against persons having attained the age of 65 who are receiving other types of income, but, believes that a general exemption of $500 for all taxpayers in this group is preferable to the piecemeal extension of exclusions for the benefit of particular types of income.

H. R. 1 as passed by the House contained a provision which in effect was intended to keep persons receiving more than $500 of certain types of excludable income from obtaining the benefits of the new $500 exemption. The House bill required a taxpayer who qualified for the new $500 exemption to include in his gross income an amount up to $500 received during the taxable year from certain pensions, annuities, or retirement pay which, but for this bill, would have been excluded in full from gross income. Your committee is in complete accord with the general objective of this provision.

However, due to the difficulty of determining the types of exempt income covered by this provision and the administrative difficulties raised by the Treasury, it was deemed advisable to defer action on this problem to a later bill. The committee is of the opinion that some remedy for the discrimination now existing between recipients of various types of retirement income must be found, and will consider this matter fully in connection with the next general revenue bill. The allowance of the additional $500 exemption for persons over 65 may well constitute a sufficient basis for removing the exclusions provided under existing law and Treasury rulings.

H. R. 1, as it passed the House, provided that the special exemption for persons aged 65 or over was to be allowed only with respect to persons whose gross income was $500 or more. This feature of the House bill involves substantial inequity. This can be shown most clearly by comparing two couples where both husband and wife are over 65 but where one wife has gross income in excess of $500 while the other wife's income is slightly less than $500. The House bill would bring the first couple an extra ememption of $1,000, the second couple one of $500. This would occur, even though the joint incomes of the two couples were the same.

To eliminate this inequity your committee has amended the House bill so as to allow the $500 deduction with respect to all persons 65 years of age or more regardless of the amount of their gross income.

VI. CHANGES IN EXISTING LAW

Table VII compares the reduction in tentative tax and in actual tax payable under present law with that under H. R. 1 as amended by your committee. The changes in present individual income-tax law provided under H. R. 1 are discussed below.

1. A reduction in 1947 of 15 percent and in 1948 of 30 percent of the tax for individuals with surtax net income of $1,000 or less

Under the bill the combined tentative normal tax and surtax of individuals having a tentative tax of $200 or less is reduced by 19.25 percent for the calendar year 1947, and 33.5 percent for the calendar year 1948 and subsequent years. These reductions are in lieu of the 5-percent reduction provided by present law. They, in effect, reduce the tax burden for individuals with $1,000 of surtax net income or less by 15 percent in 1947, and by 30 percent in 1948. The tax on $1,000 of surtax net income under the bill would be $161.50 in 1947 and $133 in 1948 and subsequent years, in place of the present tax of $190. Thus the maximum reduction for any individual as a result of the 15-percent cut in 1947 is $28.50, and in the case of the 30-percent cut in 1948 and subsequent years, $57.

For example, a single person with no dependents having a net income of $1,200 would compute his tax as follows, if he were one of the few required to compute his own tax:

	1947	1948 and subsequent years
1. Net income	$1,200.00	$1,200.00
2. Personal exemption	500.00	500.00
3. Surtax net income (No. 1–No. 2)	700.00	700.00
4. Tentative tax (20 percent of No. 3)	140.00	140.00
5. Reduction in tentative tax under bill (19.25 percent in 1947 and 33.5 percent in 1948)	26.95	46.90
6. Tax under bill (No. 4–No. 5)	113.05	93.10

The reduction for surtax net incomes of $1,000 or less provided by your committee for 1948 and subsequent years is the same as that provided in H. R. 1 as it passed the House. However, the reduction provided in your committee's bill for 1947 is one-half the reduction provided for 1947 in H. R. 1 as it passed the House.

2. A reduction in 1947 varying from 15 percent to 10 percent and in 1948 varying from 30 percent to 20 percent of the tax on surtax net income between $1,000 and about $1,400

Under the bill if the combined tentative normal tax and surtax of an individual in the calendar year 1947 is between $200 and $265.53, his tentative tax is reduced by $38.50. In the calendar year 1948 and subsequent years if his combined normal tax and surtax is between $200 and $279.18, his tentative tax is reduced by $67. These decreases in tax reduction, as income increases, arise from the fact that flat reductions are given in lieu of the 5-percent reduction in tax. In effect, tax reductions are given to individuals which in 1947 range from 15 percent for those with surtax net incomes of $1,000 to 10 percent for those with surtax net incomes of $1,327.60, and in 1948 range from 30 percent for those with surtax net incomes of $1,000 to 20 percent for those with surtax net incomes of $1,395.83. For example, a married person with no dependents having a net income of $2,200 would compute his tax as follows, if he is one of the few required to compute his own tax:

1. Net income	$2,200.00	$2,200.00
2. Personal exemptions	1,000.00	1,000.00
3. Surtax net income (No. 1—No. 2)	1,200.00	1,200.00
4. Tentative tax (20 percent of No. 3)	240.00	240.00
5. Reduction in tentative tax under bill	38.50	67.00
6. Tax under bill (No. 4—No. 5)	201.50	173.00

The reduction for surtax net incomes between $1,000 and $1,395.84 provided by your committee for 1948 and subsequent years is the same as that provided in H. R. 1 as it passed the House, However, the reduction provided in your committee's bill for 1947 for similar surtax net incomes is about one-half the reduction provided for 1947 in H. R. 1 as it passed the House.

3. A reduction in 1947 of 10 percent and in 1948 of 20 percent for individuals with surtax net incomes between about $1,400 and about $80,000

Under the bill in the calendar year 1947 an individual with a combined tentative normal tax and surtax between $265.52 and $50,000 receives a 14.5-percent reduction in his tentative tax. In the calendar year 1948 and subsequent years an individual with a combined tentative normal tax and surtax between $279.17 and $50,000 receives a 24-percent reduction in his tentative tax. These reductions are in lieu of the 5-percent reduction allowed under present law. Individuals with surtax net incomes in 1947 between $1,327.60 and $79,728.41 receive a 10-percent reduction in their tax burden. In 1948, if their surtax net incomes are between $1,395.83 and $79,728.41, they receive a 20-percent reduction in their tax burden.

For example, a married person with no dependents having a net income of $4,000 would compute his tax as follows, if he were one of the few required to compute his own tax:

	1947	1948 and subsequent years
1. Net income	$4,000.00	$4,000.00
2. Personal exemption	1,000.00	1,000.00
3. Surtax net income	3,000.00	3,000.00
4. Tentative tax ($2,000 of surtax net income at 20 percent and $1,000 at 22 percent)	620.00	620.00
5. Reduction in tentative tax under bill (14.5 percent in 1947 and 24 percent in 1948)	89.90	148.80
6. Tax under bill (No. 4-No. 5)	530.10	471.20

The reduction for surtax net incomes between $1,395.83 and $79,728.41 provided by your committee for 1948 and subsequent years is the same as that provided in H. R. 1 as it passed the House, although the House bill continued the 20-percent reduction on up to surtax net incomes of $302,395.60. The reduction provided in your committee's bill for 1947 is one-half the reduction provided for 1947 in H. R. 1 as it passed the House.

4. A reduction in 1947 of about 7.5 percent and in 1948 of 15 percent of the tax on that portion of the surtax net income which is between about $80,000 and about $302,000

In the calendar year 1947, in addition to the reduction of 14.5 percent in the tentative tax on the first $79,728.40 of surtax net income, individuals with surtax net incomes between $79,728.40 and $302,395.61 receive a 12-percent reduction on that portion of their tentative tax which is between $50,000 and $250,000. In the calendar year 1948 and subsequent years in addition to the reduction of 24 percent in the tentative tax on the first $79,728.40 of surtax net income, individuals with surtax net income between $79,728.40 and $302,395.61 receive a 19.25-percent reduction in that portion of their tentative tax which is between $50,000 and $250,000. These reductions are in lieu of the 5-percent reduction in tentative tax allowed under present law. Thus an individual with surtax net income of between $79,728.40 and $302,395.61 in 1947 receives a reduction of 10 percent in the tax on his first $79,728.40 of surtax net income and about a 7.4-percent reduction in the tax on his remaining income.[6] In 1948 he receives a reduction of 20 percent in the tax on the first $79,728.40 of surtax net income, and a 15-percent reduction in the tax on the remaining income.

The tax reduction for surtax net incomes between $79,728.40 and $302,395.61 provided by your committee is smaller than that provided in H. R. 1 as it passed the House. The latter provided a 20-percent reduction in the tax on such incomes in both 1947 and subsequent years.

5. A reduction in 1947 of about 5.25 percent and in 1948 of about 10.5 percent of the tax on that portion of the surtax net income which is in excess of about $302,000

In addition to the reductions on the tax attributable to the first $302,395.60 of surtax net income or $250,000 of tentative tax, individuals with surtax net incomes or tentative taxes in excess of this amount receive a 10-percent reduction in 1947 and a 15-percent reduction in 1948, in lieu of the present 5-percent reduction, on that portion of the tentative tax which exceeds $250,000. Thus in 1947 an individual with surtax net income of more than $302,395.60 receives a 10-percent reduction in the tax on the first $79,728.40 of surtax net income, about a 7.4-percent reduction in the tax on surtax net income between $79,728.40 and $302,395.61, and about a 5.26-percent[7] reduction in the tax on any remaining surtax net income. In 1948 and subsequent years an individual with surtax net income of more than $302,395.60 receives a 20-percent reduction in the tax on the first $79,728.40 of surtax net income, a 15-percent reduction in the tax on surtax net income between $79,728.40 and $302,395.61 and about a 10½-percent[8] reduction in the tax on any remaining surtax net income.

The effective tax reduction in the calendar year 1948 and subsequently for individuals with surtax net incomes in excess of $302,395.60 provided by your committee's bill is smaller than that in H. R. 1 as it passed the House because of the smaller reduction provided for that proportion of the surtax net incomes between $79,728.40 and $302,395.61. H. R. 1 as it passed the House provided a reduction of 20 percent in the tax for that portion of the surtax net incomes under $302,395.61 and a reduction of about 10.5 percent in the tax on that portion of surtax net incomes in excess of that amount. Your committee's bill provides a reduction of 20 percent in the tax on the first $79,728.40 of surtax net income, a reduction of 15 percent in the tax on surtax net incomes between $79,728.40 and $302,395.61, and a reduction of about 10.5 percent in the tax on surtax net income in excess of $302,395.60.

H. R. 1 as it passed the House made the same provision for the calendar year 1947 as for 1948 and subsequent years. The bill as amended by your committee provides reductions in 1947 of about one-half those applying to subsequent years.

6. An additional exemption for individuals 65 years of age or over

An additional exemption of $500 is granted to individuals who have attained the age of 65 by the end of the taxable year. This feature of the bill is effective January 1, 1947. Your committee's bill allows the exemption to both a husband and a wife who have attained the age of 65 irrespective of the amount of the gross income received by either spouse. The House bill would have denied the exemption with respect to a spouse whose gross income was less than $500. Your committee's bill also differs from the House measure in that it does not include a provision which would have offset against the new $500 exemption the first $500 received on the account of certain pensions, annuities,[9] or officers' retirement pay excluded in full from taxable income under existing law.

VII. STATISTICAL DATA SHOWING TAX BURDENS, SPENDABLE INCOME AFTER TAX, AND TAX LIABILITY BY INCOME CLASSES UNDER PRESENT LAW, HOUSE BILL AND COMMITTEE BILL

Table IX shows for various net-income levels (after deductions but before exemptions), the amount of tax payable under present law, under the House bill, and under your committee's bill; and the amount and the percentage of the reduction and the effective (or average over-all) rates under the House bill and your committee's bill. For each of the above types of information the effects of your committee's bill in the calendar years 1947 and 1948 and subsequent calendar years are shown separately. Part A of table IX relates to a single person with no dependents; part B, to a married person with no dependents; and part C, to a married person with two dependents.

Since individuals of age 65 and over receive not only the rate reductions but also an additional $500 exemption, their tax burden cannot be derived from table IX. Table X shows for such persons the same type of information shown in table IX for persons under age 65. Again, part A relates to a single person with no dependents, part B to a married couple both over 65 but having no dependents; and part C to a married couple both over 65 and having two dependents.

Table XI shows the amount of spendable income remaining after tax and the percent such income is of net income (after deductions but before exemptions). This is given for present law, the House bill, and your committee's bill in both 1947 and 1948. Part A presents this information for a single person with no dependents, and part B, for a married person with no dependents.

Table XII shows the estimated distributions among various income classes of taxable returns; net income; tax liability under present law, the House bill, and your committee's bill; and the decrease in tax liability under the House bill and your committee's bill. Since your committee's bill grants in the calendar year 1947 only half the reduction in tax provided for 1948 and subsequent calendar years, it is necessary to have two separate distributions of the above information. Part A shows the above information for the year in which the half reduction is effective, and part B, for the years in which the full reduction is effective. An assumed level of income payments of $170,000,000,000 is used for both parts to make comparisons possible although estimates of income payments for the periods involved differ somewhat.

[6] The exact amount of tax reduction on surtax net income between $79,728.40 and $302,395.61 for the calendar year 1947 is between 7.36 percent and 7.37 percent.

[7] The exact percentage reduction in 1947 on surtax net income in excess of $302,395.60 is between 5.26 percent and 5.27 percent.

[8] The exact percentage reduction in 1948 and subsequent years on surtax net income in excess of $302,395.60 is between 10.52 percent and 10.53 percent.

DETAILED DISCUSSION OF THE TECHNICAL PROVISIONS OF THE BILL

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE

Section 1 provides that the act may be cited as the "Individual Income Tax Reduction Act of 1947."

SECTION 2. REDUCTION OF NORMAL TAX AND SURTAX ON INDIVIDUALS

Under existing law the income tax on individuals is determined by first computing tentative taxes at the rates specified in sections 11 and 12 of the code and then reducing the tentative taxes by 5 percent thereof. Section 2 of the House bill provided reductions in the normal tax and surtax on individuals by substituting a larger percentage reduction than 5 percent of the tentative taxes.

With respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1946, the House bill reduced the aggregate of the tentative normal tax and the tentative surtax, as follows:

1. If the aggregate of the tentative taxes is $200 or less, such aggregate is reduced by 33½ percent thereof, a reduction of 30 percent of the tax under existing law;

2. If the aggregate of the tentative taxes is over $200 but not over $279.17, such aggregate is reduced by $67, a reduction varying from 30 percent to 20 percent of the tax under existing law;

3. If the aggregate of the tentative taxes is over $279.17 but not over $250,000, such aggregate is reduced by 24 percent thereof, a reduction of 20 percent of the tax under existing law;

4. If the aggregate of the tentative taxes is in excess of $250,000, the first $250,000 thereof is reduced by 24 percent (a 20-percent reduction of such portion of the aggregate of tentative taxes after its 5-percent reduction under existing law), and the amount of such aggregate in excess of $250,000 is reduced by 15 percent, a reduction of approximately 10.5 percent of such portion after its 5-percent reduction under existing law.

Your committee recommends the adoption of the reductions of the House bill for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1947 (with the exception of the introduction of a new bracket covering the aggregate of tentative normal tax and tentative surtax over $50,000 and not over $250,000), but recommends that for taxable years beginning in 1947 the reduction should be approximately one-half the reductions recommended for future taxable years.

With respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1947, the committee amendment—

(a) retains the reductions provided in the House bill stated in paragraphs 1 and 2 above;

(b) in cases where the aggregate of tentative taxes is over $279.17 but not over $50,000 retains the rule of paragraph 3 above;

(c) in cases where the aggregate of tentative taxes is in excess of $50,000 but not in excess of $250,000, retains the rule of paragraph 3 above as to the first $50,000, but provides a reduction with respect to such excess over $50,000 of 19¼ percent (instead of 24 percent as provided in the House bill), equivalent to a reduction of 15 percent of such portion of the aggregate of tentative taxes after its 5 percent reduction under existing law, as opposed to a comparable reduction of 20 percent under the House bill;

(d) in cases where the aggregate of tentative taxes is in excess of $250,000, while still retaining the rule of paragraph 3 above as to the first $50,000—

(1) provides, with respect to the portion in excess of $50,000 and not in excess of $250,000, the rule stated in paragraph (c), and

(2) adopts as to the portion of such aggregate of tentative taxes over $250,000 the same rule as under the House bill (stated in paragraph 4 above) namely: a reduction of 15 percent, equivalent to a reduction of approximately 10.5 percent of such portion of the aggregate of tentative taxes after its 5 percent reduction under existing law.

With respect to taxable years beginning in 1947, your committee amendment provides a reduction in tax equivalent to approximately half the reduction which your committee would provide in the case of taxable years beginning after 1947. Under the committee amendment—

(a) if the aggregate of the tentative normal tax and tentative surtax is $200 or less, such aggregate is reduced by 19¼ percent thereof, a reduction of 15 percent of the tax under existing law;

(b) if the aggregate of the tentative taxes is over $200 but not over $265.52, such aggregate is reduced by $38.50, a reduction varying from 15 percent to 10 percent of the tax under existing law;

(c) if the aggregate of the tentative taxes is over $265.52 but not over $50,000, such aggregate is reduced by 14.5 percent thereof, a reduction of 10 percent of the tax under existing law;

(d) if the aggregate of the tentative taxes exceeds $50,000 but does not exceed $250,000, the aggregate is reduced by $7,250 plus 12 percent of the excess of such aggregate over $50,000. This reduction, with respect to the portion of the aggregate of tentative taxes not over $50,000, is equivalent to a reduction of 10 percent of such portion after its 5-percent reduction under existing law. With respect to the portion of such aggregate in excess of $50,000, this reduction is equivalent to a reduction of approximately 7.5 percent of such portion after its 5-percent reduction under existing law;

(e) if the aggregate of such tentative taxes exceeds $250,000, the aggregate is reduced by $31,250 plus 10 percent of the excess of such aggregate over $250,000. This reduction, with respect to the portion of such aggregate of tentative taxes not in excess of $50,000, is a reduction of 10 percent of such portion after its 5-percent reduction under existing law. With respect to the portion of such aggregate of tentative taxes in excess of $50,000 but not in excess of $250,000, the reduction is equivalent to a reduction of approximately 7.5 percent of such portion after its 5-percent reduction under existing law. With respect to the portion of such aggregate of tentative taxes in excess of $250,000, the reduction is equivalent to a reduction of approximately 5.3 percent of such portion after its 5-percent reduction under existing law.

Section 12 (g) of the code provides, as an over-all limitation upon the combined normal tax and surtax in the case of individuals, that such combined tax shall not exceed 85½ percent of the next income of the taxpayer. The House bill substituted for this percentage figure 76½ percent to be applicable with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1946. The committee amendment retains the House figure, but limits its application to taxable years beginning after 1947. With respect to taxable years beginning in 1947, your committee, in order to conform with the revised reductions for 1947, provides that the over-all limitation shall be 81 percent.

For purposes of clarity your committee has combined the various percentage reductions in the tentative taxes into two tables, one applicable for taxable years beginning in 1947 and the other applicable for taxable years beginning after 1947. Section 2 (c) of your committee bill incorporates these tables in section 12 (g) of the code. Sections 11 and 12 of the code are amended by sections 2 (a) and 2 (b), respectively, of your committee bill to provide that the tentative normal tax and tentative surtax computed under such sections shall be reduced as provided in the tables under section 12 (g) of the code as amended by your committee.

The tables provided under the committee amendment to section 12 (g) of the code are designed to apply to the aggregate of the tentative normal tax and tentative surtax, and to provide for a reduction in the combined normal tax and surtax. In view of the fact that there are certain provisions of the code, such as sections 105 and 106, which make it necessary to determine the surtax separately from the normal tax, your committee has provided in section 12 (g) a special rule for making such computations. Under this rule, the surtax shall be an amount which is the same proportion of the combined normal tax and surtax as the tentative surtax is of the aggregate of the tentative normal tax and tentative surtax.

Special provision is made in section 6 of the bill for taxable years beginning in 1946 and ending in 1947, or beginning in 1947 and ending in 1948.

SECTION 3. INDIVIDUALS WITH ADJUSTED GROSS INCOME OF LESS THAN $5,000

Section 3 of the House bill amended the tax table contained in section 400 of the code, relating to the optional tax on individuals with adjusted gross incomes of less than $5,000. The bill as reported by your committee limits the application of the tax table in the House bill to taxable years beginning after 1947, and provides an additional tax table to be applicable to taxable years beginning in 1947 to reflect the reductions provided by your committee in section 2 of the bill with respect to taxable years beginning in 1947. Special provision is made in section 6 of the bill for taxable years beginning in 1946 and ending in 1947, or beginning in 1947 and ending in 1948.

SECTION 4. ADDITIONAL CREDIT AGAINST NET INCOME FOR NORMAL TAX AND SURTAX

Section 25 (b) (1) of the code now provides certain exemptions which are allowable as credits against net income in computing the normal tax and surtax. Section 4 of the House bill amended section 25 (b) (1) of the code by introducing an additional exemption of $500 for a taxpayer who attains the age of 65 before the end of the taxable year. The House bill provided that in the case of a joint return the additional exemption of $500 is allowed each spouse who has attained the age of 65 and whose gross income for the taxable year is $500 or more. The bill as reported by your committee retains the provision of the House bill respecting the additional exemption of $500 for a taxpayer who has attained the age of 65 and the additional exemption of $500 for the taxpayer's spouse who has attained the age of 65, but removes the requirement that the spouse must have gross income for the taxable year of $500 or more. Where a joint return is filed and both the husband and wife have attained the age of 65, the additional exemption for old age will be $500 for each such taxpayer.

The additional exemptions provided by section 4 of your committee bill, as in the corresponding provision of the House bill, do not apply to a nonresident alien who is not a resident of a contiguous country, to a citizen of the United States who is entitled to the benefits of section 251 of the code, relating to income from sources within possessions of the United States, or to a citizen of a possession of the United States (other than the Virgin Islands) not otherwise a citizen of the United States and not a resident of the United States.

Subsection (b) of section 4 of the House bill amended section 25 (b) (2) of the code to provide that for the purposes of the additional exemption for old age the determination of whether or not an individual has attained the age of 65 shall be made as of the last day of the taxable year. Your committee bill amends section 25 (b) (1) of the code to incorporate this provision, and subsection (b) of section 4 of the House bill has, therefore, been eliminated. In determining the age of an individual for the purposes of the exemption for old age the last day of the taxable year of the taxpayer is the controlling date. Thus, in the event of a separate return by a husband no additional exemption for old age may be claimed for his spouse unless such spouse has attained the age of 65 on or before the last day of the taxable year of the husband. Nor will the husband filing a separate return be entitled to such exemption for said spouse if during the calendar year in which his taxable year begins, she received over half of her support from another taxpayer. In no event shall the additional exemption for old age be allowed with respect to a spouse who dies before attaining the age of 65, even though such spouse would have attained the age of 65 before the close of the taxpayer's taxable year. For the purposes of the old-age exemption, an individual attains the age of 65 on the first moment of the day preceding his sixty-fifth birthday. Accordingly, an individual whose sixty-fifth birthday falls on January 1 in a given year attains the age of 65 on the last day of the calendar year immediately preceding.

Your committee has eliminated subsection (c) of section 4 of the House bill. This subsection amended section 22 of the code (relating to gross income) by adding a new subsection (o) to require an individual entitled to the old-age exemption to include in gross income for the taxable year the first $500 of certain tax-exempt pensions, annuities, etc. Subsection (d) of section 4 of the House bill which made a technical amendment to section 22 (b) (5) of the code has likewise been eliminated in view of the removal of the provision which originally necessitated its inclusion.

Subsection (b) of section 4 of the bill as reported by your committee contains four technical amendments, not found in the House bill, necessitated by the insertion in the code of the old-age exemption.

Paragraph (1) of section 4 (b) amends section 58 (a) (1) of the code. Existing law requires a declaration of estimated tax if the taxpayers' gross income from wages subject to withholding may be expected to exceed $5,000 plus $500 for each exemption to which he is entitled except his own exemption. Your committee amends section 58 (a) (1) to give effect to the old age exemption provided in the bill. Under the amendment a declaration will be required if the anticipated wage exceeds $4,500 plus $500 for each exemption to which the taxpayer is entitled, including his own exemption. Under existing law a single person who has no dependents and is under 65 years of age and who derives his income solely from wages subject to withholding is required to file a declaration if his anticipated wages for the calendar year exceed $5,000. Under the committee amendment the same result will follow ($4,500 plus $500 for his own exemption). Under the committee amendment if the same individual is over the age of 65 the declaration would not be required unless his anticipated wages for the calendar year exceeded $5,500 ($4,500 plus $500 for his own exemption plus $500 for his old-age exemption). Similarly under existing law, a single person under the age of 65 who has one dependent is not required to file a declaration unless his anticipated wages exceed $5,500 ($5,000 plus $500 for the dependent). The same result would follow under the committee amendment ($4,500 plus $500 for his own exemption plus $500 for his dependent).

The House bill does not make available for withholding purposes the additional exemption allowed to individuals who have attained the age of 65. Paragraph (2) of section 4 (b) would amend section 1622 (h) (1) of the code to authorize the allowance of the old-age exemption for withholding purposes. Paragraph (3) would require employers to give effect to the additional exemption with respect to the first payment of wages made on or after the ninetieth day after the date of the enactment of the bill, if a withholding exemption certificate is filed at least 30 days before such ninetieth day. This will allow employees approximately 60 days from the date of enactment within which to furnish new exemption certificates and will allow employers a minimum of 30 days to give effect to such certificates.

Paragraph (4) of section 4 (b) amends section 23 (x) of the code relating to deduction of medical, etc., expenses. Under the House bill the amendment providing for the additional exemption for old age had the effect of increasing from $1,250 to $2,500 the maximum deduction provided for medical expenses by section 23 (x) of the code in the case of a single individual over 65 years of age having no dependents. Under the committee amendment the maximum deduction provided for medical expenses by section 23 (x) of the code will not be increased by the additional exemption provided for old age.

Subsection (c) of this section of your committee bill is identical with subsection (e) of section 4 as passed by the House, and provides that the amendments made by this section shall be applicable with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1946. Special provision is made in section 6 of the bill for taxable years beginning in 1946 and ending in 1947.

SECTION 5. REDUCTION IN WITHHOLDING OF TAX AT SOURCE ON WAGES

Section 5 (a) of the House bill amended section 1622 (a) of the code, relating to the percentage method of withholding, to reflect the reductions in tax provided in section 2 of that bill. The House bill required the application of four rates in computing the amount to be withheld under the percentage method instead of the two rates provided in existing law. Your committee amendment simplifies the computation under the percentage method of withholding by substituting three rates for the four provided in the House bill. The wage bracket withholding tables contained in section 5 (b) of the House bill are also adjusted to conform to the above change.

Under your committee amendment section 5 of the bill is made applicable with respect to wages paid on or after July 1, 1947, instead of June 1, 1947, as provided in the House bill.

SECTION 6. FISCAL YEAR TAXPAYERS

The bill as reported by your committee retains the provision of the House bill respecting the computation of the tax for fiscal years beginning in 1946 and ending in 1947, and adds a new subsection to section 108 to provide for the computation of the tax imposed by sections 11, 12, and 400 for taxable years beginning in 1947 and ending in 1948. This new subsection is necessitated by your committee amendments providing tax reductions for 1947 different from those provided for subsequent years.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, the Senate has before it House bill 1, which is cited as the Individual Income Tax Reduction Act of 1947. This bill was reported by the Senate committee with amendments after 9 days of open hearings. Representatives of labor, management, and other groups were heard. The testimony covers 582 printed pages. The record and the report of the committee are on the desks of Senators.

When viewed most conservatively, the present outlook indicates that revenues for the fiscal year 1948 will run well ahead of the budget estimate made last December. This is shown by the increased receipts in the March 1947 returns, and by the fact that income payments in January, February, and March were higher than anticipated. The income level of $177,000,000,000 during these months is all the more impressive because it does not reflect the wage increases now being made. Because of these wage changes it is likely that the income payments in April, May, and June will be at least as high as those earlier in the year.

The tax collections in the fiscal year 1948 depend to a considerable extent upon the economic conditions prevailing in the earlier years. In taxation, as in other fields, collections lag behind obligations. For this reason the Treasury's estimate of receipts for the fiscal year 1948 is too low. This estimate was submitted on January 3 on the basis of calculations made in December 1946. The level of income payments for the calendar year 1947 used in that estimate was about $10,000,000,000 less than the level experienced to date in the calendar year 1947.

The Treasury's underestimate of income payments during the first 6 months of the calendar year 1947 means that its estimate of 1948 collections is too low, even though the level of income payments assumed by the Treasury for the fiscal year 1948 itself should turn out to be correct.

An independent estimate prepared recently by the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation indicates that receipts in 1948 will be substantially larger than those shown in the Budget message. The extent of the difference between the staff and Treasury estimates depends on the level of income payments assumed for the fiscal year 1948. At the levels which are most likely to appear, an ample surplus will remain to provide for debt retirement and contingencies even after making due allowance for the loss of revenue; if this should develop, resulting from the enactment of H. R. 1. I will discuss this point in detail later.

If we are going to maintain our production and employment at their present high levels, a tax reduction at this time is most important. This bill is designed primarily to relieve our individual taxpayers from the oppressive tax rates which constitute so great an obstacle to the efficient operation of our peacetime economy. This tax reduction will increase the incentives upon which our system of free private enterprise depends. It will help to stimulate managerial effort. It will encourage the release of venture capital needed to finance the expansion of business and employment basic to the maintenance of our present high level of economic activity.

Because it brings relief to all individual income taxpayers, this bill will be effective in increasing consumer purchasing power. This also will contribute to the maintenance of the existing high levels of income and employment.

Let us examine H. R. 1 and see exactly what it does. While this bill gives all of the 49,500,000 taxpayers filing returns a reduction in taxes, the largest part of the relief goes to those with surtax net incomes of $1,000 or less. This group includes single persons making up to $1,667 per year, married couples making up to $2,222 per year, and married couples with two dependents making up to $3,333 per year.

These taxpayers will receive a 30-percent reduction in their tax liability in 1948 and subsequent years. In 1947, the reduction will be 15 percent on a full-year basis. However, since new withholding rates with the full 30-percent reduction will be put into operation July 1, 1947, the great mass of these taxpayers will begin to feel the 30-percent reduction immediately after July 1. This group comprises over 26,000,000 taxpayers, or 53 percent of the total number filing returns.

The group receiving the next largest reduction consists of taxpayers with surtax net incomes between $1,000 and approximately $1,400. This group numbers around 7,000,000 taxpayers. The bill will reduce their tax by a flat amount of $67 in 1948 and subsequent years. This $67 includes the 5-percent reduction allowed under existing law. For 1947 the reduction is $38.50. This also takes into account the existing 5-percent reduction. However, the full reduction of $67 has been incorporated in the withholding tables which go into operation July 1, 1947.

The third group consists of taxpayers whose surtax net incomes are between $1,400 and $80,000. There are sixteen and one-half milion taxpayers in this group, or about one-third of the total. H. R. 1 will reduce their tax by 20 percent in 1948 and subsequent years and by 10 percent in 1947.

The fourth group consists of taxpayers with surtax net incomes between $80,000 and $302,000. Approximately 15,000 taxpayers are in this group. This is about three-tenths of 1 percent of the total number of taxpayers. For 1948 and subsequent years this group is given a 15-percent reduction on that part of the tax attributable to income in excess of $80,000 and 20 percent on that part of the tax attributable to the income below $80,000. The House bill allowed this group a full 20-percent reduction on their entire tax. For 1947 this group receives a reduction which is approximately one-half that allowed in 1948.

Those with surtax net incomes above $302,000 comprise the final group. There are only 577 taxpayers in this group. These receive the same reduction as the previous group on that part of the tax attributable to their surtax net income up to about $302,000. On that part of the tax attributable to the income in excess of that amount the committee retains the House reduction of 10½ percent for 1948 and subsequent years. For 1947 the reduction on that part of the tax applicable to the income above $302,000 is approximately 5 percent.

The Treasury has estimated that out of 48,000,000 taxpayers 22,000,000 will not have to compute their tax at all. Their tax will be computed by the collector.

About sixteen and one-half million will use the tax table in which their tax is automatically computed for them. Only about 10,000,000 will compute their tax on Form 1040.

Of these 10,000,000, half will compute their tax exactly as they do under existing law, except that for 1947 they will reduce their tax by 19¼ percent instead of 5 percent, and for 1948 by 33½ percent instead of the present 5 percent. I cannot help feeling that in view of the tax reduction which they receive they will be very happy to do this.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator has been discussing House bill 1. I am not sure that I understand fully whether he is discussing the bill which has been reported to the Senate by the Committee on Finance, or whether he is discussing the bill (H. R. 1) which came to the Senate Committee on Finance from the House of Representatives.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I am discussing the Senate version of the bill as amended by the committee.

Mr. President, 1,666,000 taxpayers will reduce their tax by $38.50 for 1947 and a flat $67 for 1948. The procedure for these taxpayers will be much simpler than under existing law. Instead of reducing their tax by 5 percent, they will reduce it by the flat amount referred to above.

Approximately 3,300,000 taxpayers remain. The procedure which they will follow will also be simple. Most of these taxpayers will reduce their tax by 14½ percent for 1947 and 24 percent for 1948 instead of the present 5 percent. This group will find it just as simple to use the reduction in this bill as the present 5-percent reduction.

One way of seeing how the tax reductions provided by this bill operate is to see what happens to spendable income.

I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a table which shows the relation between the spendable income of a married person with no dependents, under existing law, and under the bill as reported by the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. MILLIKIN. It will be seen from this table that under existing law a married person with a $1,200 income has 96.8 percent of his total income left after tax and about 98 percent left under the bill. However, as the income increases the percentage retained becomes smaller and smaller. For example, the $12,000 man has only 76 percent left under existing law, and about 81 percent left under the bill; the $25,000 man has 64 percent left under existing law, and 71 percent under the bill; the $100,000 man has 37 percent left under existing law, and 49 percent under the bill; and the $1,000,000 man has 16 percent left under existing law, and 26 percent under the bill.

One of the chief differences between your committee's bill and that which passed the House is the fact that the latter provided for a retroactive tax reduction to January 1, 1947. Your committee's bill has roughly the effect of making the reduction on July 1.

The principal reason for this amendment of the House bill was the effect of the latter on the budget for the fiscal year 1948. The revenue loss resulting from the House version would be $4,900,000,000, with income payments at $170,000,000,000. Under the bill as amended by your committee, the reduction for the fiscal year 1948, with the same income payments, will be $3,200,000,000. Your committee believes that its bill gives greater assurance that the desired volume of debt retirement will take place, and that adequate provision will be made for such contingencies as might arise.

This amendment to the House bill will also eliminate most of the tax refunds which would have occurred in the fiscal year 1948 under the House bill.

Your committee believes that the refunds resulting from the retroactive feature of the House bill would be of little value from the point of view of stimulating managerial incentive and investment.

The bill provides a special exemption for all persons 65 or over. This group is particularly in need of relief at the present time. It includes a great many retired school teachers, policemen, municipal workers, and persons who have retired from private industry, whose sole source of livelihood is the small amount which they receive as a pension or annuity or as retirement pay.

The concentration of small incomes among persons 65 or over is unusually great. A study by the Bureau of Labor Statistics relating to the year 1944, showed that 45 percent of single males aged 60 or over had incomes below $1,000, as compared with only 13.6 percent of the single males between 30 and 60. The same study showed that 27 percent of the families of two, with a male head, fell in this income class—namely, the group having incomes of less than $1,000—when the head of the family was 60 or over, while less than 3 percent did so when the age of the head of the family was between 30 and 60. Similar results appear in another Bureau of Labor Statistics investigation relating to 1941. The recent national survey of liquid-asset holdings, spending, and saving, conducted by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, bears out the heavy concentration of small incomes among persons aged 60 or more.

Available statistical data also show that persons aged 65 or more suffered unusually as a result of the increases in cost of living and taxes during recent years. Their incomes did not increase in proportion to the rise in prices and the increase in taxes. Unlike younger persons, most of those now over 65 were unable to supplement their regular incomes by engaging in a gainful occupation at prevailing high rates of wages. Hence, their economic position deteriorated, relative to that of the rest of the community.

The special exemption for all persons aged 65 or over will benefit 3,700,000 taxpayers and will remove 1,400,000 from the tax rolls.

Certain persons 65 and over are already benefiting by a system of exclusions of particular types of income which is a part of existing law. For instance, recipients of annuities under the Railroad Retirement Act and retirement pay of Army or Navy officers discharged by reason of medical survey are excluded in full from gross income by statutory enactment. Annuities under the old-age and survivors insurance system of the Social Security Act have been excluded by Treasury decision.

Of course, these exclusions work a discrimination against receipients of other types of income. The result has been an insistent demand for the extension of similar treatment to other types of retirement income, such as the pensions and annuities paid to former employees of State and local governments, retired school teachers, and former civil-service employees in the Federal Government. The general exemption for all taxpayers 65 and over seems to be a more satisfactory answer to this problem rather than an extension of the system of exclusions of particular types of income.

The House bill contained a provision intended to keep persons who were receiving the fully excluded types of retirement income from obtaining the full benefit of the new $500 exemption for persons aged 65 and over. That was done by requiring a taxpayer who qualified for the new exemption to include in his gross income the first $500 received on the account of pensions, annuities, or retirement pay which, but for this bill, would have been excluded in full from gross income.

The principle upon which this provision is based is sound. However, repreentatives of the Treasury Department have pointed out that this particular section of the House bill involves unusual difficulties of interpretation and administration. Hence it seemed advisable to delete the provision in question from House bill 1 in order to permit a thorough study of the problem at hand to be made.

Your committee is of the opinion that some remedy for the existing discrimination between various types of retirement income must be found. This problem will be dealt with in connection with the next general tax bill. Meanwhile it should be pointed out that the additional $500 exemption for persons 65 and over, allowed under House bill 1, may constitute sufficient basis for removing entirely the exclusions of particular types of retirement incomes enjoyed under existing law and Treasury rulings.

One further amendment was made in the portion of the House bill which dealt with this special $500 exemption. As passed by the House, this exemption was limited to persons aged 65 or over who received gross income of $500 or more. When the tax is calculated on the basis of a joint return of husband and wife, both of whom are in the appropriate age group, this feature of the House bill involves a substantial inequity. If the wife had, let us say, only $499 of gross income, under the House bill the couple would receive an additional exemption of $500. If she had a gross income of $501, the couple would receive an additional exemption of $1,000. This difference would appear, even though the total income of the couple remained the same.

To eliminate this inequity the committee amended the House bill so as to allow the $500 deduction with respect to all persons 65 years of age or over.

As heretofore stated, the bulk of the tax reduction provided by the bill will go to persons with income of $5,000 or less. I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point in the RECORD a table showing the percentage of reductions which go to persons in specific income brackets.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Estimated percentage distribution of the individual income-tax liability and taxpayers under present law, and of total tax reduction under your committee's bill with a full year's reduction in tax (with assumed income payments of $170,000,000,000)

Net income class	Percentage distribution of—

Total below $5,000	96.1	56.8	64.0
$5,000 to $10,000	2.6	8.2	7.6
$10,000 to $25,000	1.1	12.0	10.7
$25,000 and over	.2	23.0	17.7
Total over $5,000	3.9	43.2	36.0
Total	100.0	100.0	100.0

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, this table shows that nearly 65 percent of the benefits of the full rate reduction provided by the bill will go to individuals having net incomes of $5,000 or less. These individuals pay 56.8 percent of the total taxes levied under existing law.

Those with incomes of $2,000 or less will receive about 25 percent of the total tax reduction provided by the bill. These people now pay 17.5 percent of the tax levied under existing law.

Persons with incomes of $10,000 and over will receive about 28 percent of the tax reduction. These people are paying 35 percent of the taxes imposed by existing law. These facts reveal the fallacy of any complaint that H. R. 1 brings inadequate relief to the recipients of smaller incomes.

Some critics of the bill allege that the percentage of the relief given to those in the lower brackets should be even greater. Usually this conclusion is reached by pointing out that the percentage reductions provided under H. R. 1 as amended are not the same as the percentage increases which took place in the individual income tax burdens between 1939 and 1945. It is alleged that tax rates should go down in the same manner as they went up during the war.

Behind this argument lurks the assumption that the rate structure of 1939 was an ideal one. This is highly questionable. The rates applied to upper bracket incomes in 1939 were extremely high. They represented the end product of a determined effort to convert the individual income-tax into a device for the redistribution of wealth. In their desire to attain this objective, the proponents of the rate structure developed during the 1930's tended to pay far too little attention to the problem of maintaining managerial initiative and an adequate flow of venture capital. For this reason it is not supportable to use the 1939 rate structure as a basis for comparison.

The real factor limiting the amount of the reduction which can be granted to lower-bracket incomes in the pending bill is the present size of the budget, and the large amount of the total revenue which comes from the lower brackets. Out of an estimated total taxable income of $121,000,000,000 in 1947, no less than $97,000,000,000, or 80 percent, is received by persons with net income of $5,000 or less; $68,000,000,000, or 56 percent, is received by persons with incomes of $3,000 or less. Because of this concentration of incomes in the lower brackets, rate reductions in that area are very expensive. To provide a materially greater reduction in these brackets at this time would require a considerable additional reduction in the Federal budget. We could adopt the extremely high tax rates and confiscate all the incomes of these persons, and the result would not be a drop in our revenue bucket.

A bill which concentrated relief exclusively among incomes of $5,000 or less would do nothing to alleviate the very heavy burdens now imposed upon the people who make the key decisions in our industrial organization. It would do nothing to encourage the persons who are expected to assume the risks of developing the new products and the new enterprises upon which a continued advance in the standard of life of the Nation so largely depends.

A great many people are unaware of the extent of the burdens now imposed. Many do not appreciate the discouragement to effort, enterprise and risk-taking which results from the existing rate schedule.

The easiest way to show what I mean is to refer to the so-called marginal rates used under the present law.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert a table on the subject at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, a person receiving a surtax net income of $10,000, who obtains an additional income of a thousand dollars, must pay 36 percent of it to the Government. In other words, so far as that bracket is concerned, such a person works more than 2 days a week for the Federal Government alone on his new income. A person whose surtax net income is $25,000 and who earns an additional $1,000, must pay the Government 56 percent, or $560. A person whose surtax net income is $50,000, who earns an additional $1,000, must pay 71.3 percent of it, or $713, to the Government.

The willingness of individuals to put forth additional managerial effort and to take additional business risks depends very largely upon the portion of their additional earnings which they will be permitted to retain as their own. When 36, or 56, or 71 percent of this additional income is taken from them by the income tax, it is only too obvious that their initiative to exert additional efforts and take additional risks is blunted.

The situation is serious, not merely from the point of view of the individuals involved, but from the point of view of the economy as a whole. So long as our economic system is primarily of a capitalistic character, the material progress which is possible under it depends upon the intelligent and aggressive development of individual business enterprises. If the managers and the owners relax, and fail to put forth their best efforts, the rate of progress in the economy will, at the very least, slow down. If the efforts of the persons who are in control of the private enterprises of our country are inadequate, volume of output will tend to fall, and unemployment will result. If the investors of the country are unwilling to take the risks of developing new enterprises and of bringing new products into the market place, the tempo of business will decline, to the detriment of all the persons who make up our society.

The bill which is now before the Senate would reduce the rates imposed upon the middle and upper as well as the lower bracket incomes.

I wish now to make a few observations on the relation of the pending income-tax reduction bill to the provisions of section 138 (a) of the reorganization Act of 1946 for a legislative budget.

It will be recalled that this act was passed in the closing days of the last session of the preceding Congress and was approved by the President on August 2, 1946.

It calls for the creation of a Joint Congressional Budget Committee which is to meet at the beginning of each regular session of Congress and by the succeeding February 15 is to make budget recommendations in the form of a report to the respective Houses for the ensuing fiscal year including estimated over-all Federal receipts and expenditures for such fiscal year.

The report is to be accompanied by a covering resolution.

The shortness of the time elements involved posed obvious difficulties during the first year of the operation of these provisions for a legislative budget. There was no legislative budget staff and there were no provisions for one. Opportunity was lacking for long and thorough preparatory ground work in the agencies of the Federal Government. In this connection I would remind Senators that the staff of the executive budget numbers about 600 persons and works on a full-time basis.

Nevertheless, following the convening of the Congress on January 3 of this year the joint committee was organized and its budget report was made by February 15. It was accompanied by a covering concurrent resolution.

This resolution was introduced in the Senate on February 15 as Senate Concurrent Resolution 7 and in the House on the same day as House Concurrent Resolution 20. It is brief, and it would be well to bring it back to mind. It reads:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the judgment of the Congress, based upon presently available information, that revenues during the period of the fiscal year 1948 will approximate $39,100,000,000 and that expenditures during such fiscal year should not exceed $33,000,000,000, of which latter amount not more than $25,100,000,000 would be in consequence of appropriations hereafter made available for obligation in such fiscal year. It is the further judgment of the Congress that sound fiscal policy requires that not less than $2,600,000,000 of the excess of revenues over expenditures be applied toward reduction of the public debt during said fiscal year.

I am now reading from the Senate policy on the budget.

It is further declared to be the judgment of the Congress that all proceeds from the transfer or disposition of property under the Surplus Property Act of 1944, as amended, which are covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts should be applied toward reduction of the public debt.

Those are the Senate's budget running orders.

On February 19, the Senate concurrent resolution came up for action. On March 3, 1947, it was adopted as amended, by the Senate, by a vote of 64 to 20.

The amendment setting the maximum goal of expenditure for the fiscal year of $33,000,000,000 was carried by a vote of 51 to 33. The amendment providing for debt reduction of not less than $2,600,000,000 during the same fiscal year was unanimously adopted.

The amended version of the Senate's concurrent resolution went to conference, and the conferees have been unable to agree.

The Senate version was not reached in cavalier fashion. The expenditure-reduction goal of not less than $4,500,000,000, the debt-reduction goal of $2,600,000,000 and the other features of the resolution, as amended, were adopted after lengthy debate on February 19, 21, 24, 26, 28, and on March 3, 1947.

A strong majority of the Senators were of the opinion that an expenditure reduction of $6,000,000,000 at this time might require excessive curtailment of essential governmental activities.

In my opinion, the conferees could have agreed had the representatives of the Senate been willing to split the difference in the conflicting figures of the two Houses. In other words, I believe that had we been willing to commit ourselves to a debt-reduction goal of $1,300,000,000 instead of two and six-tenths billions, and an expenditure-reduction goal of five and twenty-five one-hundredths billions instead of the Senate's goal of four and five-tenths billions, we could have gotten an agreement.

Speaking for myself, I have been unwilling as a conferee to come back here with that kind of result. It seemed to me that it would have been an affront to my colleagues had we returned with a debt-reduction objective of one-half of that unanimously desired by Members of the Senate. It seems to me it would have been an affront to the Senate, had we come back with a compromise on debt reduction against our own figure on debt reduction, which has been, in my opinion, becoming more warranted by the passing of time, and, in my opinion, has also become more achievable; indeed, it is now, I think, certain through the operation of H. R. 1, as amended, which is before the Senate.

Moreover, a revenue estimate of thirty-nine and one-tenth billions made in February, when national income payments were estimated for the fiscal year 1948 on the basis of one hundred and sixty-five billions, could not stand as valid against the unfolding facts which now make conservative the present estimate of revenue for fiscal 1948 adopted by the Senate Committee on Finance of forty-one and four-tenths billions.

With the passing weeks, the Senate's four and five-tenths billions expenditure-reduction goal seemed more realistic, as I have said, than the six-billion goal of the House. I could see no point in yielding on this in any substantial respect while our own view of it was gaining strength by experience.

I think it may fairly be said that had we agreed upon a compromise along the lines which might have been available, that is, to have cut the debt-reduction proposal in half and to have raised the expenditure reduction to $5,250,000,000, every Senator, so far as the consideration of this bill is concerned, would have known it for what it was and would have continued to follow the Senate version or his independent judgment.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point in his remarks?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Certainly.

Mr. LUCAS. Am I to understand, from the statement made by the distinguished Senator, that there is now no possibility whatever of reaching an agreement with the House conferees on the legislative budget proposal?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I do not say that at all. I am stating the reasons, so far as I am concerned, why we have not come back to the Senate with the compromise.

Mr. LUCAS. What is the opinion of the Senator with respect to the possibility of the conferees reaching an agreement? In other words, the Senator has made a very dynamic statement of his own position with respect to the legislative proposal, and I was wondering whether, from the conferences he has attended, the Senator has any opinion relating to whether or not it is possible for the conferees to get together, and to submit to the Senate any kind of conference report upon the important legislative budget?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I am not without hope on that subject.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator still has hope——

Mr. MILLIKIN. I have hope.

Mr. LUCAS. But little faith, I take it?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I have hope. I am trying to explain to the Senator why I have not agreed, and perhaps why others have not agreed to a compromise, which they might think would be unrealistic, and which could not be brought back to the Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield for another question?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the Senator agree that that ought to be done, that an agreement of some kind between the House and the Senate should be reached upon what is directly laid down for us to do in the Legislative Reorganization Act?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I am coming to that in a moment.

Mr. LUCAS. I am sorry if I interrupted the continuity of the Senator's remarks.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Moreover, since the conferees must come from the Budget Committee, I doubt whether another team taken from the same committee would have achieved any more acceptable results.

Does it take the action of the House to give validity to our own viewpoints when we are working as the Senate? Does not the action of the Senate in setting a four and one-half billion reduction goal bind our consciences just as much as though the same figure had been reached by both Houses?

Can it be said that our Senate Appropriations Committee is not impressed with the Senate viewpoint of the reduction goal set out in the Senate's amended resolution but that it would be impressed if we brought back a phony compromise?

When the Senate Appropriations Committee processes these appropriation bills and brings them before the Senate for our decision will our individual consciences gain any acquittal from duty because our Senate goal has not been approved by the House?

I should add that because of a technical parliamentary situation in the House, the conferees would not be able to bring back a higher estimate of revenue than the new unrealistic one contained in the resolutions before the conference. This comes about through a rule of the House which would subject such a raise in estimate to a point of order. I have been so advised by our parliamentarian who has conferred on the subject with the House parliamentarian.

Will anyone say that we here in the Senate in the process of making a tax bill where estimated revenues are just as important as estimated expenditures, should govern our action by a figure which has become unreal and which cannot be revised because of a parliamentary rule of the House?

I wish that we could have agreed prior to bringing this bill before the Senate. I wish that we could have brought back something reasonably close to the Senate's viewpoints. Let me remind the Senate that consideration of this tax bill was delayed in an effort to reach such an agreement and hoping for such an agreement.

I must disagree, however, with anyone who may contend that we could help the consideration of the matter before us by formal adherence to a compromise which in our hearts we would regard as a sham.

The amount of money that is to remain in the citizen's pocketbook as a result of our action here, is a very real matter to him, and he is not apt to be interested in mirage diversions.

There will be an effort to delay consideration of the bill until June 10 on the ground that we do not have sufficient information on which to proceed at this time.

This argument will receive more extensive attention after it has been made. At this time, I merely wish to bring it into the perspective afforded by our actions and our fiscal policies in connection with the last tax reduction bill.

This was the Revenue Act of 1945. By that law, we took about 12,000,000 people off of the tax rolls; we abolished excess-profits taxes; we made a flat 5-percent tax reduction.

The then estimated cost of that bill to the revenues was about $6,000,000,000. At the present rate of national individual income payments a similar bill would carry a cost estimate of about $9,000,000,000.

The Revenue Act of 1945 came before the Senate for consideration on October 24, 1945. What was the state of the budget at that time? The budget deficit estimated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1945—we passed the bill in October of that year—was $53,941,000,000. The budget deficit estimated for the fiscal year June 30, 1946, was $20,976,000,000.

We were reducing taxes $6,000,000,000 with an estimated $53,000,000,000 deficit for the preceding fiscal year staring us in the face and a $20,000,000,000 estimated deficit ahead of us. From certain conventional standpoints this was the ultimate in fiscal irresponsibility.

Well, surely, there must have been many days of debate; the RECORD must have been full of anguished soul-searching.

How much debate was there? The bill came before the Senate for consideration on October 24, 1945, and was passed on the same day without even a roll-call vote.

The bill went to conference, came back to the Senate on November 1, 1945, and on the same day the conference report was agreed to without a roll-call vote.

But we were not acting irresponsibly. We passed that bill in 1945 because we were anxious to stimulate by tax reduction the transition of our economy from war to peace and we adopted a remedy suited to the purpose. The bill before us is in aid of the same general objective.

Now to contrast the situations. We are not proposing a $6,000,000,000 tax reduction. The bill before us contemplates $3,200,000,000 of reduction. We are not offering our bill under the cloud of a $53,000,000,000 deficit. Under all of the estimates before us, including those of the administration, we will have balanced budgets with surpluses in the fiscal years 1947 and 1948.

We who sponsor this bill accept the estimates of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation that the income payments for the fiscal year 1948 will be $170,000,000,000; that this will yield net receipts of $41,400,000,000. From this we subtract the Senate's estimate of expenditures for the fiscal year of thirty-three billions. This leaves an estimated surplus for the fiscal year of $8,400,000,000. We subtract from this the effect on the revenue if any should develop—of the bill before us, to wit, $3,200,000,000, which leaves an estimated surplus for debt reduction and contingencies of $5,200,000,000.

The conservative nature of the $170,000,000,000 estimate of national-income payments from which follows the estimate of receipts of $41,400,000,000 is appreciated when we recall that under information released a few days ago by the Department of Commerce, the national-income payments for the first quarter of this year were running at the annual rate of $176,700,000,000. Not overlooking price reductions which may occur, it is reasonable to believe that these income payments are not apt to decline very much for some time to come in view of the expanding pattern of increased wages over the United States and large corporate profits not yet reflected.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. In estimating the income of $41,400,000,000, does the Senator make allowance for any possible income from Government corporations or public-debt accounts or special accounts of trust funds? Has the Senator been able to secure any information as to the possible income from those sources?

Mr. MILLIKIN. The estimate of $41,400,000,000 proceeds from the estimate of $170,000,000,000 in national income. I should say that some of those factors enter into the calculation of national income, and I shall be glad to try to secure the exact figures.

Mr. AIKEN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr TAFT. I think the figures used for the purposes of this agreement are the same as those which are calculated in the President's budget. They were included in the $39,100,000,000 figure.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Yes. Let me repeat that the Department of Commerce has just told us that the national income for the second quarter of this year is running at an annual rate of $176,700,000,000. Remember that we are basing our estimates on $170,000,000,000. Let me suggest again that any tendency to lag, if there should be one, will be held up for some time to come by increased wages the pattern of which is spreading over the country, and by corporate profits which have not yet been fully reflected.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. Does the Senator remember the month represented by the figure 176.7?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I think it was in the month of March.

Mr. HAWKES. I wish to say to the Senator that I have heard that at the present time the national income is running on an even higher basis than that.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I should not be at all surprised, for the reasons just mentioned, namely, wage increases and unreflected corporate profits.

Mr. HAWKES. I think this might be a good place to interrupt the Senator——

Mr. MILLIKIN. National income, as distinguished from national income payments, is in excess of $180,000,000,000.

Mr. HAWKES. That was the point. I wished to bring out at this place in the Senator's remarks the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Snyder, when asked a number of times on the witness stand if he saw any recession from the present rate of national income, left the definite impression, as I recall, that he saw no recession in sight. Am I correct?

Mr. MILLIKIN. He made it very clear that there is no serious recession in the contemplation of the Treasury's estimates.

Mr. HAWKES. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MILLIKIN. If I may supplement my answer to the Senator, the Department of Commerce gives total income payments, adjusted seasonally at the annual rate, for January of $177,100,000,000; for February, one hundred and seventy-seven billion, and for March, one hundred and seventy-six billion seven hundred million which is the figure I used.

Mr. HAWKES. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Those who do not believe that an expenditure reduction of $4,500,000,000 can be made, or that national income payments for the fiscal year 1948 will not average $170,000,000,000 can cut a billion dollars off at both ends, or $2,000,000,000 at either end, and there will be sufficient left to meet the Senate's plan of $2,600,000,000 of debt reduction.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. I observe at page 70 of the hearings the following colloquy between the chairman and Secretary Snyder:

The CHAIRMAN. In your statement yesterday o page 1, you said, "Nor do I believe that a tax reduction is necessary at this time to assure a continued high level of production."

We had quite a few questions and answers yesterday with the objective of probing your opinion as to whether we were in for a recession, and as I got the burden of your remarks, you are not predicting a recession for fiscal year 1948; am I correct in that?

Secretary SNYDER. That is correct.

I take it that at least in part the Senator bases his comment on Secretary Snyder's utterances in the testimony which I have just quoted.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Yes. I may say to the distinguished Senator that the same thought was reiterated at a number of points in the testimony.

These points will be expanded in due course. I only wish to remind Senators, in aid of a further preliminary perspective, that the proposed income-tax reduction may not result in any revenue reduction. Our past history indicates that in an economy similar to that now existing, income-tax reduction may go hand-in-hand with increased revenue. This was well stated during the consideration in the Senate of the Revenue Act of 1945. I quote from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 9, part 8, page 9948:

The rate of tax does not determine what comes into the Treasury. The bill, so far as it affects corporations, is properly a tax rate-reducing bill. It will not necessarily reduce the amount of revenue coming in. Indeed, if it has the effect which it is hoped it will have, it will so stimulate the expansion of business as to bring in a greater total revenue. I think if one will look back to World War I, he will understand precisely what I am now trying to say.

Mr. President, while it is somewhat aside, I shall pause in the presentation of my prepared statement to emphasize this fact: The Revenue Act of 1918 was approved February 24, 1919, some months after the actual cessation of hostilities. In a sense, that act was both a war-tax act and an immediate postwar tax rate-reduction act, since it provided one schedule of rates for 1918 and a somewhat lower schedule for 1919, 1920, and 1921. The act of November 23, 1921, made more substantial reductions in rates. The recovery of the country from a state of depression in 1920 and 1921 was rapid. The Revenue Acts of 1924 and 1926 made still further tax reductions, but the income from tax revenues of the Government increased through all of that period.

Those were the remarks of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the distinguished ranking minority member of the Senate Committee on Finance, and then its superb chairman.

Is it possible that, confronted with a balanced budget and surpluses—a consummation for which we have looked with anxious yearning for all these years—we shall dissipate our thoroughly supportable resolution to reduce individual income taxes and yield instead to indecision and delay, so that we may have a further period within which to flagellate ourselves, on the assumption—which should be completely unacceptable and which should be indignantly rejected—that this is necessary to hold us to Senate policies to which we already have committed ourselves?

I hope that we have not been steeped in deficits and despair so long that we simply cannot believe good news, and must meet it with dolorous misgivings. I hope that on further reflection Members of the minority will join us in this effort to restore without delay to 49,000,000 income taxpayers $3,200,000,000 of their own money.

Mr. President, I have agreed to yield to the Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the first committee amendment.

Mr. GEORGE obtained the floor.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Capper	George
Baldwin	Chavez	Green
Ball	Connally	Gurney
Barkley	Cooper	Hatch
Brewster	Cordon	Hawkes
Bricker	Donnell	Hayden
Bridges	Downey	Hickenlooper

Maybank	Stewart
Millikin	Taft

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate at any great length in connection with this matter. Before I take my seat I wish to lodge a motion, not to postpone indefinitely, but to postpone to a day certain, the consideration of the bill. My remarks will necessarily be brief.

I wish to say at the outset that I am not in disagreement with the distinguished chairman of the Senate Finance Committee as to the desirability of reducing individual income-tax rates. I am not in disagreement with the distinguished Senator or with the majority members of the committee respecting the method of reduction adopted in the bill. As a tax-reduction bill, it seems to me that it is a fairly good approach. The same result might be reached by other methods, but that seems to me to be immaterial, because I am, and have been for a long time, thoroughly committed to a reduction of our wartime taxes. Only the initial step is being taken at this time. If we are eventually to sustain our economy, tax rates must be very greatly reduced, beyond the reduction which will be made effective by the approval of either the House or the Senate bill or of some compromise between them.

With that statement, Mr. President, I wish also to give assurance that I have no desire to postpone the decision upon this bill to a date too late for the setting up of the necessary machinery to put the bill into operation if it shall pass and become law.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I could understand and I might be inclined to agree with the remarks of the able Senator from Georgia, the former chairman of the Finance Committee, relative to postponement to June 10, if I felt that we would know any more on June 10 than we know at this time. But I wish respectfully to call to the attention of my colleague from Georgia the fact that last year the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill did not finally become law until June 22, the District of Columbia appropriation bill until July 9, the Interior Department appropriation bill until July 1, the Labor and Federal Security appropriation bill until July 26, the legislative appropriation bill until July 1, the War Department appropriation bill until July 16, the Navy Department appropriation bill until July 8, and the State-Justice-Commerce appropriation bill until approximately July 1. So it seems to me that we shall not have the final figures or shall not know what the final figures will be in respect to the appropriation bills until they have run the gantlet of both Houses of Congress, the conference committees, and have actually gone to the President.

Based on past experience—and last year was not an unusual year—the fact remains, in my opinion, that on June 10 we shall not be any better able to judge what the final figures will be than we are at the present time. For that reason, it seems to me that the fundamental question we have to decide here is whether we shall pass any tax legislation at all which will be effective as of July 1. Certainly if I did not feel that we were going to make a substantial reduction in the Federal debt—a reduction of at least $2,600,000,000—I would not have supported and would not support the motion of the Senator from Colorado. But the figures seem to indicate that not only can the tax reduction of $3,200,000,000 be made, but also a considerably greater amount than the debt reduction of $2,600,000,000.

Since those figures seem to be borne out on the record, and inasmuch as we shall not know any more on June 10 than we know today, I question very much the advisability of postponing action until June 10.

Mr. GEORGE. I thank the Senator from California for his observations. I confess that on June 10 we shall not have absolute knowledge of what the final appropriations will be; but I shall come to that point in the course of my discussion, if I may be permitted to proceed for a few minutes.

Mr. President, in addition to the preliminary remarks which I have already made, I should like to say why I now think we should postpone the consideration of this bill until at least June 10. I am speaking on the basis of the best information which I have been able to obtain—I say to the Senator from California, although it seems he is about to leave the Chamber—and I say that all the major appropriation bills probably will be reported to the House of Representatives by June 12. I have that information upon authority which I regard as authentic. Even in advance of the actual reporting of the appropriation bills, we shall know substantially the pattern set by the House Appropriations Committee. It is true that the House may not agree to the recommendations of its Appropriations Committee, and will not entirely do so. It is also true that the appropriations may be changed by the Senate; undoubtedly that will prove to be true. Finally, in the conference some amounts different from the amounts actually recommended by the House of Representatives Appropriations Committee will no doubt be agreed upon. But when the major appropriation bills clear the House Appropriations Committee, we can begin to get a picture of the expenditures for the fiscal year 1948.

Mr. President, I am very much in agreement with the Senator from Colorado in respect to the legislative budget; I do not think the legislative budget in and of itself would be very helpful to me. Other Senators take a different view of that matter.

What I am primarily concerned about is the appropriations which finally will be made by this Congress. The acid test of what the Congress is going to do is to be found in the appropriation bills themselves, not in the covering resolution in regard to the over-all legislative budget, which now is quietly asleep, or at rest, I should say, in the conference committee of the House and the Senate.

I invite the Senate simply to look at the facts as they stand today. One or two of the appropriation bills have passed both Houses of Congress. Some have only been reported by the House committee and have passed the House of Representatives. The actual reductions made in the Interior Department appropriation bill are, in round figures, in the amount of $134,000,000. The appropriations carried in the Labor-Federal Security appropriation bill have been actually reduced by $103,415,000. I give only the round numbers. The Navy Department appropriation bill, which passed the House of Representatives yesterday, makes cuts under the budget estimates by $377,519,000. The items in the State-Justice-Commerce-Judiciary appropriation bill reduce the budget estimates by $159,650,000, in round numbers. The Treasury-Post Office Departments appropriation bill reduces the budget estimates by $897,072,000 All those reductions constitute a total reduction, as thus far made, of only $1,671,665,267—to give the exact figure.

Included in that figure is an item of $800,000,000 for tax refunds. The $800,000,000 for tax refunds is a very doubtful or dubious cut under the budget estimates. At best, we must pay whatever refunds are finally approved by the taxing authorities or by the courts or by both. Those refunds may not run as high as they have been estimated in the budget, or they may run as high as they have been estimated in the budget. I submit that the reduction made in the Treasury Department appropriation bill by this item of $800,000,000 is almost a figure out of the air; it has very little to commend itself. If that is taken from the actual reductions already made, we have reductions, as thus far accomplished, amounting to a little more than $871,000,000.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point for a question?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. As a matter of fact, even assuming that the tax refund item is a debatable one, as the Senator has quite correctly stated that it is, is not that more than offset by the action taken by the Senate 2 days ago in including in the deficiency appropriation bill an amount to make up the losses of the Commodity Credit Corporation on subsidies, which was set up in the President's budget for next year, and amounted to $830,000,000? The losses themselves only amount, as I recall, to approximately $600,000,000, but the saving in the budget for 1948, under the budget figure, will be $830,000,000. So by paying that this year, that will reduce the necessity of having such an item in the 1948 budget; and that action has already been taken by the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. That was in the 1948 budget, I may say to the Senator, and we are dealing now with the 1948 budget, so far as the expenditure budget is concerned.

Mr. President, I have some information which would lead me to believe that the House Committee on Appropriations will include some further, and perhaps severe, cuts in the expenditure budget. The best information I have been able to obtain thus far—by June 10 we should be able to secure more accurate information—is that the agricultural appropriations will be reduced by around $300,000,000. That is a cut which may not stand in both the House and the Senate. It is not likely that the recommendations of the committee will stand insofar as the agricultural appropriation bill is concerned.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I presume the Senator has this information with respect to the cut in the agricultural appropriation, only through some individual Member of the House. It is only a guess, is it not?

Mr. GEORGE. That is true, and I am so saying. I am merely estimating what would happen if there were a cut of that amount.

Mr. LUCAS. The question I wish to ask is whether or not the Senator knows the break-down in connection with the suggested $300,000,000 cut in agricultural appropriations.

Mr. GEORGE. Not fully. A great many of the provisions relate to soil conservation and certain types of subsidies, but I do not know that the information I have received is correct. I do know, however, that of the estimated savings, as best I can gather information as to them, there may be a report at least from the Committee on Appropriations of the House of a saving of $350,000,000 in the agricultural appropriation bill.

The War Department appropriation, of course, constitutes a considerable item in the President's budget. I should think that if a cut of $900,000,000 were made in that item that would be about all the Congress would sustain.

When we come to the Veterans' Administration and independent offices bill it is almost anybody's guess as to what may be cut in that appropriation; but it would be a miracle if the House and Senate sustained a cut of as much as $700,000,000 in all the items carried in that bill.

Mr. President, we would have an actual cut, as matters now stand, and as I estimate, of not more than $2,786,000,000.

There will be a Treasury surplus at the end of this fiscal year, on July 1, as admitted by the Treasury, of $1,250,000,000. That, added to what it now looks as though we may be able to cut the budget, would total a little better than $4,000,000,000. If the cost of the tax bill is taken off, it seems to me that our surplus will be reduced to about $800,000,000.

Mr. President, I hop I am wrong in these figures, but I wish to see at least what the House Committee on Appropriations intends to do with the important supply bills which are still before it. There is no Member of this body more willing that am I to go along with tax reduction, if the indicated reduction in the expenditure budget seems to justify it.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to ask the Senator the source of his information that there will be a surplus in the Treasury on July 1 of approximately a billion dollars. I understood the Senator to say that was his estimate.

Mr. GEORGE. The Secretary of the Treasury himself estimated that at the beginning of the fiscal year 1948, that is, July 1, 1947, there would be a surplus of $1,200,000,000. I believe I am correct in that statement.

Mr. AIKEN. My reason for asking was that certain information I had received led me to believe that there would be a surplus of about $3,000,000,000.

Mr. GEORGE. I am speaking of the Treasury estimate, and we are so near the end of the fiscal year that it should not be too much of a guess. So I am figuring on a surplus at the beginning of the fiscal year 1948 of $1,250,000,000. What the surplus would be at the end of the fiscal year 1948, if any, with the present tax rates in effect, would depend entirely on the level of business activity, the national income, and so forth. I do not care to guess about that, because I am not able to guess, and I should be the last one to suggest that we are going into a depression; but I do call attention to one fact, namely, that at this time the deterioration of the economy of the whole world, outside the United States, and possibly Canada and some of the South American countries, is definitely marked.

I also wish to call attention to the fact that we cannot remedy the repercussion of a rapid deterioration of the economy of the whole of Europe and of all Asia. I recall very vividly, as I think every other Senator will recall, that the stock market went into a tailspin in October 1929, and there was a tremendous collapse. We might have pulled out of that, I think we would have pulled out of it, but in 1931 the Rothschild Bank of Austria failed, the repercussions of that failure were felt all over Europe, and it was utterly impossible to escape the long depression period which ensued. Our economy is affected, and always will be affected, and especially at this time, by what happens abroad.

I hope we will not be called upon to make further appropriations to aid and assist the European economy, but I do not know what we may have to do to arrest the deterioration in the economy of Europe. If we have to meet an issue of that kind, whether we like it or not, we will be compelled to do so.

I have not given any consideration whatever to the Greek loan, or to other loans we have recently made, in connection with this statement.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. I gather, then, from the Senator's statement regarding the 1929–1931 episode, that he does not subscribe to what was a rather widespread theory that the conditions then were due entirely to our domestic policies.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no, I do not; but I do not want to go back and rehash those old political issues.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. As I understand, the Senator is objecting to guessing what the revenue will be; but do we not always have to guess what it will be? Are the revenues not always uncertain, and can we base our guess on anything better than what we are basing it on today?

Mr. GEORGE. I think we can.

Mr. TAFT. We are conservative——

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator will bear with me a moment, I will tell him why I think we can.

Mr. TAFT. In the last analysis, of course, the estimate of revenues for the next 18 months, or next 15 months——

Mr. GEORGE. Thirteen months.

Mr. TAFT. Is bound to be a guess. It cannot be anything but a guess. We may have a depression, we may have a boom, certain things may happen in Europe, they may not happen in Europe. It seems to me there cannot be an objection to taking a figure on the ground that it is based on a guess, because every estimate of revenue is based on a guess.

Mr. GEORGE. It is based on an estimate; though I concede, of course, that an estimate is more or less of a guess. I do not want the Senator from Ohio to misinterpret what I am saying. I am speaking of conditions that now exist. If there is any man alive who can look at the economy of all Europe and say that it is good, then I should like to see him. I know that it is going to make our task a bit more difficult. I do not say that it necessarily controls us in making our revenue laws; but I do say, and I repeat, that if by June 10 or 12, through the House Appropriation Committee, we can have an actual pattern of what cuts in the expenditure budget will be made, we can proceed with a great deal more confidence and certainly with the consideration of the tax bill.

Mr. President, I know very well that even when the tax bills are passed, both House and Senate, we may be confronted in January or in February with emergency bills to make up a deficit here and there; I understand that; but at the same time I think it is necessary to take certain chances, and I am perfectly willing to concede that it is necessary to take certain chances. At this time, we are looking at conditions as they exist. At the moment, they seem very promising in our own country, and I do not want to say anything that would have even the slightest tendency to undercut whatever business activity or degree of prosperity we hope may grow through 1948; but, on that point, I want to make the observation that the tax cut that is being made will continue beyond 1948. If we were guessing on that one year only; I should be willing to guess at this moment and not wait until the House committee acts. But the cut that is being made in individual income tax rates is going to remain permanently in our revenue laws; at least those cuts will continue through the fiscal year 1948, the fiscal year 1950, and right on. I grant that they are not too great; they are not so great as I think they must ultimately be made; but that brings me back to our present condition, and to the facts that we actually know to exist at this time.

What is the state of our business, Mr. President? How would any Member of the Senate, in a comparable position, act with reference to the reduction of his revenue, before he had ascertained to what extent his expenditures could be cut? As of the first day of this month, the Treasury had outstanding 90-day bills amounting to $16,600,000,000. Bear that figure in mind. It had outstanding other maturities, due or callable by June 30, 1948, the end of the next fiscal year, of $37,600,000,000, or a total of more than $54,000,000,000. Of course, the Treasury has other maturities, in addition to the 90-day bills and in addition to those due or callable by June 30, 1948, due and callable by June 30, 1952, totaling an additional $42,500,000,000, making a total of debt maturing or callable between now and June 30, 1952, of $96,700,000,000. Of course, we also had, over and above these short-terms, obligations which include Treasury notes and Treasury bills and certificates, both the special and the general type, an additional indebtedness of $161,000,000,000. Bear this in mind—it is important—that included in the $161,000,000,000 is $50,000,000,000 of E, F, and G bonds. E bonds are demand notes upon the Treasury, and so are F, and so are G bonds, practically demand notes upon the Treasury.

Therefore, sitting in the place of the Secretary of the Treasury, or sitting in the place of the owner of one's own business, if there existed a situation such as I have described, would not a person in that position want to wait before actually cutting his income, especially when he is asked now, by my motion, to wait only about 20 or 25 days, to see what the picture of his expenditures will actually be, by action of the House Committee on Appropriations, a committee that carries a great deal of weight with respect to expenditures. I want to compliment the House committee. I am anxious for the House committee to cut our expenditure budget. I think, on the whole, they have done a very good job. I do not say that they can reach, as my distinguished friend from Colorado, the chairman of the committee, has assumed, $4,500,000,000. If the expenditure budget is cut $4,500,000,000, or even somewhat less than that, then a tax reduction can be made, and the national debt can also be reduced by the amount of the $2,600,000,000 that was ordered in the Senate.

But, Mr. President, there are the short-term 90-day notes falling due within the next 3 months, in the sum of $16,600,000,000; there are falling due other obligations within the fiscal year 1948 of $37,600,000,000. There are E, F, and G bonds of $50,000,000,000, included in the $161,000,000,000; which may, almost overnight, become a charge on the Treasury.

I am speaking of a condition. I do not know what will happen in the fiscal year 1948. As the distinguished Senator from Ohio says, it is, of course, anybody's guess as to what may happen. I concede that. But I am speaking of the conditions that now exist. I am also speaking of the condition that exists throughout the world, which we now know. We know that it is not going to improve materially within the immediate future. That seems to me to make it imperative to wait until June 10, before finally completing the bill.

The distinguished Senator from Colorado has pointed out that the cut in individual income taxes may not actually result in a decline or a reduction in revenue. That is ordinarily true, but I do not believe that a cut of $3,200,000,000 in individual income taxes will have very great effect upon our revenue income, as a stimulant. I cannot see how it can. It might check or tend to check a decline in revenue, but it is altogether too little, as I see it, to suggest that it could increase very greatly our revenue.

In 1945, when the war ended, I favored tax reduction. I favored it very strongly. Although there are a great many people in the country, some Members of the Senate, who have protested against the cuts that were then made in taxes, I am as confident as I am of anything that if we had retained the excess-profits tax, the capital-stock tax, and the high corporate normal and surtax rates, we would not have passed through the transition period without a crash. I have never been afraid to assume my responsibility for that cut. At that time we entirely relieved 12,000,000 taxpayers in the lowest brackets, and we also relieved all taxpayers by a 5-percent cut, which was not, of course, very substantial. I then hoped, and I now hope, that we might be able now or in the very near future to make a further tax cut in the individual income rates.

I agree as thoroughly as does anyone with what the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee has said, which the majority has often repeated, that it is necessary to reduce individual tax rates. I personally do not quarrel with the method applied in the reduction of these rates in the pending bill if we are to have a reduction of $3,200,000,000. There are other Senators who think that the reduction should come by way of increasing the exemptions and relieving a great many people in the lower income brackets.

The defect, the hardship, the weakness in our present revenue law, as I see it, lies, so far as individual rates are concerned, in the high surtaxes, from the lowest bracket to the topmost bracket, and, therefore, I have not quarreled and do not intend to quarrel with the method employed in making the cuts.

There is one thing I believe would be advisable, but failure to adopt it will not restrain me from voting for and supporting a tax cut, if when the House has acted on appropriations we can see how we can make the cut, and that is that I believe it would be advisable to put into effect, whatever reductions are made, the 1st day of January 1948, rather than July 1, 1947. But that point I do not regard as controlling. The question is whether we can safely now proceed, without the knowledge which can come to us within 20 or 25 days which, although when it comes to us will be subject to certain modifications and some changes, will nevertheless give us a very clear picture of what the cut in the expenditures is going to be.

Mr. President, I lay down as a sound principle that we cannot, in our present circumstances, afford to cut taxes based upon the prospect of an increased income; that we cannot, in present circumstances, predicate a sound tax bill upon what we think—projecting ourselves into the future—is going to be the economic condition of this country and our national income. The only sound basis is to reduce the expenditure budget, and the moment the cut in the expenditure budget goes down even to $3,000,000,000 then I could, with some degree of confidence, say that we could proceed with a tax-reduction bill, because we could be assured that the surplus already accumulated, and which will be realized, of course, on July 1, just ahead of us, would enable us to make some payments upon our debt.

Mr. President, let me say—and I do not speak as a partisan on tax matters at all—that I think the Congress of the United States could make no greater mistake now than to cut taxes, knowing that it will not be able to restore them to the old level whatever happens. No greater calamity could befall the American economy than to have a balanced budget as of now, and, then perhaps in fiscal 1949, or in fiscal 1950, find ourselves with an unbalanced budget and another period of deficit spending. That would take the heart out of American business; it would take the life out of the American taxpayers. Although the payment of taxes is always hard, so long as the income remains at its present high level we can somehow at least struggle along if we were to defer the tax cut until January 1 next.

The motion which I now make, Mr. President, is for the postponement of the consideration of the bill to a day certain, and I designate that day as June 10, because I believe that will give us an opportunity to obtain the pattern of the appropriations which will be made for the fiscal year 1948.

Mr. President, this is all I have to say at the present time. With respect to the reduction of taxes generally and with respect to the general principle of taxation, I myself am not out of step with what is desired by the chairman of the Finance Committee in the pending bill. I simply believe that it would be the part of wisdom and would enable us to proceed more intelligently if we could postpone the consideration of the bill until June 10.

Mr. President, of course, there are other Senators who wish to discuss the matter, but so far as I am concerned, I have no further remarks to make on the question. I have no desire to delay unduly consideration of the bill. I say that to the Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] to postpone further consideration of H. R. 1 until June 10.

THE ALTERNATIVES TO INTERNATIONAL CONTROL OF ATOMIC ENERGY

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, for many months I have been asserting that the overshadowing problem of making a lasting peace rests in the conclusion of a successful control of the murderous use of atomic energy.

Harry Truman, Clement Attlee, and Mackenzie King comprehended this when they declared to the world on November 15, 1945, their determination to share the peaceful and fruitful products of the energy with all mankind and their determination to seek effective prohibitions against its deadly use.

The United States has taken the lead in the formulation of an international program to implement this policy. I take considerable satisfaction that I in a small way contributed to the formulation of that policy. On September 6, 1945, I said on the floor of the Senate that the national and international control of this force must be brought about. On December 5, 1945, I stated my belief that an international authority, internationally owned and inspected, was the medium of such control.

It was because I firmly believed this that I welcomed with a peculiar satisfaction the Acheson-Lilienthal report and the Baruch program. I have, Mr. President, honestly endeavored to test for objective truth and fairness those proposals. I am not ashamed to confess that I have examined and reexamined them in the early hours of the dawn on many occasions. This is a problem which at all hazards must be avoided by insomniacs. But examine them as I would, in consultation and reexamination the answer was the same. Our proposals stand the acid test of logic and conscience and good ethics. I am more than ever convinced that in their acceptance lies the hope of peace.

Some of us make the mistake of believing that the world's peoples know what the United States has proposed. Mr. President, I dare say that they do not know. In a trip I made abroad last fall, I ascertained that what we had proposed was scarcely known in Europe, and the few who pretended to some knowledge on the subject were in error as to what we had proposed. Mr. President, what is our plan? What have we proposed? If our plan is not righteous—if we have not proposed a sound moral and ethical solution of this problem, we shall stand indicted before God and man.

In the American Proposals for International Control of Atomic Energy we have proposed that—

> When an adequate system for control of atomic energy including the renunciation of the bomb as a weapon has been agreed upon and put into effective operation and condign punishments set up for violations of the rules of control which are to be stigmatized as international crimes, we propose that (1) manufacture of atomic bombs shall stop; (2) existing bombs shall be disposed of pursuant to the terms of the treaty, and (3) the (International Development) Authority shall be in possession of full information as to the know-how for the production of atomic energy.

In other words, Mr. President, we who possess the most effective military weapon created by man have voluntarily offered to do away with its use if other nations will also refrain from using it. We who possess the secret of the world's most powerful force for the betterment of man's conditions of living voluntarily offer to share that secret with the peoples of the earth, regardless of creed, color, or cash, provided only they agree—and implement that agreement in action—to use it for good and not for evil. On Monday night last, Mr. Gromyko challenged the justice and generosity of that offer. A careful reading of his address indicates that his country has not essentially altered its position on any major point since he announced 11 months ago that our plan was "unacceptable in whole or in part." Mr. Gromyko in his latest speech has strongly reiterated his criticism of the American plan.

He said that the plan envisioned by the American proposals would interfere with the sovereignty and economy of independent states, secure America's atomic monopoly, and impede the development of international confidence and friendship. He reiterated his previous position that the prohibition of atomic weapons must be the first step in any control system, that the elimination of such weapons must begin immediately upon the conclusion of a convention, and that the prohibition of atomic arms should be a concurrent part of a general disarmament.

Mr. President, what is wrong with this position? Do we declare it to be unacceptable simply because we wish to be arbitrary, domineering, and uncooperative? No, Mr. President, we regretfully find the Russian plan unacceptable for the very sufficient reason that it will not give the world the kind of safety and complete security which the world desperately needs in this atomic age.

Let us examine the Russian position in greater detail. In essence, what they propose is an immediate convention outlawing atomic weapons without waiting for agreement on measures of control and punishment; that punishment be left to the Security Council, where there is to be no curbing of the right of veto; and that the International Agency have very limited powers of inspection and no proprietary right of operation.

Under the Russian proposals America would be forced to disarm unilaterally. Limited inspection would give no security against secret violations and national rather than international production and control of atomic energy would increase, rather than diminish, national rivalry and antagonism. It could not promise the peoples of the world freedom from atomic warfare. It would withhold the abundant blessings inherent in atomic energy.

Mr. Gromyko says that the American plan would mean interference with national sovereignty. Certainly that is correct. But will not the United States, with its vast atomic development, be giving up more and enduring greater interference to its sovereignty than will any other nation?

It is strange the way nations, as well as individuals, cling to definitions and to terms that modern science and invention have made meaningless. Gromyko emphasizes sovereignty, and thereby confesses that he does not have sufficient comprehension of the force of atomic energy. He talks about sovereignty in outworn and obsolete terms. It will do us no good to worship a 1944 definition of sovereignty if in doing so we find ourselves despoiled upon its altar. It is precisely because Gromyko does not realize that his concept of sovereignty has been destroyed as surely as Hiroshima and Nagasaki were destroyed, that he falls into error.

Mr. Gromyko says that the American plan seeks to preserve our atomic monopoly. Mr. President, our purpose, made plain for all to see, is diametrically the opposite. It was made plain in the Truman-King-Attlee declaration which, under American initiative declared:

> We are prepared to share, on a reciprocal basis with others of the United Nations, detailed information concerning the practical industrial application of atomic energy just as soon as effective enforceable safeguards against its use for destructive purposes can be devised.

It was made plain again in our domestic act which, after providing for the common defense and security, provides in section 10 (a) (2)—

> That the dissemination of scientific and technical information relating to atomic energy should be permitted and encouraged so as to provide that free interchange of ideas and criticisms which is so essential to scientific progress.

This, after effective safeguards have been secured.

It was again made plain in the Acheson-Lilienthal plan and the Baruch proposals by the provisions for the establishment of an internationally controlled Atomic Development Authority.

What kind of monopoly is this, Mr. President, which stretches forth the hand, not to take, but to give? What kind of monopoly is this which would reach into the far and undeveloped places of the earth not to exploit and enslave, but to bring freedom from fear and freedom from want? And let there be no mistake. There is inherent in atomic energy the means to the highway of freedom from want. Byproducts of atomic energy used in the study of plant life may eventually reveal nature's secret of photosynthesis and soil fertility and lead to the improvement and the replenishing of the world's food supply. This is something not for the far distant future but for our own times. It is because we want to bring these things to mankind everywhere as well as because we want to remove fear that we have made our proposals.

Yet, Mr. President, Mr. Gromyko finds in this generosity only selfishness; and the American plan he finds entirely unacceptable.

I think it should be stated firmly and quickly that the Russian plan cannot be considered by us, not because we wish to be arbitrary or uncooperative, but simply because the plan does not furnish the world with the kind of security that is so desperately needed in the age of atomic weapons.

There are many of us, Mr. President, who have given much thought and study to the terrible situation that would arise in the event that no agreement could be reached for the successful control of atomic energy. To anyone who has reflected upon the facts of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, consideration of the alternatives is productive of a state of profound sorrow. God knows the world needs peace. God knows the world wants peace, and yet we must somehow convince the peoples of the world that war, however unnecessary and however unwanted, is not beyond the realm of possibility in the event of failure to agree on a system for controlling atomic energy.

Mr. President, God forbid we should finally fail in our endeavors; but suppose we do. Suppose we are finally driven to admit that it has become impossible to achieve agreement, what then? What are the conditions which will then confront the world? What are the alternative courses of action from which we shall then be forced to choose? Mr. President, to assume the worst is not to exorcise it into being. To consider the alternatives is not to prefer them. In the light of the realities of world conditions is it not the better part of wisdom to prepare for the worst while continuing to hope for the best?

Mr. President, on that awesome day, should it come to pass, when the negotiations break down and the negotiators hurry back to their homelands to warn their people, I would not want my country to be taken by surprise. I would not want my people to be left stunned and unprepared for the kind of world we shall then find ourselves living in.

On that day, Mr. President, the destiny of civilization will hang in the balance. Men will look upon the raw and evil face of death and destruction and fear to breathe lest the scales be tipped. When all is hushed the trembling of a leaf may echo like the roar of cannon and a single word may send the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse charging over the earth like the whirlwind of doom. How shall we then face up to the future? What shall we then be able to do?

Mr. President, when the world can agree only on disagreement, we will, in my considered opinion, have left to us only four alternatives; none satisfactory and all fraught with danger.

First, we could then frankly, openly, and fearfully launch ourselves upon an atomic arms race against Russia; seeking to make even bigger and better atomic bombs and other weapons; striving to keep ahead; hoping to be able to retaliate in case of attack but living from moment to moment under the ministry of fear because of the impossibility of knowing when or where an attack might hit us. It is true we might disperse our cities and relocate our industries, but to be effective such dispersal and relocation would cost approximately $300,000,000,000 which is more than half the estimated value of every man-made improvement in the United States.

The cost of such a program added to the financial burden of our present debt would certainly disrupt our entire social and economic system and could result in a Fascist type of rule by edict.

Of all the nations of the earth we are the most vulnerable to atomic attack, because our concentrated industries and crowded cities make excellent targets. Because we are not a police state, it would be impossible for us to evacuate our cities and relocate our industries secretly.

Behind the iron curtain Russia could move her industries and her people as she did in the last war, without the rest of the world knowing a thing about it. Because of the vast untenanted lands to the east, because of the still rich cities to the west in Europe, she could afford to consider a few of her own cities expendable. It has been said that an aggressor would not use atomic bombs because destroyed cities constitute poor booty. But the sacrifice of American cities, or even of the whole country, might be considered none too high a price for the conquest of the rest of the world.

It would not even be necessary for an enemy to destroy our cities in order to destroy us. By the use of radioactive particles, or death dust, as it has been called, in combination with disease germs, every living thing in our cities could be annihilated and the cities themselves left standing and empty of resistance to an invader. With America out of the way, who would be left to stop an aggressor intent on world domination?

Some of my friends take comfort in the thought that since gas was prohibited in the last war and was not used, a simple convention or treaty outlawing the use of the atomic bomb will protect us in the next war. This fallacy is based on the belief that the gang that wiped out Lidice and operated the human furnaces at Buchenwald were restrained in the use of poison gas because of their plighted word. They were restrained from the use of gas because they realized that gas was not the controlling weapon, that there was a defense against it, and that it could be turned against them more successfully than they could use it offensively. But the atomic bomb is the controlling weapon of war. If used in sufficient quantities and without notice all counter strokes of significance can be discounted and written off. Dictators have never in the course of human history been restrained by a treaty. Certainly a nation which relied on one for its defense against atomic attack would erect a Maginot line of paper that would have more fatal and catastrophic effects than the steel one for which it could be named.

No, a unilateral arms race with Russia will bring neither safety nor peace. It is no satisfactory alternative to an international agreement.

A second alternative is to let Russia go her own way if she prefers that and to proceed without her. But an international control plan without Russia would give us no control where we most need it. It would leave unaccomplished that thing which most needs accomplishment. It would make it easier and quicker for Russian espionage to discover the secrets of bomb production without any restraints, by way of inspection and control over her own activities. No, a control system which does not control Russia in this field will bring neither safety nor peace. It is no satisfactory alternative to a world-wide control system.

Another alternative which has been suggested is based on this type of reasoning: If an atomic war is inevitable, and there is no adequate defense against the atomic attack, since the first assault may be the last, then the best defense is offense. I have long contended that the necessity for atomic control has made obsolete our old definitions of aggression. I assert that for the first time in human history the failure to agree to a sane, effective, and righteous control of a weapon of war constitutes in and of itself an act of aggression. The holding of such an instrument of death over the heads of mankind is a species of assault far more productive of a state of fear and its paralyzing consequences than actual battery itself. The more imaginative, the more creative, the more cultured and sensitive a person is, the more horrible would be his perception of an impending oblivion. Away would go all the values that make life in a democracy worth the candle.

The last thing in the world we want to have happen is to be forced to throw the first atomic bomb in a war of total destruction. I correct myself; it is the last thing but one we want to have happen. The last thing we want to have happen is to have someone else throw such a bomb at us.

Mr. President, we thank God that we would shrink from imposing an atomic Pearl Harbor. It is not our way of doing things. Once launched on such a course, we would have to rule the world to maintain our safety, and we might have to sacrifice our democratic form of government in the attempt. It is certainly not a satisfactory alternative to an international agreement.

The last alternative, and the fourth, which suggests itself is this: Let the nations of the world, in convention assembled, vote on a resolution making the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission proposals the world plan. Invite all peace-loving nations to adhere to the plan and to declare that any nation which refuses by a specified date to accept a plan which has been democratically approved by the majority of the nations of the world is thereby denominated an aggressor. By such action the nations would be seeking only to assure the peace of the world in a most dangerous situation. Failure by even one nation to give such assurance forces the whole world to remain postured for war, when the overwhelming universal desire of all mankind is that the world be postured for peace.

No overt act is necessary to commit aggression when it comes to atomic energy. If I but have a dangerous dog and I fail to keep him in restraint, my neighbors can hale me into court and the law will punish me. To argue that atomic energy is inherently dangerous to the peace of the world is to belabor the obvious. Failure to show evidence of peaceful intentions with regard to it, is of itself evidence of aggressive intentions. The peace and safety of the world demand that aggression be stopped before it becomes overt and before it is too late.

The moral consciousness of the world, the war-weary bodies and the peace-loving hearts of the peoples of the world, cry out for an end to covert, as well as overt, acts of aggression. To refuse to cooperate with the rest of the world in the search for universal peace, denies to the world the possibility of living and working free from the fear of war. A colossus striding across the international scene with a chip on his shoulder menaces the peace and security of every home and every hut throughout the world. There can be no escape from the contagion of fear; it threatens us, one and all.

At this point I can do no better than to quote the immortal words of Franklin Roosevelt:

> When an epidemic of physical disease starts to spread, the community approves and joins in a quarantine of the patients in order to protect the health of the community against the spread of the disease.

In 1937, when President Roosevelt uttered those far-sighted words, the Hitler aggression might have been stopped by a world quarantine. That costly lesson must profit the world should any nation refuse to adhere to the agreed plan by the specified date.

While this alternative may prove to be the best way to deal with such a desperately dangerous situation, it would of course be indeed preferable for all the nations of the earth to reach agreement.

May God grant it will never be necessary to us to choose among the alternatives. May He make it possible for the nations of the world to come to agreement, so that they may stand, not arm against arm, but eye to eye, looking to a world of peace, of prosperity, and of freedom. God willing and man striving, that can be possible for us all.

CONFIRMATION OF NOMINATIONS IN THE ARMED SERVICES

Mr. BREWSTER obtained the floor.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, it is my intention at this time to report to the Senate certain nominations which have been approved by the Committee on Armed Services. It is urged that these nominations be confirmed promptly, for the reason that in the list of nominations are those of cadets at the West Point Military Academy and midshipmen at Annapolis. Graduation time is approaching, and in order to provide time for the printing of diplomas, and so forth, it will be necessary to have the nominations confirmed by the Senate immediately.

Let me say further that the committee has also approved and has authorized me to report to the Senate certain other nominations involving promotions and transfers, all of which are routine. A large number of them relate to the Naval Reserve, such as appointments in the Regular Navy, as ensigns, of Naval Reserve midshipmen.

There are also some transfers in the Regular Army, without promotion. I further call the attention of the Senate to the fact that included in the list is the nomination of a new Surgeon General, Brig. Gen. Raymond W. Bliss, to be Surgeon General of the Army, and the nomination of his assistant, Colonel Armstrong. Also there is the matter of placing one vice admiral on the retired list, as a vice admiral.

Now, Mr. President, with this brief explanation, and with the further statement that the nominations were ordered reported from the Committee on Armed Services, I ask unanimous consent that, as in executive session for this purpose only, the Senate receive these nominations, and consider them en bloc, and I move that they be confirmed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request submitted by the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. LUCAS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. President, I did not quite understand the urgency of the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. GURNEY. The urgency is that included in all these nominations—and they were considered en bloc by the committee—they are this year's graduates of West Point and Annapolis. June week is approaching, certain papers must be ready, and the authorities would like to have time to have the diplomas printed and to have the necessary preliminary work done in connection with the graduations at the two Academies.

Mr. LUCAS. As I understand the Senator's remarks, what is requested is absolutely necessary before the students at Annapolis and West Point can get their diplomas.

Mr. GURNEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. LUCAS. And it is urgent to that extent?

Mr. GURNEY. I think so.

Mr. LUCAS. I shall not object, but a great number of postmaster nominations have been sent to the Senate, some 800, which have been held up from the time they were received.

Mr. GURNEY. I understand that, but my unanimous-consent request is that, because of the conditions regarding the cadets at West Point and the midshipmen at Annapolis, the Senate, as in executive session, consider only their nominations.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield?

Mr. GURNEY. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to suggest to my colleague from Illinois, in whose effort regarding the post-office nominations I joined a few days ago, that as a member of the Committee on the Armed Services, of which the distinguished Senator from South Dakota is the chairman, I know these nominations were reported unanimously by the committee with the distinct understanding that the chairman would as soon as possible make the request he has submitted, because unless the matter is disposed of very quickly, the men in the Academies will not be graduated in the regular legal and routine way. So I shall ask the Senator from Illinois if he will not let these nominations go through without further objection, although I share the sentiments he has expressed. However, I believe that in view of the circumstances as outlined by the Senator from South Dakota, a special case is made out, and we do not want to penalize some other nominees while trying to get justice for some in whose behalf I know the Senator from Illinois has worked diligently.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield?

Mr. GURNEY. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I am not going to enter a formal objection to the present consideration of the nominations, but I hope that, at the proper time, the Senator from South Dakota will join the Senator from Illinois and others in seeing that action is had on the postmaster nominations which have been sent to the Senate by the President of the United States, and who are now standing by awaiting action on the part of the Senate. I appreciate that the young men graduating from the Naval Academy and the Academy at West Point are entitled to consideration by the Senate, but, at the same time, a great number of disabled veterans, who went forth and fought for their country in World War I and World War II, are standing by at this moment, at the crossroads in every State in the Union, waiting for the Senate to take the same generous action the Senator from South Dakota is asking it to take on behalf the cadets and midshipmen, in order that these veterans, too, may have an opportunity to make a livelihood in their own communities, and in order that they may get the recognition to which they are justly entitled under the laws of the land, and under what should be every senatorial privilege and courtesy.

Mr. GURNEY. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota, the nominations in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps reported favorably from the Committee on Armed Services by the Senator from South Dakota will be considered en bloc, and, without objection, the nominations are confirmed, and the President will be notified immediately.

REDUCTION OF INDIVIDUAL INCOME TAX PAYMENTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce individual income tax payments.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I wish to speak briefly about the proposed delay in the consideration of the revenue bill. As a member of the committee which considered the bill, it is my hope that what I understand to be the pending question, namely, a motion to delay consideration of the bill to June 10, shall not be favorably acted upon, since if there is to be tax reduction effective July 1, I think all are agreed that we must proceed forthwith to the consideration of the bill.

I am somewhat puzzled by the logic of the Senator from Georgia in view of what has hitherto taken place, since in the Senate committee, when this matter was being considered, there was, as I recall—and I want to do the Senator full justice—a motion by the Senator from Georgia to fix the date of the tax reduction as of January 1, 1948. How it is possible to pass upon the fiscal state of the Treasury on January 1, 1948, and yet have very serious doubt as to the fiscal state of the Treasury on July 1, 1947, is one of the questions I have been unable to resolve.

It seems to me that if we are able to forecast our situation for 7 months, we certainly should be able to forecast it for the intervening month, which is the only difference between us, so far as the period involved is concerned, in the proposal presented by the bill as reported by the Senate committee.

In order to have before us clearly the precedents in this matter, I have had compiled a history of the major tax legislation covering the period of the last 20 years, and I shall ask that there be included in the RECORD at this point a transcript of this analysis, showing that in 9 out of 19 cases of revenue legislation, the bills have been passed far earlier in the session of Congress than is now contemplated, so that in every one of those instances the Congress must not only have been proceeding upon estimates, but upon estimates far in advance of the conditions which we are now able seriously to consider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine?

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, this exhibit shows the approximate date, during the session of the Congress when the tax bills were passed, under three categories—early in the session, the middle of the session, and late in the session—and I think it will be very useful in the consideration of the motion made by the Senator from Georgia, for whose views in fiscal matters I continue to entertain the very highest regard.

I wish to call attention to the history of this period, beginning in 1926, to show that at all times, under all administrations, in both Houses, it has always been recognized that Congress, in passing revenue legislation, must proceed upon estimates. I understand the Senator from Georgia recognizes this practice, but prefers that certain of the clouds in the sky shall be dissolved before we proceed further.

The result, however, must be that any possible reduction on July 1, 1947, would be rendered illusory by such action, and it is for that reason I feel very strongly, and in full accord with the many members of the committee and of the Senate and of the House, that we should proceed with this matter forthwith.

I cite from the RECORD for December 10, 1925, when the revenue legislation of that year was being considered in the House of Representatives, a comment on the situation by Mr. Collier, of Mississippi, a Democratic Member. I trust Senators will notice that throughout this history there runs the constant conflict between Treasury estimates and congressional estimates, that the current issue with which we are concerned here, and which the Senator from Colorado has so ably presented, is nothing at all new, that it was not discovered in this session, that perhaps the Treasury experts are too conservative or too optimistic, that the House and Senate have always found it necessary to exercise a certain degree of independent judgment, and that the results in many instances have completely vindicated their conclusions. And so I quote Mr. Collier, Democrat, from Mississippi, to the following effect:

Now, why do I make the statement that I am willing to vote for the repeal of special taxes which will cost nearly $150,000,000—

In those days, I may interpolate, they were discussing comparatively moderate sums—

When we have heard from the chairman of the committee that the advice from the Treasury is that $325,000,000 is as far as we could go without danger. I make it for two reasons—one may be political and the other a common-sense mathematical one. One is because I have no confidence in these estimates.

We all remember that the 1924 bill was in the hands of the President some time before it was finally signed, and there were many vague rumors that it might meet with a veto because the Treasury experts, headed by Mr. McCoy, their chief expert and statistician, had told us that the bill would not only give no substantial relief, but the repeal of certain special taxes together with the unscientific lowering of the surtax rates would result in an annual deficit of nearly $300,000,000. But Congress had heard the prophecies of these experts before and insisted on the 40 percent rate.

I do not wish to make a reflection on Mr. McCoy. I believe he is an able and conscientious statistician, but he made an awful poor guess in 1924. He made an even poorer guess in 1922.

In January 1922, the Treasury Department through its actuaries came before the Committee on Ways and Means and told us that there would be a deficit of $279,000,000 for the year 1923. Instead of a deficit there was a surplus of over $300,000,000. These actuaries' opinions were estimated only on the current year, when they had full information of the condition of business before them.

When prophets make prophecies and I find they turn out so differently from what they said, then I lose confidence. Did the 1924 bill give relief? Under the heavy surtaxes of 1924, paid under the 1921 act, we presented to the American people * * * a rebate of 25 percent. That was some relief. At the same time, instead of that deficit of over $200,000,000 as stated by Mr. McCoy and $320,000,000 as stated by Mr. Mills, there was a surplus of $290,000,000. When we are confronted with a mistake of $400,000,000, when less than $2,000,000,000 were intended to be collected, I think we can safely say that we may regard with some doubt future statements coming from the same source. Again, that is not all. I do not believe I am divulging any of the executive sessions of the committee when I say that it is the belief of all of us on the committee * * * that practically every estimate of expenditures from the Department was an overestimate and every estimate for collection of taxes was an underestimate. I do not criticize the Treasury Department for being careful, but they are overcautious.

That quotation from the remarks of Mr. Collier is found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 67, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, pages 644 and 645. I may point out that this was in the period following the close of World War I; somewhat later than the present period, but in the same period of reconstruction.

We now come to a statement on December 8, 1925, by Mr. Green, of Iowa, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, introducing on the floor of the House the revenue bill which later became law in 1926, 6 months before the end of the session and 5 months before the estimates went into effect. In introducing this bill, Mr. Green said:

Last spring, during the Sixty-eighth Congress, it became evident that the revenues which would be received under the act of 1924 would be far larger than were necessary to carry on the proper functions of the Government. The Treasury then estimated, as I recollect, that $250,000,000 surplus would be produced for the fiscal year 1925, although the original estimate has been only $67,884,000 and a surplus of about $250,000,000 for the fiscal year 1926.

That is cited, again, from the same CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 67, page 519.

In the debate in the Senate on the revenue bill of 1926, the late Senator Harrison of Mississippi expressed his doubt as to the accuracy of Treasury estimates of Government income and expenditures in the past. I think we all recall the position which Senator Harrison occupied in the consideration of fiscal matters throughout his distinguished public career. He said:

The Secretary of the Treasury said at that time (when the revenue bill of 1924 was being considered) that the Treasury would stand for only a reduction of $325,000,000. The Democrats contended that it would stand a still greater reduction.

It is interesting to note that here we have the other side of the aisle contending for the very principle which they oppose today.

Events have proved that the minority was correct. Even in 1924 we gave to the country a $400,000,000 reduction instead of $325,-

000,000 over the protest of the present Secretary of the Treasury.

The Secretary of the Treasury having been wrong both times previously when he made an estimate and asked for the passage of a tax reduction bill, and having been mistaken anywhere from $200,000,000 to $300,000,000 it is reasonable to assume that he is wrong this time. He is merely guessing now, as he guessed twice before. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 67, 69th Cong., 1st sess., p. 2882.)

So that it is not new for a Secretary of the Treasury apparently not to possess infallibility in his estimates. We have seen the variance in the estimates under the present Secretary of the Treasury, by billions of dollars in the developments of recent months.

Coming down to the later date of 1932, we have a distinguished sponsor of a distinctly different ideological point of view in Representative Fiorello LaGuardia. I think it may be of some significance, because I think certain of Mr. LaGuardia's comrades have been most critical of any attempts at tax reduction at this time.

Speaking on March 18, 1932, in the House debate regarding the revenue bill of 1932, Mr. LaGuardia said:

There seems to have been a rather deliberate attempt to confuse the membership on anticipated revenues for the year 1931. Of course the revenue from income of 1931 at its best can be only an estimate. Whether or not these estimates were officially considered by the Committee on Ways and Means, of course I do not know, but I do know that a very conservative estimate has been made—

I think that certainly applies to the figures of the very conservative chairman of the Finance Committee, the Senator from Colorado, today—and that the information was known and available to the membership of the committee. They are based on a most drastic reduction from the last available returns after proper comparisons were made. The estimate is most conservative.

There followed a comparison of income in 1930, based on returns filed August 31, 1931, and estimates for 1932. Representative LaGuardia then continued:

Surely all must admit that sufficient allowance has been made for reduced incomes.

That is from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 18, 1932, volume 75, part 6, page 6468, the Seventy-second Congress, first session.

I come down to 1935; and again I call to the witness stand the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee at that time, the Honorable Pat Harrison, of Mississippi, who, in reporting the Revenue Act of 1935, explained the changes made in the House version of the bill. Throughout his explanation runs the admission that the amounts reported are based on estimates by Treasury experts and committee experts. He spoke as follows:

It is quite interesting to note that according to the estimates of both the Treasury experts and the commit experts, by virtue of the increase in surtaxes in the Finance Committee proposal only $4,000,000 will be derived from those very great increases. That answers some of the questions as to how much money we can get for the Government by drastic increase of rates on incomes in the higher brackets.

* * * * *

The excess-profits-tax provisions of the House bill, it is estimated, should provide $100,000,000; but in the Senate committee bill we made the tax milder and more liberal, so that we propose to raise only $10,000,000 of increased revenue from excess profits.

* * * * *

In lieu of the inheritance tax the Committee on Finance has recommended an increase of the rates in the present estate-tax structure. From that source there should be derived approximately the same amount which it is estimated would be obtained from the inheritance tax carried by the House bill; that is, the Senate committee proposal would raise $80,000,000 of increased revenue.

From the gift tax, which is a corollary to the increased inheritance tax of the House bill, or to the estate tax in the Senate committee proposal, we should receive $24,000,000 under the House bill from the increased rates on gift taxes, while under the Senate committee proposal the increase, it is estimated, would be $21,000,000. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 79, pt. 12, 74th Cong., 1st sess., August 14, 1935, pp. 13041 and 13042.)

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DONNELL in the chair). Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BREWSTER. I am very happy to yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. MILLIKIN. On the subject of erroneous estimates, may I invite the attention of the distinguished Senator to page 158 of the hearings before the committee. Mr. Lawton was the witness. He was the acting Assistant Director of the Budget. He was asked:

The CHAIRMAN. How much did you miss your budget estimate for the fiscal year 1947?

Mr. LAWTON. From the original?

The CHAIRMAN. Comparing the original with what you now believe will be the results at the end of the year, how much will you have missed your budget estimate?

Mr. LAWTON. The original estimate for the fiscal year 1947 which was contained in the budget document in January 1946 was 31.5. The present estimate is 42.5.

I might say that that estimate had been revised in connection with the budget summation last year, last August, and it was revised in the January budget.

The CHAIRMAN. What will your surplus be at the end of this fiscal year?

Mr. LAWTON. $1,250,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. $1,250,000,000?

Mr. LAWTON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And what was your predicted deficit?

Mr. LAWTON. The original estimate was 4.5 billion?

The CHAIRMAN. And the original estimate you predicted a deficit for the fiscal 1947 of 4.5 billion?

Mr. LAWTON. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. And you will wind up with a surplus of $1,250,000,000.

Mr. LAWTON. Yes. Those estimates have been revised twice in the intervening period.

The CHAIRMAN. As of the present time, from the time of your first estimate, you have missed it $5,750,000,000; is that correct?

Mr. LAWTON. That is the difference between expenditures and receipts; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. A total miss of $5,750,000,000; is that right?

Mr. LAWTON. Yes.

That throws an interesting perspective, I suggest, on all the quarreling they used to have over a $300,000,000 miss.

Mr. BREWSTER. I think it is very revealing as indicating the very great difference in our fiscal situation, as they used to be most meticulous over a few million dollars or a hundred million dollars, and now they miss by $5,000,000,000 and are very complacent about the situation.

Mr. President, the matter of estimates seems to be a source of some perturbation to our friends on the other side of the aisle.

I come now to 1936, and again to a distinguished Democrat, Representative Samuel B. Hill, Democrat, of Washington, who has this to say in discussing tax bill procedures on April 23, 1936:

It has been the practice of the Ways and Means Committee as far back as I know anything of its procedure, first, to get the information through study and through hearings, and then write the bill. I recall in 1932 * * * with hearings on a tax bill before the Ways and Means Committee. * * * The Ways and Means Committee regardless of partisanship, undertook to meet the revenue requirements as outlined by the * * * Secretary of the Treasury. Not only did the Secretary of the Treasury not bring a bill already prepared for the Ways and Means Committee but he came back repeatedly revising his estimates and asking for more money and asking the Committee on Ways and Means to find sources of additional revenue.

In every revenue bill since that time the same procedure has been followed. I am advised that the same procedure was followed prior to that time.

I am not criticizing * * * but simply pointing out this is the practice of the Republican Members when they are in control and it is the practice of the Democratic Members when they are in control, especially when they have been forewarned that the minority Members are opposed to every part of the measure and every part of the proposed legislation.

* * * * *

It is true that we rely upon the (committee) experts, including the drafting service; and we have, I think, as able men in this service as can be found, and we are glad to rely upon them.

This statement is to be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 80, part 6, Seventy-fourth Congress, second session, April 23, 1936, at page 3998.

I come now to the statement of Representative Allen T. Treadway, Republican, of Massachusetts, on the same revenue bill:

The Treasury itself has not furnished a definite estimate of what the bill is expected to produce in the way of revenue, and even if it did the estimate would be no more than a guess. The Federal revenue is actually jeopardized by the bill when it abandons an assured collection of $1,132,000,000 from corporations in favor of a yield which at most is pure conjecture and which will undoubtedly be disappointing in amount. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 80, pt. 6, 74th Cong., 2d sess., April 23, 1936, p. 5990.)

That was when a Republican was questioning the Democratic step in that direction.

Coming to 1936, Senator King, Democrat, of Utah, in presenting the Senate version of the Revenue Act of 1936, spoke as follows:

I wish to say something about the estimates of the bill. Conservative estimates indicate that the committee bill will yield about $829,000,000 as compared with the yield of $803,000,000 claimed under the House bill.

* * * * *

In reaching the conclusions respecting the revenue yield, due consideration was given to the Treasury estimates. The committee also gave consideration to the estimates submitted by its own experts. * * * In the report submitted by the committee the Senators will find a statement based upon the Treasury estimates indicating that they were made in an abundance of caution, and that reasonably we may expect, if the Senate bill shall be enacted into law, that the full amount of at least $829,000,000 will be raised in addition to the existing revenue.

We now come to the Revenue Act of 1937; and again we find estimates. Representative Thomas E. Jenkins, of Ohio, a Republican, had this to say in discussing the bill:

I expect to vote for this bill because I think it will call a halt on the tendency of a few wealthy people who are not fair and square with the Government and who do not want to assume to pay the taxes which they really should pay under the law. * * * As to the amount of money this bill will produce even the experts who testified before the Ways and Means Committee, of which I am a member, were not able to make any definite estimate. The best they could do was to offer a guess. These guesses ran all the way from $40,000,000 to $100,000,000 per year. Probably $60,000,000 or $70,000,000 would represent a fair average between them and would probably represent the amount that will be saved to the Government by this legislation. This amount of money in these days of terrific spending is well worth going after. I repeat that I expect to vote for this bill for this reason. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 81, pt. 8, 75th Cong., 1st sess., August 16, 1937, p. 9020.)

In connection with the Revenue Act of 1938, Representative CLARENCE CANNON, Democrat, of Missouri, acting chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, in extending his remarks on the total of appropriations, Seventy-fifth Congress, third session, declared:

It is impossible to say now with certainty what the situation with respect to Federal expenditures and revenues will be for the next fiscal year. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 83, pt. 11, 75th Cong., 3d sess., June 16, 1938, Appendix, p. 3106.)

I come now to the Senate discussion of the excess-profits tax estimates of 1940. On September 13, 1940, Hon. Pat Harrison, Democrat, of Mississippi, had this to say:

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator, of course, recalls that the chief of our staff, in presenting the estimates for 1941 under the Senate bill, estimated the amount of revenue at $882,500,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; I think the Senator is correct.

Mr. HARRISON. And the Senator recalls that when the Treasury experts were asked for an estimate they said they did not have the figures, but could only give us those for this year, in which we all know we could not raise much—the amount of $355,000,000—I believe—but that in that instance Mr. Stam said that he estimated the revenue for 1940 at $482,000,000." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 86, pt. 11, September 13, 1940, p. 12062.)

Mr. Stam is still the expert of the Finance Committee.

I add that there is a wide difference in the estimates obtained from various sources on the revenue the excess-profits tax would provide. Nevertheless, estimates, and only estimates, were used as the basis for the tax.

Again, in 1940, Senator Harrison, in presenting the excess-profits-tax bill, said:

All estimates are guesses to some extent; but if the Senator will look into the guesses made by the experts of the Treasury and those made by the experts of the joint committee, he will find that our experts have been in some instances more correct than the Treasury experts. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 86, pt. II, September 13, 1940, p. 12062.)

That was the comment of a distinguished and most experienced Democratic Senator in dealing with this very situation in 1940.

The 1942 tax bill which inaugurated pay-as-you-go taxes was the largest single piece of revenue legislation ever undertaken by our Government. Introducing the bill into the House on July 16, 1942, Mr. DOUGHTON, Democrat, of North Carolina, outlined the various estimates used by the Treasury and the Ways and Means Committee in framing the bill. He stated:

Treasury actuaries estimate the bill will produce about $6,000,000,000 of additional revenue. This estimate from certain studies I have made, is in my opinion too conservative. From many years of experience with tax legislation and observing and comparing the results of estimates with actual tax collections, I am willing to venture an estimate of my own, although, of course, I do not pretend to compare myself with the actuaries of the Treasury Department

* * * * *

There were two revenue acts, as you will remember, in 1940, which were estimated at the time to yield about $2,000,000,000 of added revenue annually. Then followed the Revenue Act of 1941, estimated then to produce more than $3,500,000,000 of additional revenue. Thus, while these three bills were estimated at the time of their enactment to produce about $6,000,000,000 annually, our revenues since 1939 have actually increased by $11,500,000,000—that is, from $5,500,000,000 in 1939 to $17,000,000,000, which the existing law is yielding currently. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 88, pt. 5, July 16, 1942, p. 6262.)

That was a pretty decisive demonstration, within the past 4 years, of how widely the estimates have departed from the results.

I again quote Representative DOUGHTON, who for a long time was chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee who stated, in reporting the revenue bill of 1942:

I feel safe in predicting that this bill, under present business conditions, will yield in excess of $7,000,000,000 annually. I say "under present business conditions," because no one can tell with certainty what any bill will produce, not knowing what business conditions the future may bring about.

I give the Senate this record of 20 years of tax legislation, demonstrating that without a single exception our tax bills have always been passed upon the basis of estimates by the Treasury, of estimates of experts on business, or, finally, on conclusions of members of the Senate Committee on Finance and the Members of the Senate as to what it is estimated the future may hold, and that if any tax reduction is to occur on July 1, 1947, it is absolutely imperative, in the light of all the conditions, figures, and estimates which have been accumulated in the studies of the past months and in the light of the business experience of recent months, that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of this matter. I hope that every Member of the Senate will bear in mind that if it be deemed advisable to accomplish this tax reduction at the beginning of the fiscal year 1948—and there is much to be said for our carrying it out within the period of 12 months which is the period of time for which we make the appropriations, as well as the estimates—it is absolutely essential that we proceed forthwith to its consideration, and that in doing so we shall simply be following the course charted by every committee and every Congress throughout the entire history of the Government of the United States.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Swanson, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 153) providing for relief assistance to the people of countries devastated by war.

RELIEF ASSISTANCE FOR COUNTRIES DEVASTATED BY WAR—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the House has adopted the conference report on the European relief bill. The bill is in practically the form in which it passed the Senate. The only substantial difference is that out of the $350,000,000 figure in the Senate bill a portion, running from $15,000,000 to $40,000,000, is earmarked for the children's fund in the event the President exercises an option to use it for that purpose.

I think the only other important difference is that the conference bill yields to the House's desire to identify the countries to which the relief is to go, the identification being precisely the same as that which was presented to the Senate in the letter from the Secretary of State.

The conference report is signed by all the Senate conferees, and I think there is no disagreement whatever about it. Under the circumstances, I feel that it is appropriate for me to ask that the conference report be now considered.

I submit the conference report on House Joint Resolution 153 providing for relief assistance to the people of countries devastated by war, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DONNELL in the chair). The conference report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 153) providing for relief assistance to the people of countries devastated by war, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the President not to exceed $350,000,000 for the provision of relief assistance to the people of countries devastated by war, such relief assistance to be limited to the following: Food, medical supplies, processed and unprocessed materials for clothing, fuel, fertilizer, pesticides, and seed: Provided, That from the funds authorized under this section the President shall make contributions to the International Children's Emergency Fund of the United Nations for the special care and feeding of children, and such contributions shall not be subject to the limitations and requirements provided in this joint resolution, but after $15,000,000 has been so contributed, no further contributions shall be made which would cause the aggregate amount so contributed by the United States (1) to constitute more than 57 per centum of the aggregate amount contributed to said fund by all governments not receiving assistance from said fund, including the United States; or (2) to exceed $40,000,000, whichever is the lesser.

"There shall be established and maintained, out of the funds authorized under this joint resolution, a relief distribution mission for each of the countries receiving aid under this joint resolution. Such missions shall be comprised solely of American citizens who shall have been investigated as to loyalty and security by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Such missions shall have direct supervision and control, in each country, of relief supplies furnished or otherwise made available under this joint resolution, and, when it is deemed desirable by the field administrator provided for in section 4, such missions shall be empowered to retain possession of such supplies up to the city or local community where such supplies are actually made available to the ultimate consumers.

"Not more than $15,000,000 of the funds authorized under this joint resolution shall be available for relief in any countries or territories other than Austria, Greece, Hungary, Italy, Poland, Trieste, and China. This provision shall not imply any obligation to give relief to any of the countries mentioned.

"Notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed, until such time as an appropriation shall be made pursuant to this section, to make advances, not to exceed in the aggregate $75,000,000, to carry out the provisions of this joint resolution, in such manner and in such amounts as the President shall determine. From appropriations authorized under this section, there shall be repaid to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the advances made by it under the authority contained herein.

"SEC. 2. (a) Under the direction of the President, such relief assistance shall be provided in the form of transfers of supplies, or the establishment in this country of credits subject to the control of the President, in such quantities and on such terms as the President may determine; except that no such transfers of supplies or establishment of credits may be made after June 30, 1948, and except that not more than 6 per centum of the amount herein authorized shall be used for the procurement of supplies outside the United States and its Territories and possessions.

"(b) In carrying out this joint resolution, funds authorized herein may be used to pay necessary expenses related to the providing of such relief assistance, including expenses of or incident to the procurement, storage, transportation, and shipment of supplies transferred under subsection (a) or of supplies purchased from credits established under subsection (a).

"(c) Funds authorized under this joint resolution may be allocated for any of the purposes of this joint resolution to any department, agency, or independent establishment of the Government and such sums shall be available for obligation and expenditure in accordance with the laws governing obligations and expenditures of the department, agency, or independent establishment, or organizational unit thereof concerned, and without regard to, sections 3709 and 3648 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 edition, title 41, sec. 5, and title 31, sec. 529).

"(d) Such additional civilian employees as may be required by the War Department in connection with the furnishing of procurement, storage, transportation, and shipment services under this joint resolution and which services are paid for from funds herein authorized, shall not be counted as civilian employees within the meaning of section 607 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1945, as amended by section 14 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946.

"(e) When any department, agency, or independent establishment of the Government receives request from the government of any country for which credits have been established under subsection (a) and receives, from credits so established, advancements or reimbursements for the cost and necessary expenses, it may furnish, or procure and furnish (if advancements are made), supplies within the category of relief assistance as defined in section 1 and may use sums so received for the purposes set forth in subsection (b) of this section. When any such reimbursement is made it shall be credited, at the option of the department, agency, or independent establishment concerned, either to the appropriation, fund, or account utilized in incurring the obligation, or to an appropriate appropriation, fund, or account which is current at the time of such reimbursement.

"(f) In order to supplement the general relief assistance made available under the terms of section 1 and to effect the economical and expanded use of American voluntary relief contributions, funds authorized under this joint resolution, not to exceed $5,000,000, may be used to pay necessary expenses related to the ocean transportation of supplies donated to or purchased by American voluntary and nonprofit relief agencies, and in such quantities and kinds and for such purposes as the President may determine to be essential supplements to the supplies provided for such general relief assistance.

"(g) The relief supplies provided under the terms of this joint resolution shall be procured and furnished by the appropriate United States procurement agencies unless the President shall determine otherwise.

"SEC. 3. No relief assistance shall be provided under the authority of this joint resolution to the people of any country unless the government of such country has given assurance satisfactory to the President that (a) the supplies transferred or otherwise made available pursuant to this joint resolution, as well as similar supplies produced locally or imported from outside sources, will be distributed among the people of such country without discrimination as to race, creed, or political belief; (b) representatives of the Government of the United States and of the press and radio of the United States will be permitted to observe freely and to report fully regarding the distribution and utilization of such supplies; (c) full and continuous publicity will be given within such country as to the purpose, source, character, scope, amounts and progress of the United States relief program carried on therein pursuant to this joint resolution; (d) if food, medical supplies, fertilizer, or seed is transferred or otherwise made available to such country pursuant to this joint resolution, no articles of the same character will be exported or removed from such country while need therefor for relief purposes continues; (e) such country has taken or is taking, insofar as possible, the economic measures necessary to reduce its relief needs and to provide for its own future reconstruction; (f) upon request of the President, it will furnish promptly information concerning the production, use, distribution, importation, and exportation of any supplies which affect the relief needs of the people of such country; (g) representatives of the Government of the United States will be permitted to supervise the distribution among the people of such country of the supplies transferred or otherwise made available pursuant to this joint resolution; (h) provision will be made for a control system so that all classes of people within such country will receive their fair share of essential supplies; and (i) all supplies transferred pursuant to this joint resolution or acquired through the use of credits established pursuant to this joint resolution and any articles processed from such supplies, or the containers of such supplies or articles, will, to the extent practicable, be marked, stamped, branded, or labeled in a conspicuous place as legibly, indelibly, and permanently as the nature of such supplies, articles, or containers will permit in such manner as to indicate to the ultimate consumer in such country that such supplies or articles have been furnished by the United States of America for relief assistance; or if such supplies, articles, or containers are incapable of being so marked, stamped, branded, or labeled, that all practicable steps will be taken to inform the ultimate consumers thereof that such supplies or articles have been furnished by the United States of America for relief assistance.

"SEC. 4. When supplies are transferred or otherwise made available to any country pursuant to this joint resolution, the President shall cause representatives of the Government of the United States (1) to supervise the distribution of such supplies among the people of such country, (2) to observe and report with respect to the carrying out of the assurances given to the President pursuant to section 3, and (3) to seek arrangements that reparations payable from current production by any such country to any other country by treaty be postponed during the period of such relief.

"With respect to the furnishing of relief assistance pursuant to this joint resolution, the President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a field administrator who shall direct the supervision of such relief assistance. Such administrator shall receive compensation at a rate not to exceed $12,000 per annum, and any necessary expenses, as the President shall determine. He shall act in accordance with the instructions of the President.

"The authority of the President under sections 2 and 3 and under this section may, to the extent the President directs, be exercised by the Secretary of State.

"SEC. 5. (a) The President shall promptly terminate the provision of relief assistance to the people of any country whenever he determines (1) that, by reason of changed conditions, the provision of relief assistance of the character authorized by this joint resolution is no longer necessary, (2) that any of the assurances given pursuant to section 3 are not being carried out, (3) that an excessive amount of any supplies transferred or otherwise made available pursuant to this joint resolution, or of similar supplies produced locally or imported from outside sources, is being used to assist in the maintenance of armed forces in such country, or (4) that supplies transferred or otherwise made available pursuant to this joint resolution, or similar supplies produced locally or imported from outside sources, are being exported or removed from such country.

"(b) Relief assistance to the people of any country, under this joint resolution, shall, unless sooner terminated by the President, be terminated whenever such termination is directed by concurrent resolution of the two Houses of the Congress.

"SEC. 6. To the extent that relief supplies procured with funds authorized under this joint resolution are not furnished on terms of repayment in dollars, they shall be furnished only upon condition that the government of the receiving country agree that when it sells such relief supplies for local currency (a) the amounts of such local currency will be deposited by it in a special account; (b) such account will be used within such country, as a revolving fund, until June 30, 1948, only upon the approval of the duly authorized representative of the United States, for relief and work relief purposes, including local currency expenses of the United States incident to the furnishing of relief; and (c) any unencumbered balance remaining in such account on June 30, 1948, will be disposed of within such country for such purposes as the United States Government, pursuant to Act or joint resolution of the Congress, may determine.

"SEC. 7. The President shall submit to the Congress quarterly reports of expenditures and activities under authority of this joint resolution."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the conference report.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I have learned, by rumor only, that the amount of money which is contained in the relief bill is also contained in the President's estimated budget which was sent to Congress. I have also learned that it is not contained in the budget. I wonder whether or not the Senator from Michigan could give me information on that subject.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I hesitate to answer the question. My impression is that it is in the budget, but I am not able to underwrite that statement.

Mr. LUCAS. I thought perhaps the Senator might know.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That question never arose, of course, in connection with our consideration of the matter.

Mr. LUCAS. I had occasion to learn about that, and it seemed to be rather important in view of the subject we are discussing here today. I shall take the time to look it up and consult the proper department.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Are these funds to be administered in conjunction with similar funds contributed from any other countries?

Mr. VANDENBERG. There is a coordinating group in the United Nations set up under order of the General Assembly to coordinate the independent contributions which are made by various countries which are cooperating. But each country, as indicated in great detail in the debate itself, is in control of its own contributions.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. Are we using any of the UNRRA personnel—I am speaking only, of course, of American personnel associated with UNRRA—in the administration of these funds in any of the countries where they are to be distributed?

Mr. VANDENBERG. The organization to administer the new relief bill has not yet been fully developed. Indeed, the Administrator himself has not yet been appointed, because it is only this afternoon that we have been on our way to have the fund available. It is my understanding that there is a new Administrator contemplated, and if the one expected to be chosen shall be actually selected, he will be an administrator of very wide experience in the international administration of Red Cross affairs during the past 20 years.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the administrator in charge of the administration of these funds be a distinct person from the administrator who will be in charge of the administration of the Greek relief?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Oh, entirely and totally distinct. There is no relationship between the two administrations at all, except, of course, that a portion of the relief fund is earmarked for expenditure in Greece.

Mr. PEPPER. That is what I was going to ask. Would the $50,000,000 that is earmarked in the relief bill for expenditure in Greece be administered by the administrator of the $300,000,000 provided for Greece under the Greco-Turkish loan measure?

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; the two are to be separately administered.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether the provision that was adopted in the House for investigation of the personnel by the FBI appears in the conference report?

Mr. VANDENBERG. It is in the conference report with the verb changed. The House required approval by the FBI. The conference report requires investigation by the FBI and approval by the President and the State Department.

Mr. McMAHON. That is a very important change.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It is a very important change.

Mr. McMAHON. I congratulate the Senator on having brought it about.

I should like to ask a further question. In view of the present heavy burden which the FBI has to carry, will the necessity for investigation by the FBI slow up, in the Senator's opinion, the process of getting this relief work under way?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think not, because it is applied only to policy-makers at the top level. That point is specifically explained in the statement of the House and Senate conferees. Clerical help, custodial help, and personal service at the lower levels are not included.

Mr. McMAHON. In other words, it may mean an investigation of from 25 to 50 persons?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not know the number, but the formula is practical.

Mr. McMAHON. The number will be manageable.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I may supplement the reply to the question of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] regarding the allowance in the budget, as I have the budget in my hands. There is an item of $3,510,000,000 for international affairs and finance. I do not, of course, know the break-down, but that is a great deal of money, and I hope it may include the item to which the Senator has modestly referred.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That was the basis of my response to the Senator from Illinois. I know that there is an overall figure in the President's budget in excess of $3,000,000,000 covering all these various enterprises.

Mr. BREWSTER. Three billion five hundred and ten million dollars.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I cannot say categorically that this item is included, but I think it is.

REDUCTION OF INDIVIDUAL INCOME-TAX PAYMENTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1), to reduce individual income-tax payments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] to postpone consideration of the pending bill, House bill No. 1, until June 10, 1947.

Mr. HOEY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Cordon	Hoey
Baldwin	Donnell	Holland
Ball	Downey	Ives
Barkley	Dworshak	Jenner
Brewster	Ecton	Johnson, Colo.
Bricker	Ellender	Johnston, S. C.

Murray	Stewart	Wiley
Myers	Taft	Williams
O'Conor	Taylor	Wilson
O'Daniel	Thomas, Okla.	Young
Pepper	Thye
Reed	Tobey

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Finance of the United States Senate, I shall detain the Senate for only a short time while I speak in support of the motion which has been made by the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], namely, to postpone until June 10, further consideration of the tax measure which now is before the Senate.

Before speaking briefly on that subject, I should like to take this opportunity to compliment and to congratulate the able Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], who is chairman of the Finance Committee for his fairness and impartiality in the hearing which was held for some 2 weeks or more before the Finance Committee. They were no star-chamber sessions, Mr. President, all persons who had something constructive or worth while to say, and even some persons who did not have much to say, were permitted to testify before that committee. The proceedings before that committee were so different from the short hearings in the House of Representatives when House bill 1, known as the Knutson bill, was reported, that I think the Senator from Colorado is entitled to these kind words from a Senator on this side of the aisle.

Mr. President, when we consider the history of H. R. 1 as it was originally conceived by those who were responsible for its introduction in the House of Representatives, we learn that H. R. 1 as first drawn and introduced was a bill which sought the reduction of taxes by 20 percent "straight across the board." That phrase has a pleasing sound, a pleasant ring. But upon a careful analyzation of that type of tax reduction one will immediately discover that such a tax bill, if it had been followed out as originally introduced in the House of Representatives, would have placed those in the higher income groups in the United States in approximately the same position in which they found themselves preceding the war while doing little for those in the low-income bracket. So as time went on the bill was amended, and when it came to the Senate as amended it was further amended by the Senate Committee on Finance, and it is now before the Senate as so amended.

Mr. President, the bill in its present form does give relief to taxpayers in every bracket, but I undertake to say that before we write the over-all tax bill which everyone is talking about, since there is a determination to pass some kind of a tax measure in the Eightieth Congress, we should follow the same methods Congress used to increase taxes for war purposes. When we started to raise revenue for war purposes we decreased the exemptions of those in the lower income brackets, until thousands upon thousands, yes, millions, who never saw an income-tax schedule before 1939 and 1940, were required to pay income taxes to the Government, and they are paying them today.

If we are to do anything in the way of reducing taxes, in the final analysis we should increase exemptions, not to the same extent they were decreased for war purposes, but we should start at least in the inverse order and give to those in the lower income groups what they are rightfully entitled to in the way of tax reduction.

Mr. President, I shall have more to say about that perhaps later, either while we are discussing the pending bill, or if the motion made by the Senator from Georgia should prevail, I shall speak at some length upon a substitute bill I shall offer at the proper time.

I wish to point out distinctly to the Senate and to the country that H. R. 1 as reported by the Committee on Finance, which is now the unfinished business of the Senate, does not take a single taxpayer in the lower brackets off the roll, and today there are 47,700,000 individuals paying income taxes into the Federal Treasury. In other words, what I inveigh against heavily in connection with the bill is the fact that, unless he is over 65 years of age, the taxpayer now paying $1 will pay the sum of 70 cents under H. R. 1, as amended by the Senate Finance Committee.

Mr. President, I do not think that is right. I am not one of those who believe that we can make a better citizen out of an American simply by compelling him to file an income-tax schedule. I do not believe he is going to have a greater stake in his Government if he is compelled to file an income-tax schedule for a dollar or a dollar and a half or two dollars; and that is exactly what is required under the pending bill.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. I am not a member of the committee, but I am interested in what the Senator just said about making a better citizen out of a man who is compelled to file an income tax return and pay from 70 cents to a dollar or a dollar and a half. I am wondering if the taxpayer paying that small sum would not fully realize that, in his making that return, the expense to the Government would be far greater than the amount he pays, and if he might not logically get the idea that he is being compelled to pay a tax from which the Government derives no benefit whatever, and he is simply paying something in the nature of a penalty.

Mr. LUCAS. I will say to the able Senator from New Mexico that the benefit the Government derives is very slight in thousands upon thousands of cases. In fact, in my judgment, in thousands upon thousands of cases it will cost the Government more to collect the small sums paid than will be obtained by the Government through compelling the taxpayers to pay these small amounts.

I submit, with sincerity, that the individual who has to pay the small income tax, instead of being made a better citizen, more or less will lose faith in his Government because of the trouble to which he must go to pay his dollar into the Treasury of the United States. The income tax collectors are rounding him up to see if he has paid his dollar, and sometimes he has to go to a lawyer to ascertain whether he has made out his income tax schedule correctly.

It is said, "The person in the lower income tax groups does not have any trouble with his schedule, because the directions are all written out for him, and all he has to do is to read them and make out his check for 70 cents, or $1.50, and send it to the collector." The trouble with the individual who makes that kind of a statement is that he fails to understand that the average person at the crossroads throughout America does not understand the implications and the complications of income tax payments. In fact, sometimes when I hear some of the debates which take place in the Senate, I wonder whether the Members of the Senate of the United States understand them.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I know the Senator does not intend to discuss the substitute bill he proposes to offer, and I am quite interested in what the Senator has been saying about the subject to which he is now animadverting and I rise to inquire whether the substitute he proposes to offer later will cover the situation about which he is now talking.

Mr. LUCAS. If and when we reach that point, I shall develop that question to a somewhat greater extent than I have done thus far. I do have a provision in the substitute bill which I propose to offer at the proper time, which will increase the exemptions for dependents and for the married man. I do not wish to discuss it now, but since the Senator raised it, I will say that, for instance, under the bill I propose to offer, I would increase individual exemptions merely from $500 to $600, and those of married persons, from $1,000 to $1,200. That slight increase in exemptions would cost the Treasury of the United States $1,500,000,000.

In addition to that, it would take 4,800,000 people off the tax rolls—the small taxpayers I am talking about who are entitled to be taken from the rolls. In other words, while we are doing the tax work by piecemeal at this time—and everybody admits it is only a temporary expedient for tax relief—we should not under any circumstances go across the board 20 percent, 30 percent, or 10 percent, as H. R. 1 does, but we should follow the same pattern for tax legislation followed by the Congress for years. If an over-all tax bill is to be written, that would be another matter. One of the reasons I would like to see the tax bill postponed until January 1 is because the Ways and Means Committee of the House has started hearings to consider at least 50 different phases of the revenue law needing attention at this time, in order that next year that committee may report a complete tax bill, overhauling the revenue acts as they now stand.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. KILGORE. I do not want to divert the Senator entirely from the line of his prepared remarks, but his reference to increasing the exemptions reminds me of something I heard recently about the Senator from Illinois. I was told the Senator is opposed to any tax reduction whatever. What the Senator has said he intends to propose, to increase or enlarge the exemptions, indicates that he is not opposed to tax reductions.

Mr. LUCAS. Let me say to the Senator, the bill that I have would take effect on January 1, 1948. I have excellent reasons, that I shall present at the proper time, as to why I think no tax reduction should be made at this time; but I do not want to go into that now.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. KILGORE. The Senator, as a lawyer, knows that it costs a certain definite amount of money to mail even a form letter, including the cost of addressing and sealing the envelope. It takes a certain amount of money to handle the answer thereto, when it comes into an office. Has the Senator discussed yet the amount of savings that will be entailed in the cost of operating the Bureau of Internal Revenue, by getting rid of small tax payments which do not justify the cost of sending out bills and receiving reports and doing the bookkeeping entailed in the payment? I think it would effect a saving to the taxpayer, but it would also largely offset the cost to the Government of that work.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is correct. The majority has been talking about cutting people off the pay rolls; and I am in favor of that. I say that anybody that can be spared from the pay roll without impairing the essential services of the Government, should go. Here is an opportunity to take 4,800,000 people off the tax rolls. There will certainly be an opportunity to take some people off the pay rolls, which I think follows as a matter of common ordinary horse sense; and yet those who are talking loudest about cutting people off the pay rolls are not taking a single individual off the tax rolls; thereby saying, by inference, "We want everybody to remain on the pay rolls, in order to collect from those who are on the tax rolls."

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. KILGORE. My question was impelled by the fact that I well remember, when we lowered the brackets and lowered exemptions, as at the present time, it became necessary to put a tremendous number of people in various district offices—my recollection is it was an increase of something like 35 percent—to handle the vastly increased number of taxpayers, a large number of whom did not pay sufficient taxes to justify the expenditure for clerical help entailed in collection.

Mr. LUCAS. I am not completely familiar with the last conclusion the Senator makes.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. Yes.

Mr. MILLIKIN. As I listened to the statement of the Senator from Illinois I thought he gave the impression that H. R. 1, as amended, does not take any taxpayers off the rolls. It takes 1,400,000 aged people off.

Mr. LUCAS. They are taken off by the increased exemptions?

Mr. MILLIKIN. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. That is, $500, for those above the age of 65?

Mr. MILLIKIN. That is right.

Mr. LUCAS. I am talking primarily about those in the lower income tax brackets. The Senator is correct, so far as those above 65 years of age are concerned.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I did not understand the Senator from Colorado. How many people does the Senator say are to be taken off the roll?

Mr. MILLIKIN. One million four hundred thousand people, 65 years old or older.

Mr. LUCAS. Those are people 65 years of age and over; but since the Senator from Colorado has mentioned that I want to call the attention of the Senate and the country to the fact that the provision which helps people over 65 years of age does one of the most unusual things I have ever heard of since I have been in Congress and have been assisting in writing and in debating tax legislation. Why do I say that? In order to aid those who are administering the law, as the Senator from Colorado said, a $500 tax exemption is given to every individual over 65 years of age. It does not make any difference who he may be.

Mr. HATCH. Is that regardless of income?

Mr. LUCAS. It is regardless of the income the elderly person may have. If he is 65 years of age, he gets a $500 exemption. If the wife is over 65 years of age, she gets a $500 exemption. Under this tax bill, even a man with three children, on a $2,000 salary, could not get a $100 flat exemption unless he was over 65.

Regardless of the task in the way of administration, the inequities of that situation are so great that the bill itself becomes unsound and ought to be defeated, if and when a final vote is taken on the floor of the Senate.

To say that a Member of the United States Senate who is 65 years of age—and there are a few of them—is entitled to a $500 exemption, simply because he is 65, while some employee of the Senate, who is 35 years of age, who has three children, is not entitled to any exemption, to me simply does not make sense; it is inequitable, it is unfair, and it is unsound.

Mr. MILLIKIN and Mr. HATCH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HATCH. The Senator has already answered my question by the remarks just made.

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I should like to invite the distinguished Senator's attention to the fact that the exemptions under the present law are available to all, whether rich or poor. I think it might be unfortunate to apply the needs test to people, because they are 65 years old or over.

Mr. LUCAS. It is unnecessary to apply the needs test to those above 65 years of age. It is admitted that the provision for a $500 exemption to all over 65 years of age, regardless of financial condition, was placed in the bill, simply because of administrative difficulties. I say that that is not fair. I say that the individual who is over 65 and who has plenty is not entitled to the $500 exemption, unless the exemption is given to every taxpayer regardless of age, particularly in the lower-income groups. I do not say that the individual who is on a pension or those who have retired are not entitled to the $500 exemption. That is not the point I am making. I am in favor of that phase of it, but I submit that it ought to be confined to such persons. We should not run amuck with legislation of this kind, by placing every individual in the United States of America in a certain classification, whether he is worth $100 or $10,000,000, and give him the benefit of the $500 exemption, simply because he is 65 years of age.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I understand the Senator's point thoroughly, but I want the RECORD to be clear that the exemptions already granted by existing law are available to all taxpayers, whether they are rich or whether they are poor. We have not drawn a distinction in granting exemptions on the basis of wealth.

Mr. LUCAS. That is true. Under the present law no distinction is made in exemptions on the basis of wealth. But I say that the Senator's committee is drawing the distinction with respect to persons who are 65 years old. I undertake to say that an individual who has plenty, who does not want for the necessities of life, who files an income tax schedule under which he pays $15,000 or $20,000, or perhaps $10,000, certainly should not be entitled to a $500 exemption simply because he is 65 years old. If discrimination is to be made in favor of anyone, do not discriminate in favor of those who can pay, because the Nation's tax structure is based upon ability to pay, and everyone knows it. Consequently, if it is proposed to dish out any favors to the American taxpayers, they ought to go to those who are in the lower income tax bracket groups.

Mr. President, I had not intended to debate that point at this time. I want to get back primarily to some of the points which have been raised with respect to the motion made by the able Senator from Georgia. The Senator from Georgia made a statement which should command the respect of every Senator and of the American people as a whole. In the able address which he delivered, he stated that he could think of nothing worse than if, after a tax reduction this year, there should come a recession, resulting in nothing being paid on the national debt, and finally resulting in deficit financing for governmental expenses in 1949 and 1950. He said he could think of nothing worse from the standpoint of impairing a sound national economy.

I subscribe to that doctrine. If that should happen, I undertake to say that the individuals who have bonds which are cashable at that particular time will be going to the banks as fast as they can with their bonds. I can think of nothing which would more quickly destroy confidence and faith in this country than to have the country obliged to indulge in deficit financing in 1949 and 1950. I say it is not beyond possibility that that could happen if we go through with a program of $3,500,000,000 tax reduction, if we go through with a program of paying $2,800,000,000 to apply on the national debt, especially in view of present world conditions.

Already we have appropriated outside and beyond what the President of the United States requested in his budget, something like $800,000,000, and I am assuming that the $350,000,000 the Senate just voted on today is not included in the President's budget. I do not think it is. Some say it is, but I am not sure about it. If I am correct in my assumption there is something like $800,000,000 already appropriated by the Congress which is not included in the President's budget—practically the same amount that has been saved so far by the House of Representatives, if we eliminate the $800,000,000 tax refund, which, of course, is just a bookkeeping transaction—a phony of the worst kind.

Mr. President, H. R. 1 was presented in the beginning in the House of Representatives primarily on the theory of giving to the people of America an incentive to invest money in order to keep business concerns operating.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The able Senator, being a member of the committee, I am sure has given considerable thought to this question. Under present conditions, in view of the first quarterly reports of our corporations, with which I am sure the Senator is familiar, it does not seem to me that the present great need is money for investment with a view of increasing productivity, or that the lack of such money presents a great danger in the next year or so. On the other hand, what should concern us more is the lack of consumptive power, and that therefore, so far as Congress can influence such matters by fiscal policy, the saving of money to those in the higher-tax brackets on order to encourage investment and production should not be the immediate goal, but the immediate goal should be the building up of ability to consume. That, it seems to me, is the most important thing to be done in the next year. Our tax policy should be sufficiently flexible to meet the conditions of the moment. Conditions might change entirely in a year or 2 years, but under present conditions increase of consumptive power is the important goal to be attained.

Mr. LUCAS. In my opinion, the Senator is absolutely correct. There is not a single economic factor existing today which indicates there is any lack of ability on the part of industry to have risk capital invested. Why do I make that statement? Because the profits of corporations are the highest in all history of peacetime America. Individuals were never better off in America than they are at this very moment. I do not contend that taxes should remain high forever. I only make the argument against the theory of reduction in taxes as a necessary incentive to investment in industry at this time. Certainly there is no individual who understands sound economy in America who will undertake seriously to say that when a tax bill is made retroactive to January 1, 1947, that in itself will be an incentive for individuals to invest money. That sort of argument will not hold water. Yet that was one of the big talking points with respect to H. R. 1 when it was introduced in the House and was passed by the House of Representatives. The sponsors of H. R. 1 said that the enactment of the bill would stimulate incentive to build and to buy and to do the things that would necessarily be done with the money that is saved to the taxpayers of America.

Mr. President, I agree with the able Senator from Colorado on that particular point. He does not say that a retroactive tax measure provides a stimulation of that kind at all. But the point I am making is that the argument was made to the American people that a retroactive tax measure would provide incentive capital. It will not do any such thing, Mr. President.

I wish to speak briefly with respect to the budget. The Senator from Georgia has gone over that point very carefully. Some time ago I made a speech on the floor of the Senate upon this subject. The able Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] discussed it today. He candidly admitted the deadlock between the House and the Senate which has existed for some time.

It is most unfortunate that the Legislative Budget Committee was unable to agree upon a figure and report it back to the Senate and House. It seems to me that in view of all the turmoil which was raised over the question of reducing the President's budget $6,000,000,000 or $4,500,000,000, some sort of compromise should have been reached. I would not say that it would have been a "phony" compromise, as the Senator from Colorado said today. All legislation is based upon compromise. If the conferees could not agree upon one figure or the other they should have brought back some other figure. That is the important point. The American people were expecting something in the way of a figure on budget reform.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Is it not pretty clear that the reasons why they cannot agree are the same reasons urged by the Senator from Georgia for deferring action upon this bill? They cannot agree on a figure, because they know they have not enough knowledge even to make an estimate on any reasonable basis. It would be a pure guess. That is why they have not been able to agree.

Mr. LUCAS. That may be partially the reason; but the further we go in the consideration of various appropriation bills, the more we are convinced that they cannot reach an agreement even on a $4,500,000,000 cut. The more appropriation bills we consider, the less likely they are to reach any kind of agreement, because it cannot be done, considering what has occurred up to date. The Senator from Georgia covered that question.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I should like to remind the distinguished Senator that the junior Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] gave us a very interesting symposium of information with respect to appropriation bills, and especially the appropriation bills of 1946. I notice that in his list are eight great appropriation bills which did not become law until after the 10th of June, some of them running well into July, and one of them running to the end of July. So I am suggesting that we would not know any more on June 10 than we do on May 21 about the matter of expenditures.

Mr. LUCAS. I heard the able Senator from California make that suggestion; but what the able Senator from California overlooks is this: We have a Reorganization Act, which most Members of the majority supported last year. That Reorganization Act makes it mandatory under section 138 that the Legislative Budget Committee report by February 15 on a budget to be used as a yardstick for the Appropriations Committees of both the Senate and House. That is another reason why, in my opinion, they are unable to reach any figure. They cannot reach it, as I have said before. But we know that the appropriations approved are a pretty fair barometer of how much is to be cut from the appropriations. If anything, the Senate will add to them. The House appropriations can be used as a minimum, because when the Senate gets through with the appropriation bills which come from the House, 9 times out of 10 it will add to them. The House Members have to run every 2 years. They cut appropriations indiscriminately. They say, "We will cut off $100,000,000 here, because it will look good back home," and the Senate will put it back, because Senators have to run only every 6 years.

Mr. MILLIKIN. So far this year the action of the Senate indicates that the Senate will make deeper cuts in expenditures than the House.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senate did so in connection with one bill, the bill for the Labor Department and the Federal Security Agency. However, if I were a gambling man and wanted to make a little bet with the Senator—say a chocolate soda or something like that—I would be willing to wager that the Senate will definitely override the House on the appropriation bills. The Senator knows that.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Make mine sarsaparilla. [Laughter.]

Mr. LUCAS. It might be strawberry before we get through.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Perhaps the able Senator from Georgia has set the date too soon. Following the suggestion—if I may use that term—of the Senator from Colorado in calling our attention to the lateness of the bills, perhaps it might be better to defer consideration of the pending bill until June 25 or June 28. Then we would have more knowledge about expenditures. Would that suggestion be more acceptable to the Senator than the date of June 10?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Under the Reorganization Act Congress is supposed to adjourn sine die by the end of July. The Senator's suggestion would very effectually prevent that, and would also prevent passage of an income-tax reduction bill, or any other kind of tax-reduction bill this year.

Mr. LUCAS. It is strange to observe how some Senators like to conform to the Reorganization Act in connection with some questions, but with respect to others they do not pay much attention to it.

The question of adjournment, of which the able Senator from Colorado has spoken, is not so important to the American people. They do not care whether we adjourn or not, but they are very much interested in the budget. They have been interested in whether or not the Legislative Budget Committee would submit a $4,500,000,000 cut or a $6,000,000,000 cut.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I admit that the American people are interested in the budget. I hope the Senator is not suggesting that they are not interested in a tax cut.

Mr. LUCAS. I would not say that they are not interested in a tax cut; but I will say to my able friend that there are many who are primarily interested in seeing sound economy in government. If they knew that a tax cut would ultimately result in deficit financing they would not be for tax reduction. I believe, if a Gallup poll were taken submitting that question over the country, it would be found that they would rather pay under the present tax rate than to have deficit financing.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I abhor deficit financing as much as does any other Member of the Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. I know the Senator does; and I admire him for it.

Mr. MILLIKIN. We have had 20 years of deficit financing. In fact, we have become more accustomed to deficit financing than to operating with a surplus. I hope that we shall not return to deficit financing; but if we should do so, it would not be entirely without precedent.

Mr. LUCAS. Of course not. The Senator is absolutely correct. The party to which the Senator belongs has constantly inveighed against deficit financing, and has called for sound financing in government. It has advocated making our bonds safe by balancing the budget. For the past 10 or 12 years I have listened to arguments along that line. But now it seems that the majority party is not so much in fear of red ink as it once was.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I feel very much encouraged and hopeful this evening. I see that at long last we have brought the old sinner down the sawdust trail, and that he now believes in balancing the budget and in surpluses—good old Republican doctrine.

Mr. LUCAS. It may be that I am going along with Republican doctrine from the Senator's viewpoint; but he is about to become a good New Dealer with his tax bill, if it should ultimately prove to be the basis for deficit financing.

Mr. MILLIKIN. God forbid. If my previous remark created that impression, I am sorry I made it. [Laughter.]

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a word or two further with reference to the budget. The House Appropriations Committee recently reported the appropriation bill for the Navy Department. The President requested $3,513,000,000, and the committee recommended a reduction of $377,519,200, or approximately 10.7 percent. The percentage of reduction in the appropriations for the Department of Labor and the Federal Security Agency, as compared with the President's budget, was 4.5 percent; that of the Interior Department, 45.4 percent. I imagine that the able Senator from Colorado will want to change that figure a little when the bill comes to the Senate. The total estimate in the President's budget was $10,369,578,043. As recommended by the House Appropriations Committee the amount is $9,519,260,153, or a saving of $850,317,890 representing a percentage reduction of 8.2 percent. To effect a reduction in the budget of $6,000,000,000, it would have to be cut an average of 16 percent. To reduce it $4,500,000,000 it would have to be cut an average of 12½ percent. I undertake to say that there is approximately $18,000,000,000 in the President's budget which is almost untouchable, representing items in the budget which will not be reduced very much. I have reference to the national debt, our international commitments, the Veterans' Administration item, and tax refunds.

The items which I have mentioned total approximately $18,000,000,000. There is left approximately $19,500,000,000 upon which to operate. On that basis, if we want to reach a saving of $6,000,000,000 we would have to cut approximately 35 percent. In order to reach a saving of $4,500,000,000, the cut would have to be approximately 25 percent.

In my judgment, Mr. President, it is impossible to do it; it cannot be done. Before we vote on any tax measure we ought to know exactly what the House Appropriations Committee will do with respect to the Agricultural Department appropriation. We ought to know what it will do regarding the appropriations for the Army. Evidence on the Army appropriation has been taken weeks ago, I am told. Why the committee does not make a report on the Army appropriation bill I do not know, unless it be that they are waiting for a tax bill to be passed. I am told that they recommend cutting $300,000,000 from the Agricultural appropriation budget. The President requested, I think, $1,400,000,000 in his budget. They are going to take away the essentials of the rural electrification service which has been so useful to the American farmer, especially in my section of the country. They intend to cut that appropriation to the bone. They are cutting the soil conservation appropriation; they are also applying the meat ax to the support program which Congress passed 2 years ago.

Mr. President, as one who comes from an agricultural section in the midwest, I want to know just what the Appropriations Committee intends to do with the agricultural appropriation bill, and I want to know whether they are using the ax on that bill in order to help put through a tax bill and still balance the budget. I think we will know by June 10. That is one of the primary and major reasons why I shall support the motion made by the able Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. It certainly will not deter any tax measure at this session of Congress. It would give everyone an opportunity to ascertain between now and that time exactly what the Appropriations Committee of the House has done regarding appropriations; and there can be no harm in this slight delay in order that the Senate of the United States may ascertain exactly what the Appropriations Committee has done and in order that we may intelligently approach the question of tax legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia, to postpone consideration of the pending bill until June 10, 1947.

INVESTIGATION OF FIFTH MISSOURI CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT DEMOCRATIC PRIMARY—CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, yesterday the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM] submitted Senate Resolution 116, to investigate the nonaction of the Department of Justice in connection with alleged irregularities in the Democratic primary election in the Fifth Missouri Congressional District on August 6, 1946, and it was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration. The chairman of that committee, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM] desire that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules and Administration be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I should like to ask unanimous consent to be absent from the Senate tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, consent is granted.

RECESS

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I now move that the Senate take a recess until tomorrow at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, May 22, 1947, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MAY 21, 1947

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou whose all-searching eye beholdest all things and weighest the motives of men, be with us and keep us above lower things. Come to us and give us the spirit which makes supreme the deeds of unselfishness and which conquers any forbidding purpose. In our hidden lives may there be found the secret of Thy presence, which brings the wisdom of the divine mind and the fervent desire to walk the highway which Thou hast appointed. Help us to do much that our country will approve, and to do much that our country will hold. Each day inspire us to give Thee our unquestioning loyalty and our impassioned love and hearty obedience. In all our tasks help us to be true and fearless in defense of the right, that genuine goodness may abound in our official circles.

In Thy Holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, after disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Foreign Affairs may be permitted to meet this afternoon at 3 o'clock while the House is in session.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

LABOR BILL SHOULD INCLUDE ANTI-COMMUNIST PROVISIONS

Mr. KERSTEN of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KERSTEN of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, when the labor bill is finally considered it is my earnest wish that it shall contain anti-Communist provisions similar to those in the House bill. The House bill makes it possible for a union to expel a Communist and contains prohibitions against a Communist being an officer in a labor organization. There are some who believe it inadvisable to so prohibit the activities of Communists in labor unions. They do so largely on the grounds that the Communists are a political party or that it is difficult to prove a person is a Communist. Now the Communists are not an American political party. They are members of an international organization with headquarters in Moscow. As stated by me on this floor several days ago, a leading American Communist, Mr. Sigmund Eisencher, stated in my office in the presence of a newspaper reporter that in the event of a conflict between the United States and Russia, that the American Communists would be on the side of Russia. No American political party could possibly hold such a position. The American Communists are not an American political party—they are a Russian political party.

With regard to the proposition that it is difficult to prove one to be a Communist I should like to state that in our hearings before the Labor Committee, Mr. Russ Nixon, for example, openly stated that they took Communists into their labor union on the same basis as anyone else. In many instances the Communists openly profess their communism in labor-union activities.

Any labor law that this Congress writes should contain a prohibition against the activities of these bold and arrogant agents of a foreign power. It is necessary that our labor laws should so provide because it is the avowed purpose of the American Communists to capture the American labor movement and use it as a tool of treachery and treason.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WILLIAMS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LANHAM asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial by Ralph McGill appearing in the Atlanta Constitution.

Mr. BUCHANAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial on consumer credit.

Mr. ALMOND asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address delivered by his colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKETT].

Mr. DEANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and to include in each editorials.

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a resolution adopted by the Board of Aldermen of the City of Chelsea, Mass.

RUSSIAN PROPAGANDA

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, Why They Behave Like Russians, by John Fisher, should be required reading for every Member of Congress. Over the week end I had the pleasure of reading this book which goes far to explain many things that have been puzzling me about Russia.

Mr. Fisher makes it crystal clear that Russia's frantic efforts to build up a frontier of satellite states in eastern Europe and her failure to cooperate with the United States is due to their fears.

Their fundamental fear grows out of their belief which is an outgrowth of the doctrines of Karl Marx that our free-enterprise system has within itself the seeds of destruction.

The Russians believe that we cannot prevent the vicious cycle of inflation and depression. They believe that within the next 5 years we will be in the midst of the greatest depression in our history. Furthermore, they believe that when this period comes we will come under the domination of a Fascist group and will inevitably turn aggressive and imperialistic. They believe that they must build up their strength to meet the attack they believe is coming from us.

So it is perfectly clear that we must convince Russia of the fallacy of their beliefs and the groundlessness of their fears by preventing the depression in America that they so confidently expect.

ON-THE-JOB TRAINING

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I know that the Members who do not already know it will be very glad to hear that on tomorrow the Committee on Rules will hear H. R. 246, a bill introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEARNEY] to raise the ceilings of on-the-job training. This bill was reported unanimously by the Committee on Veterans' Affairs. We hope that a rule will be brought in, because many of the veterans already have had to give up their training because they could not get along on the $175 ceiling a month for single men and $200 ceiling for married men. Many of the employers have given up their training program. It is vital that the rule be granted promptly and the bill pass. I hope the Members of the House will join with us in asking the Committee on Rules to grant the rule. I have no doubt but what the rule will be granted, but support and interest will help secure a rule promptly when the bill comes to the House, I believe there will not be a vote against it.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include the approval of the Voice of America program by the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Mr. VAN ZANDT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD concerning Operation Naval Reserve.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement by one of his constituents on the 1947 position of agriculture.

ZIONIST ATTACKS ON GREAT BRITAIN

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, Great Britain is protesting against the attacks now being made on her by the alleged Zionists in this country. It is about time that somebody in the American Congress let the British people know that this outfit does not represent the American people.

Last week they published a full-page advertisement in the New York Times, and yesterday the New York Times carried on its front page an excerpt from that advertisement. I want to read you just a short portion of that excerpt. Listen to this. It says, now, speaking to these Zionists:

> Every time you blow up a British arsenal, or wreck a British jail, or send a British railroad train sky high, or rob a British bank or let go with your guns and bombs at the British betrayers and invaders of your homeland, the Jews of America make a little holiday in their hearts.

Mr. Speaker, that vicious statement does not represent the views of the decent high-class law-abiding Jews of America, as you will find in reading the memoirs of Henry Morgenthau, Sr., concerning this outfit. It does not represent decent Americans of any kind.

It is time we put a stop to these vicious inflammable attacks on Great Britain, a friendly nation.

Hon. Henry A. Morgenthau, Sr., one of the great Jews of America, is quoted as saying in his autobiography:

Zionism is the most stupendous fallacy in Jewish history. I assert that it is wrong in principle and impossible of realization; that it is unsound in its economics, fantastical in its politics, and sterile in its spiritual ideals. Where it is not pathetically visionary, it is a cruel playing with the hopes of a people blindly seeking their way out of age-long miseries These are bold and sweeping assertions, but in this chapter I shall undertake to make them good.

The very fervor of my feeling for the oppressed of every race and every land, especially for the Jews, those of my own blood and faith, to whom I am bound by every tender tie, impels me to fight with all the greater force against this scheme, which my intelligence tells me can only lead them deeper into the mire of the past, while it professes to be leading them to the heights.

Zionism is a surrender, not a solution. It is retrogression into the blackest error, and not progress toward the light. I will go further, and say that it is a betrayal; it is an eastern European proposal, fathered in this country by American Jews, which, if it were to succeed, would cost the Jews of America most that they have gained of liberty, equality, and fraternity.

Therefore, as I said, this group of radical Zionists do not represent the better element of American Jews. Nor do they represent the sentiments of a vast majority of the American people.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

SUPPORT FOR WOOL

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 214, Rept. No. 409), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for consideration of the bill S. 814, to provide support for wool, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 3 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider without the intervention of any point of order the amendments recommended by the Committee on Agriculture now printed in the bill; and it shall also be in order to consider without the intervention of any point of order as a substitute for the committee amendment beginning in line 14, page 3, and ending on page 6, line 11, the language appearing in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page A2379. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Obviously a quorum is not present.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 59]

Mr. FEIGHAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a resolution.

Mr. SADOWSKI asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HOFFMAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

REFERENCE OF A BILL

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture be discharged from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 2472 and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

RELIEF ASSISTANCE TO THE PEOPLE OF COUNTRIES DEVASTATED BY WAR

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 153) providing for relief assistance to the people of countries devastated by war, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 153) providing for relief assistance to the people of countries devastated by war, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the President not to exceed $350,000,000 for the provision of relief assistance to the people of countries devastated by war, such relief assistance to be limited to the following: Food, medical supplies, processed and unprocessed materials for clothing, fuel, fertilizer, pesticides, and seed: Provided, That from the funds authorized under this section the President shall make contributions to the International Children's Emergency Fund of the United Nations for the special care and feeding of children, and such contributions shall not be subject to the limitations and requirements provided in this joint resolution, but after $15,000,000 has been so contributed, no further contributions shall be made which would cause the aggregate amount so contributed by the United States (1) to constitute more than 57 percent of the aggregate amount contributed to said fund by all governments not receiving assistance from said fund, including the United States; or (2) to exceed $40,000,000, whichever is the lesser.

"There shall be established and maintained, out of the funds authorized under this joint resolution, a relief distribution mission for each of the countries receiving aid under this joint resolution. Such missions shall be comprised solely of American citizens who shall have been investigated as to loyalty and security by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Such missions shall have direct supervision and control, in each country, of relief supplies furnished or otherwise made available under this joint resolution, and, when it is deemed desirable by the field administrator provided for in section 4, such missions shall be empowered to retain possession of such supplies up to the city or local community where such supplies are actually made available to the ultimate consumers.

"Not more than $15,000,000 of the funds authorized under this joint resolution shall be available for relief in any countries or territories other than Austria, Greece, Hungary, Italy, Poland, Trieste, and China. This provision shall not imply any obligation to give relief to any of the countries mentioned.

"Notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed, until such time as an appropriation shall be made pursuant to this section, to make advances, not to exceed in the aggregate $75,000,000, to carry out the provisions of this joint resolution, in such manner and in such amounts as the President shall determine. From appropriations authorized under this section, there shall be repaid to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the advances made by it under the authority contained herein.

"SEC. 2. (a) Under the direction of the President, such relief assistance shall be provided in the form of transfers of supplies, or the establishment in this country of credits subject to the control of the President, in such quantities and on such terms as the President may determine; except that no such transfers of supplies or establishment of credits may be made after June 30, 1948, and except that not more than 6 per centum of the amount herein authorized shall be used for the procurement of supplies outside the United States and its Territories and possessions.

"(b) In carrying out this joint resolution, funds authorized herein may be used to pay necessary expenses related to the providing of such relief assistance, including expenses of or incident to the procurement, storage, transportation, and shipment of supplies transferred under subsection (a) or of supplies purchased from credits established under subsection (a).

"(c) Funds authorized under this joint resolution may be allocated for any of the purposes of this joint resolution to any department, agency, or independent establishment of the Government and such sums shall be available for obligation and expenditure in accordance with the laws governing obligations and expenditures of the department, agency, or independent establishment, or organizational unit thereof concerned, and without regard to sections 3709 and 3648 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 edition, title 41, sec. 5, and title 31, sec. 529).

"(d) Such additional civilian employees as may be required by the War Department in connection with the furnishing of procurement, storage, transportation, and shipment services under this joint resolution and which services are paid for from funds herein authorized, shall not be counted as civilian employees within the meaning of section 607 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1945, as amended by section 14 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946.

"(e) When any department, agency, or independent establishment of the Government receives request from the government of any country for which credits have been established under subsection (a) and receives, from credits so established, advancements or reimbursements for the cost and necessary expenses, it may furnish, or procure and furnish (if advancements are made), supplies within the category of relief assistance as defined in section 1 and may use sums so received for the purposes set forth in subsection (b) of this section. When any such reimbursement is made it shall be credited, at the option of the department, agency, or independent establishment concerned, either to the appropriation, fund, or account utilized in incurring the obligation, or to an appropriate appropriation, fund, or account which is current at the time of such reimbursement.

"(f) In order to supplement the general relief assistance made available under the terms of section 1 and to effect the economical and expanded use of American voluntary relief contributions, funds authorized under this joint resolution, not to exceed $5,000,000, may be used to pay necessary expenses related to the ocean transportation of supplies donated to or purchased by American voluntary and nonprofit relief agencies, and in such quantities and kinds and for such purposes as the President may determine to be essential supplements to the supplies provided for such general relief assistance.

"(g) The relief supplies provided under the terms of this joint resolution shall be procured and furnished by the appropriate United States procurement agencies unless the President shall determine otherwise.

"SEC. 3. No relief assistance shall be provided under the authority of this joint resolution to the people of any country unless the government of such country has given assurance satisfactory to the President that (a) the supplies transferred or otherwise made available pursuant to this joint resolution, as well as similar supplies produced locally or imported from outside sources, will be distributed among the people of such country without discrimination as to race, creed, or political belief; (b) representatives of the Government of the United States and of the press and radio of the United States will be permitted to observe freely and to report fully regarding the distribution and utilization of such supplies; (c) full and continuous publicity will be given within such country as to the purpose, source, character, scope, amounts and progress of the United States relief program carried on therein pursuant to this joint resolution; (d) if food, medical supplies, fertilizer, or seed is transferred or otherwise made available to such country pursuant to this joint resolution, no articles of the same character will be exported or removed from such country while need therefor for relief purposes continues; (e) such country has taken or is taking, insofar as possible, the economic measures necessary to reduce its relief needs and to provide for its own future reconstruction; (f) upon request of the President, it will furnish promptly information concerning the production, use, distribution, importation, and exportation of any supplies which affect the relief needs of the people of such country; (g) representatives of the Government of the United States will be permitted to supervise the distribution among the people of such country of the supplies transferred or otherwise made available pursuant to this joint resolution; (h) provision will be made for a control system so that all classes of people within such country will receive their fair share of essential supplies; and (i) all supplies transferred pursuant to this joint resolution or acquired through the use of credits established pursuant to this joint resolution and any articles processed from such supplies, or the containers of such supplies or articles, will, to the extent practicable, be marked, stamped, branded, or labeled in a conspicuous place as legibly, indelibly, and permanently as the nature of such supplies, articles, or containers will permit in such manner as to indicate to the ultimate consumer in such country that such supplies or articles have been furnished by the United States of America for relief assistance; or if such supplies, articles, or containers are incapable of being so marked, stamped, branded, or labeled, that all practicable steps will be taken to inform the ultimate consumers thereof that such supplies or articles have been furnished by the United States of America for relief assistance.

"SEC. 4. When supplies are transferred or otherwise made available to any country pursuant to this joint resolution, the President shall cause representatives of the Government of the United States (1) to supervise the distribution of such supplies among the people of such country, (2) to observe and report with respect to the carrying out of the assurances given to the President pursuant to section 3, and (3) to seek arrangements that reparations payable from current production by any such country to any other country by treaty be postponed during the period of such relief.

"With respect to the furnishing of relief assistance pursuant to this joint resolution, the President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a field administrator who shall direct the supervision of such relief assistance. Such administrator shall receive compensation at a rate not to exceed $12,000 per annum, and any necessary expenses, as the President shall determine. He shall act in accordance with the instructions of the President.

"The authority of the President under sections 2 and 3 and under this section may, to the extent the President directs, be exercised by the Secretary of State.

"SEC. 5. (a) The President shall promptly terminate the provision of relief assistance to the people of any country whenever he determines (1) that, by reason of changed conditions, the provision of relief assistance of the character authorized by this joint resolution is no longer necessary, (2) that any of the assurances given pursuant to section 3 are not being carried out, (3) that an excessive amount of any supplies transferred or otherwise made available pursuant to this joint resolution, or of similar supplies produced locally or imported from outside sources, is being used to assist in the maintenance of armed forces in such country, or (4) that supplies transferred or otherwise made available pursuant to this joint resolution, or similar supplies produced locally or imported from outside sources, are being exported or removed from such country.

"(b) Relief assistance to the people of any country, under this joint resolution, shall, unless sooner terminated by the President, be terminated whenever such termination is directed by concurrent resolution of the two Houses of the Congress.

"SEC. 6. To the extent that relief supplies procured with funds authorized under this joint resolution are not furnished on terms of repayment in dollars, they shall be furnished only upon condition that the government of the receiving country agree that when it sells such relief supplies for local currency (a) the amounts of such local currency will be deposited by it in a special account; (b) such account will be used within such country, as a revolving fund, until June 30, 1948, only upon the approval of the duly authorized representative of the United States, for relief and work relief purposes, including local currency expenses of the United States incident to the furnishing of relief; and (c) any unencumbered balance remaining in such account on June 30, 1948, will be disposed of within such country for such purposes as the United States Government, pursuant to Act or joint resolution of the Congress, may determine.

"SEC. 7. The President shall submit to the Congress quarterly reports of expenditures and activities under authority of this joint resolution."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 153) providing for relief assistance to the people of countries devastated by war, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Except for clerical and minor clarifying changes, the differences between the joint resolution as passed by the House and the substitute agreed to in conference are explained below.

AUTHORIZATION FOR APPROPRIATION

By the first section of the joint resolution as passed by the House, the appropriation of not more than $200,000,000 was authorized for relief assistance. This section also provided that from the sums appropriated the President could make contributions to the International Children's Emergency Fund of the United Nations for the special care and feeding of children (contributions for such purpose not to be subject to the limitations and requirements contained in the joint resolution with respect to funds used for relief assistance), and that after $15,000,000 had been so contributed no further contributions should be made which would cause the aggregate United States contribution (1) to constitute more than 57 percent of the aggregate amount contributed to such fund by all governments, including the United States, or (2) to exceed $50,000,000, whichever was the lesser.

The Senate amendment authorized an appropriation of $350,000,000 for the provision of relief assistance and contained no provision with respect to contributions to the Children's Emergency Fund.

The conference substitute authorizes the appropriation of not to exceed $350,000,000 for relief assistance, and includes a provision with respect to contributions to the Children's Emergency Fund, similar to the House provision, except that for the purpose of making mandatory the contribution of $15,000,000, the permissive phrase "may make contributions" has been changed to "shall make contributions"; and the clauses prescribing the maximum aggregate United States contribution to the fund have been amended to read as follows: ". . . which would cause the aggregate amount so contributed by the United States (1) to constitute more than 57 per centum of the aggregate amount contributed to said fund by all governments not receiving assistance from said fund, including the United States; or (2) to exceed $40,000,000, whichever is the lesser."

It is not intended that there be set aside indefinitely amounts sufficient to cover the maximum possible United States contribution to the fund determined on the basis of contributions made by other countries. It is understood that if the President determines, at a reasonable time prior to the termination of the relief assistance program, that there is no reasonable expectation that other governments will make contributions which will result in an increase in the aggregate amount to be contributed by the United States, he may utilize for the relief assistance program the amounts which have not been contributed to the Children's Emergency Fund.

ADVANCES BY RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

There has been included in the first section of the conference substitute a provision, taken from the Senate amendment, authorizing and directing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make advances, not to exceed an aggregate of $75,000,000, to carry out the provisions of the joint resolution, in such manner and in such amounts as the President shall determine. Provision is made for repayment to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation when appropriations are made pursuant to the joint resolution.

RELIEF-DISTRIBUTION MISSIONS

The joint resolution as passed by the House contained a provision that none of the funds authorized should be used for relief assistance in those countries whose governments are dominated by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics unless the governments of such countries agreed to a requirement which by the joint resolution was declared to be applicable to every country receiving aid under the provisions of the joint resolution. The requirement referred to, which was incorporated in the joint resolution, was that the State Department should establish and maintain a relief-distribution mission for each country receiving aid. This provision required that each such mission should be comprised solely of American citizens approved as to loyalty and security by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. It further provided that such missions should have direct supervision and control of relief supplies in each country and, when deemed desirable by the American authorities administering the provisions of the joint resolution, such missions should be empowered to retain possession of our relief supplies up to the city or local community where such supplies were actually made available to the ultimate consumers.

The provision as to the establishment of relief-distribution missions has been included in the conference substitute, with minor modifications, and since it will apply to all countries to which relief assistance is extended, the provision making specific reference to governments dominated by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics has not been retained. The principal changes which the conference substitute makes are to eliminate the reference to the State Department, to provide that the members of such missions shall be "investigated" rather than "approved" as to loyalty and security by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and to change the reference to "American authorities" to "the field administrator provided for by section 4."

The requirements as to American citizenship and investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation are intended to apply to all persons exercising the responsibilities with which each mission is entrusted; but there will be attached to the mission custodial and service personnel, recruited in foreign countries, as to which compliance with these requirements will not be practicable. It is not contemplated that any position of importance or influence will be filled by any person other than an American citizen who has been investigated by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

COUNTRIES TO RECEIVE RELIEF ASSISTANCE

The provision in the House joint resolution specifying the countries for which relief assistance may be made available, under the joint resolution, has been modified in the conference substitute. As modified it reads as follows:

"Not more than $15,000,000 of the funds authorized under this joint resolution shall be available for relief in any countries or territories other than Austria, Greece, Hungary, Italy, Poland, Trieste, and China. This provision shall not imply any obligation to give relief to any of the countries mentioned."

The House provision differed from the provision above quoted in that the specification of the countries was stated affirmatively rather than negatively; and Trieste was not included among the countries listed. The last sentence of the above-quoted provision was not contained in the House joint resolution.

PROCUREMENT OF SUPPLIES OUTSIDE THE UNITED STATES

The House joint resolution provided that not more than 10 percent of the appropriations authorized should be expended for the procurement of relief supplies in countries other than the United States. A similar provision is included in the conference substitute, taken from the Senate amendment. Under this provision not more than 6 percent of the amount authorized by the joint resolution may be used for the procurement of supplies outside of the United States and its Territories and possessions.

EMPLOYEE CEILING

The conference substitute contains a provision to the effect that additional civilian employees required by the War Department in connection with the furnishing of procurement, storage, transportation, and shipment services paid for from funds authorized by the joint resolution shall not be counted as civilian employees within the meaning of section 607 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1945, as amended by section 14 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946. This is based on a Senate provision which applied to any department, agency, or independent establishment.

SUPPLIES MADE AVAILABLE BY AMERICAN RELIEF AGENCIES

There is included in section 2 of the conference substitute a provision taken from the Senate amendment, reading as follows:

"(f) In order to supplement the general relief assistance made available under the terms of section 1 and to effect the economical and expanded use of American voluntary relief contributions, funds authorized under this joint resolution, not to exceed $5,000,000, may be used to pay necessary expenses related to the ocean transportation of supplies donated to or purchased by American voluntary and nonprofit relief agencies, and in such quantities and kinds and for such purposes as the President may determine to be essential supplements to the supplies provided for such general relief assistance."

ASSURANCES GIVEN BY RECIPIENT COUNTRIES

In section 3 of the conference substitute, providing that relief assistance shall not be granted to the people of any country unless its government has given certain assurances satisfactory to the President, two new clauses taken from the Senate amendment have been added.

One of these, clause (h), requires that assurance must be given that provision will be made for a control system so that all classes of people within the recipient country will receive their fair share of essential supplies. The other of these clauses, clause (i), reads as follows:

"(i) all supplies transferred pursuant to this joint resolution or acquired through the use of credits established pursuant to this joint resolution and any articles processed from such supplies, or the containers of such supplies or articles, will, to the extent practicable, be marked, stamped, branded, or labeled in a conspicuous place as legibly, indelibly, and permanently as the nature of such supplies, articles, or containers will permit in such manner as to indicate to the ultimate consumer in such country that such supplies or articles have been furnished by the United States of America for relief assistance; or if such supplies, articles, or containers are incapable of being so marked, stamped, branded, or labeled, that all practicable steps will be taken to inform the ultimate consumers thereof that such supplies or articles have been furnished by the United States of America for relief assistance."

LAW LIBRARY FEDERAL WORKS AGENCY

There was included in this section of the House joint resolution a clause (h), requiring assurance that when relief supplies procured with funds authorized by the joint resolution were sold by a receiving government for local currency the amounts of such local currency should be deposited by the recipient government in a special account and should be used only for relief and rehabilitation purposes with the approval of the duly authorized representative of the United States. In the conference substitute this provision has been omitted, but there has been included as section 6 of the conference substitute a similar and more comprehensive provision, taken from the Senate amendment, which reads as follows:

"SEC. 6. To the extent that relief supplies procured with funds authorized under this joint resolution are not furnished on terms of repayment in dollars, they shall be furnished only upon condition that the government of the receiving country agree that when it sells such relief supplies for local currency (a) the amounts of such local currency will be deposited by it in a special account; (b) such account will be used within such country, as a revolving fund, until June 30, 1948, only upon the approval of the duly authorized representative of the United States, for relief and work relief purposes, including local currency expenses of the United States incident to the furnishing of relief; and (c) any unencumbered balance remaining in such account on June 30, 1948, will be disposed of within such country for such purposes as the United States Government, pursuant to Act or joint resolution of the Congress, may determine."

ADMINISTRATION

The House joint resolution provided for the appointment by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, of a relief administrator to perform such functions, relating to the administration of the joint resolution, as the President might prescribe. Such administrator was to receive such salary and have such staff as the President should determine.

A provision in the Senate amendment would have provided for an administrator to direct the supervision of relief assistance only in Europe. This provision provided for a salary of not to exceed $12,000 per annum, and any necessary expenses, as the President should determine.

The conference substitute, in section 4, provides for a field administrator, who is to direct the supervision of relief assistance under the joint resolution, such field administrator to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. As to salary and expenses this provision follows the Senate amendment. Such administrator is to act in accordance with the instructions of the President.

A provision from the Senate amendment has been included in section 4, providing that the authority of the President under that section and under sections 2 and 3 may, to the extent the President directs, be exercised by the Secretary of State.

PROVISION RELATING TO REPARATIONS

Section 4 of the House joint resolution provided that when supplies were transferred or otherwise made available to any country the President should cause representatives of the Government of the United States, among other things, to "make certain that reparations payable by any such country to any other country by treaty have been postponed during the period of such relief". The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

In the conference substitute this provision of section 4 has been modified so that, when relief assistance has been so made available, the President is to cause representatives of the Government of the United States "to seek arrangements that reparations payable from current production by any such country to any other country by treaty be postponed during the period of such relief".

KARL E. MUNDT,
SOL BLOOM,
JOHN KEE,
Managers on the Part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JONKMAN].

Mr. JONKMAN. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was up for debate in the House, I called attention to the fact that its provisions were intended only for residual relief after termination of UNRRA. UNRRA has now been in existence for nearly 3 years, in which time, of course, Europe has had two crop periods, and is approaching another one. When we passed the first UNRRA authorization, we were told that the purpose of UNRRA and its scope was to bring the war-devastated countries through one crop period. Now, I repeat, we have had two full crop periods, and nearly 3 years of UNRRA, and this bill was intended only as a cleaning up, or mopping up process, in other words, to finish what was nearly done.

For this reason the 1947 budget included $100,000,000 for this purpose. In the debate on the bill under question, your attention was further called to the fact that President Truman, in his message, said that help would be needed only through 1947; that the United Nations organization recommended help until this year's crops were harvested; that ex-President Herbert Hoover recommended help through this year's crop period; that every representative of the State Department, Under Secretaries Acheson and Clayton, Deputy Under Secretary Tyler Wood, all agreed that no help would be needed in 1948, with the possible exception of some limited help in Austria. In fact, all the authoritative sources were agreed that help was needed only from March 31, 1947, through the crop period of 1947.

Your attention was called to the fact that there was a sense of proportion in the job to be done before the next crop harvest and the $100,000,000 in the budget with which that job was to be done.

Your attention was further called to the fact that in upping the amount to $350,000,000, the administration had admitted that this amount was partly based on judgment and partly grabbed out of the air. The evidence, of course, is overwhelming that the extension of the term of relief for 6 months, to June 30, 1948, was also grabbed out of the air. These two changes have all the earmarks of changing residual relief into continuous and permanent relief by bureaucratic boondogglers.

I now want to give you some facts which I think would justify cutting this amount to $100,000,000, and to prove to you that when we authorize $200,000,000, it is a very liberal authorization.

I hold in my hand the President's tenth quarterly report to Congress on the operations of UNRRA. This came to our desks last Saturday, May 17. This tenth quarterly report is not for the first quarter of 1947, although it was received 47 days after the ending of that quarter. Had it been for that quarter, we might have had some useful information to help our judgment on the pending bill. It is in fact a report for the last quarter of 1946, and it was kept confidential and secret, and not to be relased until May 15, 1947.

It contains some rather interesting information, but is more intriguing for its lack of information. On page 34 of that report, we find that total contributions to UNRRA, paid or available, were $3,688,395,736. On pages 24 and 25 we find a double-check statement that total shipments to December 31, 1946, were $2,311,225,000. According to these figures, there was available on January 1, 1947, $1,377,170,736.

Now, I do not mean to say that that amount was available the 1st of January, but the accounting does not preclude such an assumption. It does not show what happened to it, or how much of it is available at the present time.

To get any idea of what was available, we can turn to the President's letter of transmittal on page 1, the third paragraph, where he says:

> The approximate value of supplies remaining to be shipped on January 1, 1947, was a world total of $660,000,000.

Where the President gets this figure, I do not know. Perhaps they keep two sets of books. I was unable to find this statement, or any basis for it, in the report itself.

Then on page 38 the report states that the balance available for commitment amounts to $165,379,746. Now these two items put together, supplies remaining to be shipped and balance available for commitment, amount to $825,379,746. That was the amount available, apparently, on January 1, 1947, and leaves $551,790,990 unaccounted for. Perhaps, by a long process of deduction and elimination, one could ascertain that this went for shipping charges and administrative expenses, but the report does not show this. It could just as well represent contributions not yet "paid" but "available."

When we made the second appropriation for UNRRA last year, a balance of $180,000,000 of the contribution of the United Kingdom was so listed as available. Upon investigation, it was found that it was not really available; that the United Kingdom was unable to furnish supplies for that amount, and had made $180,000,000 in sterling available until such time as supplies could be bought within the United Kingdom. We know that the United Kingdom has not been in any better position to furnish supplies than it was at that time, and unless they were able to pay it out of the $3,750,000,000 loan, this might account for the difference of $550,000,000 unaccounted for.

This is not said in disparagement or criticism of the United Kingdom, for it is a matter of common knowledge that she needs relief, and is probably using the $3,750,000,000 to support her own people.

However, we do know, if the President's figures are correct, that the amount of $825,379,746 was available on January 1, 1947. Now, if we spent $2,311,225,000 in the first 30 months of UNRRA, that will average about $77,000,000 per month. So that if they spent at the same rate in 1947 that they did in the preceding 2½ years, they would have sufficient supplies and funds at $77,000,000 a month to run them for 10¾ months, or into the latter part of November 1947, without $1 of the $350,000,000 we are considering at the present time. And remember, this is residual relief in a few countries. We are not pouring it into Bielorussia, the Ukraine, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, and other countries, as we did in those 30 months.

We can double check this from another angle. Page 3 of the report, paragraph 3, states:

> During the quarter September 30 to December 31, 1946, UNRRA shipped supplies worth $253,795,000 to the receiving countries.

Now, if we divide $253,000,000 by three, that will amount to about eighty-four or eighty-five million a month. To be sure, in the next paragraph they immediately apologize for this low amount with the following statement:

> Although shipments in October at $52,000,000, in November valued at $92,000,000, and in December valued at $109,000,000, fell below the previous average of $149,367,000 per month, which had been maintained during the first 8 months of 1946, the drop was largely due to the accumulated effects of shipping and coal strikes.

Here, again, we have an example of the shovel-and-pitchfork method of UNRRA. According to this statement, a year has only 11 months. After giving us the amounts for October, November, and December, they give a higher figure for the first 8 months, which should be 9 months. In other words, they take the balance spent outside of October, November, and December, and divide it by 8, which makes $149,000,000, when they should divide it by 9, which makes only $132,000,000 per month. Quite some difference. And these people, who forget that a year has 12 months, give us bills we must pass with hardly the privilege of dotting an "i" or crossing a "t."

When we take into consideration that this average was during 1946 after the first crop period, with many more countries receiving relief, and we are now dealing with the period after the second crop period, with much less countries needing relief, and which is to be only residual relief, and for which they had at least $825,000,000 at the beginning of the year, we can understand why at first, and in harmony with all the other testimony, only $100,000,000 was provided in the budget. We can also have some idea as to why this amount would amply take care of the situation. Why, then, was the amount of $100,000,000 upped to $350,000,000, and the term of relief extended from, we will say, December 1947 to June 30, 1948?

It seems to me that the fact that Paul Porter went to Greece on January 16, 1947, to make a survey may be an element in the changed picture. It is true that he headed a mission to Greece, but this was before the administration had knowledge that the United Kingdom was pulling out of Greece, and I think the relief bill is part of a pattern.

Now, Paul Porter is one of the triumvirate of Porter, Henderson, and Bowles, who, according to the newspapers, through ADA, last week advised the people of the United States that they must increase wages and cut prices to avoid a depression. In my opinion, there is no swifter or surer way to destroy our free enterprise and economy. I do not know how the Members like that philosophy, but I do not subscribe to it. Paul Porter, as we know, succeeded Chester Bowles as OPA Administrator, and the night that he took that office he made a speech in Washington in which he said:

> I want it emphatically understood that OPA is not a receivership; and that I am not a liquidator. OPA is a going concern, composed of loyal men and women who have done much for the country and are going to do much more.

The American people, as we know, thought otherwise.

It seems to me that Paul Porter went over there to perpetuate his going concern. At least it must be admitted that it was about that time that we changed from a residua' relief concept to a continued, if not perpetual relief, by extending the term to June 30, 1948, instead of at the end of the next crop harvest, or let us say after the first of the year, and upping the expense to $350,000,000.

Let us take a paragraph on the report of the American Economic Mission to Greece which is as follows:

> The psychology of certain elements in Greece has operated as a serious impediment to recovery. There has been a sense of helplessness, and in some quarters a feeling that because Greece suffered so much during the war, it is now entitled to the care of its richer allies. There is the widely held view that external factors in Greek problems are so large that individual efforts are futile. The lack of confidence among government officials and the people in the ability of Greece to save itself financially and the belief that it must depend on aid from abroad has contributed to an appalling inertia.

I think most of us will agree that this is the psychology in other countries, and that the more of our substance we pour into these countries, the more they will look for help. This was the psychology even in our own country, and most of us remember how difficult it was to get rid of the relief agencies. Having abolished them here, we should not now begin them on an international scale.

The foregoing reasoning, it seems to me, is fortified by the fact that although it is now almost 2 months past March 31, we have heard little complaint of the gap between UNRRA and this proposed relief. And yet, the question may be asked, how did the people in these six countries get along during the period of this gap? Of course, the figures I just gave you on UNRRA supply the answer. Nevertheless, one of the members of the conference was quoted in the newspapers as saying when the $150,000,000 cut was restored by the conferees:

> Recent reports from Europe helped influence the result. Reports in the last few days indicate relief pressure in Europe was greater than was contemplated when the figure of $350,000,000 was set. There was a feeling the situation cannot be met with any smaller amount.

Interesting that this report should come in the last few days. The same few days in which the bill was in danger of the $150,000,000 cut, but never before that.

It has been said on the other end of the Capitol that this is only an authorization, and that the Appropriations Committee can keep the amount down to $200,000,000. The answer is that on an authorization of this nature, the camel gets its nose under the tent for the whole amount, and it will be most difficult for the Appropriations Committee to cut it down once a foreign relief mission has made commitments, even though they may not be urgently needed.

I believe in the bipartisan foreign policy, and in our precarious situation, a bipartisan domestic policy, for that matter. But it is not a sound bipartisan foreign policy when we agree merely to achieve agreement with the administration on the proposed reckless and unfounded spending policy.

It is my belief that the House should insist on reducing the amount in the bill to $200,000,000; that this will be ample together with the $825,000,000 that was available at the beginning of the year, to carry these countries through the next harvest and up to the first of the year, and even considerable beyond that. It seems to me, in the meantime, a thorough investigation should be made as to the real situation in regard to UNRRA funds available, and then in the January session we can review the situation and act with some degree of intelligence, instead of throwing away the taxpayers' money with reckless abandon and without knowledge of the facts.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. JONKMAN. I am now going to say a word about the $15,000,000, for the children's fund and I think if you will examine you will find that the report is very ambiguous. It is said they are in effect cutting this authorization by $15,000,000 which is given to the Children's Relief Agency. They say it may amount to $40,000,000 and may eventually cut this authorization in effect by $40,000,000. But in my opinion all that they are going to get for the children's fund from us or anybody else is the $15,000,000 for there will not be any additional contributions to this children's fund until the other countries provide for their 43-percent assessment.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. BLOOM. According to the House bill, the children's fund did not get anything. It was only permissive for the President to give it to them. In this bill, as the gentleman will know if he reads the conference report, it is mandatory to give the children's fund at least $15,000,000, and then the other 57 percent up to the $40,000,000 depends upon the amount of money that is received from the other United Nations. Now, the other $25,000,000 depends upon the proportionate share of what the other United Nations spend. In doing it that way it allows us to try to get the other United Nations to spend their amount of money so that we will get the $25,000,000, but the $40,000,000 is given in here, and it was originally provided up to November 30 to earmark that added $25,000,000.

Mr. JONKMAN. I agree with the gentleman. We absolutely give $15,000,000, and then the other countries have to make up 43 percent, which amounts to $11,300,000, and the total will be $26,300,000, representing 57 percent of our money and 43 percent of their money. But, are you going to ask the other nations to give their contributions all to the children's fund? How much do you expect to get from the other nations?

Mr. BLOOM. I will say this to the gentleman: It allows us to go to the children's fund of the United Nations and get them to appropriate their amount of money so that we can give our amount of money, and it is in our favor to do it this way rather than another way.

Mr. JONKMAN. I am telling the gentleman from New York it will be one of the sore spots when you expect to get $26,000,000 and you have to work on that 43 percent from the United Nations for their contribution. You will have to ask them to contribute first to the children's fund to get the $40,000,000. They will have something to say about that, too.

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman has reached an erroneous conclusion.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the conference committee in adjusting the differences that existed between both branches, and it is a pleasure to me to not only vote for the conference report but to urge that my colleagues vote for and adopt it.

My purpose in rising on this occasion is to make some suggestions to those who will administer this law on the part of our Government.

I notice in the conference report the establishment of a joint relief mission for each of the countries receiving aid under this joint resolution. I think that is a mighty fine idea. I also note the provision that the members of the mission shall be investigated as to loyalty and security by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. I think that is a wise provision, certainly one that nobody can object to as we consider world conditions today and the purpose for which this money will be used. I also note with great pleasure that such mission shall have direct supervision and control, in each country, of relief supplies furnished.

I hope the selection of the members of the various missions and other employees will be made with great care. I hope the benefits flowing to the unfortunate people of the countries that will receive the benefits will go to the people, and that the intent of Congress will be carried out by those administering the relief that will flow as a result of the passage of this bill.

While I voted for UNRRA, I state frankly that I never enthusiastically favored the idea, but the relief of human beings was the thing that was uppermost, and to try to propose some other method at that time would have interfered with the call of humanity. I did not like this inernational agency with its complex personnel and the complicated results that I could visualize would flow therefrom. I felt and always have felt that America's response to the call of humanity should be as direct as possible, and that not only should we do it directly but try to benefit the people who needed it in other countries in such a manner that there would be an appreciation of the fact that the Government of America, the people of America, were their friends.

I have said on the floor of this House repeatedly that in the world of tomorrow we need all the friends we can have, even the people of little Liberia, using that as an illustration. This bill gives an opportunity, with the right kind of administration, to bring about the maximum results as far as relief is concerned, and the maximum results as far as the cementing for countless generations to come of friendship between the people of America and the people of the countries that will benefit, if the relief is administered in the right way and as the Congress intended in the passage of this law.

It is not my purpose to suggest the names of the men who should be selected, but it is within my prerogative to suggest the type of men who should be selected. For example, I think those selections should fit into the people of the nations receiving relief and be persons who understand their problems and their background. In Poland, for instance, Americans of Polish blood should be on the mission, and in Italy Americans of Italian blood, but I think those Americans should have been born here.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Does the gentleman believe the Communist government in Poland should have anything to do with the distribution of this fund?

Mr. McCORMACK. Absolutely not. I am coming to that.

Mr. RANKIN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. The language of the bill is, "Such mission shall have direct supervision and control." This means that we should not have it administered in such a manner that a political party would benefit, and in the countries behind the iron curtain there is only one political party permitted to exist. We are making this appropriation to help unfortunate human beings, and those carrying out this law on the part of America should see that the intent of Congress is faithfully carried out, that those human beings benefit, that the people of those countries are resuscitated as much as possible, and that the political parties in the Communist-controlled governments shall not be permitted to use this relief to strengthen themselves in those countries of which they have temporary control.

The type of persons appointed to administer this program, or employed in connection with it, is of vital importance in carrying out the intent of Congress and in the success of this undertaking.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS].

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Speaker, I am the only conferee who did not sign this report. I regret to find myself in disagreement with my colleagues on this, just as I regret that I disapproved of many provisions of the bill as it was reported from our committee to the House. I proposed or supported eight amendments on the House floor, seven of these were adopted.

In my judgment, the bill as reflected in the report is in many respects a great improvement over the original bill. Of the nine amendments which were incorporated into the bill on the floor of the House, five are now in the bill in substantially the same form, two are in modified form, and two have been omitted.

The difficulty with this relief measure is that it is only a partial proposition. Let us bear in mind that the State Department said that the figure of $350,000,000 was picked out of the air. No one is contending that the full $350,000,000 will meet the relief problem in Europe because the State Department contends that $550,000,000 is the absolute minimum need there. So that, no one contends that this $350,000,000 will solve the whole relief problem. As President Hoover said, no mortal man knows the relative relief needs in Europe and our ability to supply them this fall until the harvests are made here and in Europe.

Unquestionably, $200,000,000 is sufficient to carry us up to that time.

I thought the way to handle this uncertainty was to have a joint congressional committee review the needs and our ability to fill them in the fall. The House did not agree with that viewpoint. I was in conference willing to split the difference between the House and the Senate and have the conferees pick a figure out of the air of $315,000,000, which involved a general relief figure of $275,000,000 and adding $40,000,000 for the children's fund. The other conferees felt it was necessary to hold rigidly to this $350,000,000 figure that had been picked out of the air by the State Department.

We know that the State Department has a survey going on all over the world to find out what the relief and reconstruction needs are so as to measure our ability to meet these needs. It seems to me that we could well act on something less than the full program requested in this bill until we get some such report back and study it. We know that from now on, since we cannot relieve all of the needs of the world, we have to help our friends and we have to keep our economy in shape so that we can help our friends.

One other provision concerns me, and that was the change made with reference to reparations. The House provided that the President should make certain that reparations payable by any country to another country by treaty be postponed during the period we furnish relief. The conference report merely says the President shall seek arrangements to postpone reparations while we furnish relief. We are looking forward to treaty reparations. The House provision permitted reparations required or demanded by Russia under armistice agreements to go out and relief to go into those countries at the same time, but attempted to stop future treaty reparations which will necessitate relief from us.

The hearings show that $23,000,000 is required from Hungary in reparations which cause that country to require relief. I am deeply conscious of the position of Hungary and I want to see Hungary given some help, but I do not like to see our country take the position that we are going to approve a treaty which will require reparations which will require relief from us and thus have us paying the reparations. I am opposed to our paying Russian treaty reparations, directly or indirectly. That is exactly what ratification of those treaties will mean, under this bill as the conferees amended it.

This report says the President shall seek arrangements to postpone these treaty reparations after we have approved them? Who do you think the President will contact to seek arrangements like this? Why, Joe Stalin, for the country demanding reparations under such circumstances is Russia. And how much attention will Stalin pay to our plea to postpone reparations in a treaty we have just approved? I think the conferees could have done better with that particular section. I think the conferees could have done better on the amount. It should be more than $200,000,000. It does not need to be $350,000,000. While I know that we must have a relief bill, and I know we shall, I think the conferees should try again, and therefore I am not going to support the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS] has expired.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS].

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, there are two factors involved in whether or not the House should support its conferees, which I strongly urge upon the House.

The first is a question of principle, the second, a question of figures.

On the question of principle, I think we have made our views very clearly known. Certainly one thing must distinguish the people of this country and the Congress of this country—a sense of responsibility. The Congress by overwhelmingly passing a program for assistance to Greece and Turkey has not made an idle gesture, but has undertaken a definite responsibility in the world. It is that responsibility which we are, in part, called upon to discharge today. It is quite footless to defend Greece and Turkey against forces or social systems that threaten their national integrity and their national security, and at the same time to let millions of people in other European countries, including Greece, starve. By undertaking the Greek-Turkish assistance program we have agreed with the world that we will pull our oar in the boat; and we have recognized that the security of the United States is not safeguarded along the borders of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans of the continental United States, but is safeguarded in the Pindus Mountains of Greece and on the Black Sea coasts of Turkey. Now we are called upon by this relief bill to say also that it is safeguarded in the hearts and minds and physical and spiritual integrity of the peoples of Italy, Austria, Hungary, Greece, and Poland as well.

The argument was made that a number of those countries are Communist-dominated. That question was thrashed out in the House very thoroughly before. The basic issue is this: If they are Communist-dominated now, do you want to surrender them forever, or do you still want to try to win their adherence to our kind of life by showing that it is the United States and its type of society which has the great heart, and that it is another type of society which does not; or do you just want to give up these peoples and let them go down the drain forever? For these peoples know very well that in a Communist society a man's right to eat depends on his politics. Do we want them to conclude that we, too, have taken this path?

We come now to the question of fact. What are the facts about this situation? A very distinguished member of our committee, takes the report of UNRRA and analyzes it; analyzes a good many bookkeeping figures in order to try to draw certain conclusions. As I have taken notes of what he said, he comes to two conclusions. Either UNRRA was spending $140,000,000 a month or it was spending $77,000,000 a month, and therefore it could go on for either 10 months or 5 months. But that makes a very great difference, for either its whole program is finished this month or it is not, and we know that it is finished. The difference, of course, is a very real one, too, because we are not talking just a lot of bookkeeping figures and trying to prove a dialectical case; we are trying to feed people. Words uttered here and analyses made here are not going to feed them if they do not have the food. Former President Hoover, in whom many of the Members of this House have great confidence and who went into this thing in very great detail and studied it thoroughly, said he is for this bill. He is for this bill for $350,000,000. I am confident he looked into the UNRRA situation as well, and would have drawn attention to any such circumstance as might enable UNRRA to carry on.

Finally, let us look at the record on this question of adequacy of the funds provided. Is the $310,000,000, for relief to the countries to be aided, which is now contained in the conference report, necessary, and how is it reconciled with the proposition that the general fund for relief may not get contributions from other nations? The record on that is very clear. I call the attention of the Members to page 107; it says that $180,000,000 is necessary for grains alone to take care of just 1947 for the six principal countries under consideration.

The remainder, the difference between $180,000,000 and a total of $296,000,000 needed for food alone, or $116,000,000, is needed for fats, meat, pulses, and dairy products—all foods. Therefore, your $296,000,000 is the minimum food figure. It compares with a base figure of $290,000,000 provided in the bill. That leaves out medical supplies, materials for clothing, fuel, fertilizer, and other items in this bill. This food to sustain a diet of 2,000 to 2,100 calories per day compares with average United States consumption of 3,400 calories per day.

If the House approves this conference report, therefore, you will be enabling the United States at least to fill out the elementary basic food needs of these peoples.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will adopt the conference report.

I believe that those members of this body who opposed UNRRA have a very good reason for supporting this method of providing relief, because this is what might be called the unilateral method.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JONKMAN], pointed out that at the beginning of this year there were some $825,000,000 left in UNRRA. I would say that that was probably known to the United Nations Expert Committee and to the State Department when they requested the amount of $350,000,000, and that the mere fact that there has been some delay in furnishing relief under UNRRA is no reason for cutting down the relief now. To my knowledge the need still exists.

Furthermore, I am reliably informed that the relief needs of Italy alone between now and the end of the year are $120,000,000. Italy is suffering tremendously from the ravages of war and is continually on the verge of communistic upheaval.

I would point out also that this relief bill is a part of our foreign policy. It is as much a part of our foreign policy as the Greek-Turkish bill. We upheld the Greek-Turkish bill in this House; we should uphold this conference report now.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, it strikes me that to a certain extent this debate on the amount of the authorization is a little beside the point. During the original debate on the bill I asked the gentleman from New York [Mr.

BLOOM] whether or not this was an appropriation bill or an authorization bill. He said it was merely a customary authorization bill. In other words, the final decision and the time when the House will have a chance to make the real decision on the amount will come when the appropriations are being considered. So, I do not think it is important to limit the authorization at this time because the real decision will come when the appropriations are made.

I want to say one other thing. It is this.

Personally I believe we ought not to approach this relief and rehabilitation matter on a piecemeal basis. We have now pending before the War Department subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee a $725,000,000 budget estimate for occupied countries. Then there is the $400,000,000 for Greece and Turkey. There is the $350,000,000 under this bill for war devastated countries. And another proposal is coming up, we understand, for $78,000,000 for Korea. Then perhaps some other amounts for the IRO, as successor to UNRRA.

My own belief is that these things should be brought up in one appropriation bill and that the Appropriations Committee should consider them all at one time, taking a look at the amount of available supplies we can export, the amount of material we can devote to rehabilitation, the amount of money that the United States Government can afford to spend in other parts of the world, and present the whole picture to the House at one time.

This piecemeal attack on our overseas commitments is fundamentally wrong.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KEE].

Mr. KEE. Mr. Speaker, we have heard it repeatedly said upon the floor of the House that the figure of $350,000,000 has been picked out of the air. That is quite a current expression. You frequently hear it. However, that is not the case in this instance, because the figure was definitely not picked out of the air.

The $350,000,000 was arrived at from the fact that the United Nations Security Council after a careful and very extensive investigation of the relief needs of the countries for which this relief is intended fixed a figure of $610,000,000 as being the amount absolutely necessary for the relief of these people during the current year. The $610,000,000 figure fixed by the Security Council is the amount absolutely necessary in the current calendar year for the relief of these people. The amount allocated to be donated by the United States Government for that purpose is 57 percent or $350,000,000, which amount was inserted in the bill.

When the bill came before the House for consideration an amendment was offered which allocated and earmarked $50,000,000 for the children's relief fund. Of that amount $15,000,000 was to be paid at the instance or discretion of the President at once and the other $35,000,000 deferred until it was ascertained whether or not the other nations made their contributions to the fund. The conferees retained that fund in the bill, reducing it however, to $40,000,000. We made the payment of $15,000,000 mandatory on the part of the President so that it reduced the fund provided in the measure for relief purposes by $15,000,000. We leave $25,000,000 earmarked for the children's relief fund providing the other nations contribute, which they will likely do, and this will further reduce the amount allowed by this bill to $310,000,000, leaving that amount alone for carrying the burden of $350,000,000 for relief.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS] said a moment ago that we all agree $350,000,000 will not relieve the situation in Europe. Of course, we all agree with that statement. The statement is verified by the fact that the Security Council after its investigation fixed the amount absolutely necessary at $610,000,000. Therefore this $350,000,000, after reducing it approximately $40,000,000 by the children's fund, will be just a drop in the bucket toward relieving the situation in the countries of Europe for which it is intended, and if we reduce it, as is suggested by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JONKMAN], to $200,000,000, you leave only $160,000,000 to meet a very desperate situation.

Mr. Speaker, during the last meeting of our conference committee, just before we adjourned, we had a telegram from Europe read to us stating that conditions in the countries over there, in Austria and in Italy especially, were growing worse every day; that not only had there been a partial and very heavy crop failure but that there was promised a complete crop failure, and that this relief was needed and needed instantly.

Mr. Speaker, I heartily approve the conference report, and I hope it will be approved by this body.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON].

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, the statement has been made here that the figure of $350,000,000 was simply picked out of the air. I rise as a member of the committee to refute that statement. The United Nations has investigated this particular situation in Europe.

The American Government has investigated the situation through the United States embassies. The Department of Agriculture has investigated it as to food requirements. The Department of State has had its own people there looking into the situation. The Food and Agricultural Survey Mission of the United Nations has checked the situation. The United Nations Committee of Experts on the needs for 1947 has investigated. They have said that it would take $583,000,000 for relief, exclusive of China, and it will be noted that this bill authorizes only $350,000,000.

Also the data obtained by the subcommittee of the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations has entered into this finding of $350,000,000 as necessary. I would like to point out to this economy-minded Congress that under the United Nations relief we were taking 72 percent of the burden and now we are only going to take 57 percent of the burden. We have reduced the figure. This relief is not for just giving away of money and materials. It is chiefly for food to prevent starvation. This relief is to raise these people to the absolute minimum beyond which they would starve. Even the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JONKMAN], admits that this fund is not sufficient to keep them from starving.

Mr. JONKMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. JONKMAN. Did the gentleman say I admitted that this fund was not enough to keep them from starving?

Mr. FULTON. The gentleman feels, I take it from his statement, that this fund itself will not keep these people from starving.

Mr. JONKMAN. I, on the contrary, claim to have demonstrated that they cannot spend the fund that they have judiciously. They can spend and they can waste, but a billion dollars is a lot of money to spend.

Mr. FULTON. May I say this, that the gentleman from Michigan did not bring you up to date on the figures; that the last shipment of UNRRA relief which we were to provide has now been sent from these shores. May I point out that Senator VANDENBERG testified, page 5123 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in that respect. So, the gentleman from Michigan is incorrect in his statement that this money, and the goods and the food purchased, are unexpended, because Senator VANDENBERG himself on the Senate floor said categorically that the last shipment has already left our shores.

As long ago as last January Secretary of State Marshall said that this was No. 1 on his list of 27 foreign-affairs measures that we should have for the peace of the world. I believe I will stand with General Marshall and with Senator VANDENBERG.

Mr. MATHEWS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. MATHEWS. There is obviously a discrepancy between the first five lines of the bill and page 1 of the report.

Mr. FULTON. Would the gentleman ask his question directly.

Mr. MATHEWS. Subsection (b) of section 2 on the second page. What I want to ask the gentleman is this: Can we be given assurance that out of the $350,000,000 authorized to be appropriated will be included the salaries of the missions and the commission and all persons connected with it?

Mr. FULTON. I will assure the gentleman, as a member of the committee, that all expenses for administration, traveling, and expenses of all the missions in each of the countries are included in the authorization of the $350,000,000 specifically.

Mr. MATHEWS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. LODGE. I just want to point out something in connection with the change made in conference in the clause that was in the House bill which provided that reparations payable by treaty by any country receiving relief to any other country must be postponed during the period of such relief. It was my intention, as the author of that amendment, to protect the American taxpayer against having to make payments both for relief and for reparations. It was my intention to protect the Hungarians against the burden of treaty reparations and if that was not possible to obtain a postponement of reparations payments. It was not my intention that the Hungarians, for instance, should be deprived of relief after the other body by ratifying the treaty had decided that they should pay reparations. It does not seem to me fair to the Hungarians or to the Italians—insofar as they might be affected—just because the other body decides to ratify these treaties, that they should be deprived of relief. It just so happens that I believe that ratification of these treaties should be withheld. However, since the Foreign Relations Committee of the other body has ratified these treaties, I believe that the change that was made in conference was entirely right. The President will seek a postponement of reparations payments and if he does not succeed the Hungarians will nevertheless receive relief.

Mr. FULTON. I believe the gentleman has made a very excellent statement, that we did not want in any way to find that the relief we send over goes into reparations to any country, instead of to these people that are intended to get the relief. We have taken great care to see that the assistance will simply go in as relief to prevent starvation.

May I cite Senator VANDENBERG as to the necessity for this $350,000,000? I believe he has served the Republican Party well as our senatorial leader on foreign policy. I ask the Republican side particularly to listen to what Senator VANDENBERG has to say on the necessity for $350,000,000:

> Without this measure there is no use in trying to save Greece, as both Houses of Congress have voted overwhelmingly to do, because this relief is specifically at the base of our Greek plan.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM].

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, the statement read on UNRRA is the statement of the United States participation in UNRRA. UNRRA is an international body. What we are trying to do here is something the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON] and I started in New York City at the United Nations last year. We are doing something here on which we have the handle in our own grip. We are doing it. We have the control of this thing completely. If you reduce this from $350,000,000, which is 57 percent of the $610,000,000, which we went over very carefully in New York City, not in a minute or a day or a week, for it took months to do this thing—if you reduce that $350,000,000 to $200,000,000, then you are automatically reducing the contributions of the other United Nations to the $610,000,000, which we figured at that time was the lowest amount, the smallest amount we could possibly try to do the job for in Europe.

It is a fact that since we started the hearings on this legislation and before we had it on the floor of the House we received word from all over Europe and the different countries that the situation there today is much worse, much worse than it was when we had this bill here for consideration. There is no question about that.

We have given $40,000,000 for the children, and that will be given to the children. A promise has been made that that will be given. I think I had something to do with that as far as the other nations are concerned. Then we will give them $5,000,000 to defray the expenses of sending food that is contributed to this fund by different organizations, for nothing. So that is $45,000,000 taken off, which leaves only $305,000,000.

As was said here, this is an authorization, and we can find out what is necessary to be done to see that proper relief is given. This figure has not been taken out of the air. This figure has been calculated and figured out very carefully. The total sum is $610,000,000.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I am strongly in favor of adopting this bill as reported by the conference committee; first, because we have had assurances that we will have no further relief demands in the near future, and, second, because of the tremendous need and the starvation among the suffering people in Europe as compared with the almost unlimited supply and variety of food available to all Americans.

I believe this bill expresses the innate desire of the American people to do, as they have always done, go to the rescue of our starving neighbors across the sea.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON. I yield.

Mr. RICH. What assurances have you that this is the last bill that we will be asked to act upon to authorize and appropriate money for relief?

Mr. EATON. The best assurance I have is the announcement made by the gentleman's leader, Mr. VANDENBERG.

Mr. RICH. He is not my leader; I want you to understand that.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I compliment the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. EATON. It would seem that no one individual can lead Republicans any more. It would appear that our Republican army is composed now entirely of generals.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. Would not the gentleman agree that the less satisfactory our experience has been in handling relief on a jointly managed basis under UNRRA, the more responsible we are for doing our share under this program where we can do it ourselves in our own American way and carry the food under our own supervision, right down to the ultimate village, if necessary?

Mr. EATON. I am in full accord with the gentleman's view, and I thank him for introducing that flash of intelligence into what I have to say.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a further flicker, if not a flash?

Mr. EATON. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. Does not the gentleman agree that the more opposed many of us have been to the sort of program heretofore carried on, the more we should support the program which is before us today. The very people who voted against UNRRA because so many of those who spent our money were from other countries are under a greater obligation, it seems to me, to carry on this program under Americans, everyone of them cleared by the FBI. I say that as one who very strongly criticized UNRRA. This authorizes only one-eighth of the total amount that we have already given under UNRRA. If we can finish all or most of the job with one-eighth of what we have already given, much of which was wasted, surely we ought to do so, both for humanitarian reasons and for reasons of intelligent long-term self-interest.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlemen for their assistance.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. They have made two crops in Europe since the war ended, and are now stripping the people of Europe and taking the funds to build up armies while asking us to continue to feed the people of Europe who are being dominated by those Communist armies or regimes.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to myself.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. I should like to answer the gentleman from Mississippi by asking him to read section 5 where it says, "The President shall promptly terminate the provision of relief assistance to the people of any country whenever he determines," among other things, "that an excessive amount of any supplies transferred or otherwise made available pursuant to this joint resolution, or of similar supplies produced locally or imported from outside sources, is being used to assist in the maintenance of armed forces in such country."

Mr. RANKIN. You do not need anythink like that to tell the people of Europe how to make a crop. The substance of the people of Europe is being taken over by these Communist organizations maintaining large armies, large military forces, and they are asking us to feed the people that they are supposed to feed.

I live in a country that lost a war once. Our brave Confederate soldiers came home, went to work and fed their own people while rebuilding the devastated South.

If we are going to feed the peoples of the rest of the world at the expense of the American taxpayers while their crops are used to feed useless standing armies, then there will be no end to the appropriations we will be called upon to make.

The peoples of these countries have had time to make two crops since the war closed. Never in the history of Europe have we seen a demand to feed starving people before except when there was some kind of a crop failure. There have been no such failures in this instance. We had better make a contribution to the Red Cross and let them feed the hungry children. The Red Cross will not make such a farce of it as was made in the case of UNRRA.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, this bill appropriates $350,000,000. It leaves only $290,000,000 of actual money to be invested in the salvation of the starving people. The rest goes to the children's fund or for expenses. Fifteen million dollars is to be held in escrow for use in other countries as the necessity may arise.

I hope and pray we will carry this bill through today with a very handsome and substantial majority.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of the time to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] is recognized for 11½ minutes.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, this problem of participating in relief for foreign countries is not a new one before this body. I want to take you back a few years to the first UNRRA bill and to the subsequent UNRRA bills, because we have appropriated and spent $2,700,000,000 through UNRRA to help relieve the people of distressed war areas.

A vast majority of the Members of this body voted for that legislation, but they voted for it, many of them, as I voted for it, and as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] today indicated he voted for it, with their tongues in their cheeks, and reluctantly, because UNRRA did not seem to be an efficient set-up for handling the difficult relief problems abroad. It was argued that it should have been an American enterprise. We have before us today such an American enterprise in this conference report.

The second criticism made of UNRRA was that it should have been administered by Americans instead of by foreigners. This bill provides that. It provides for the administration of this relief by Americans who have been screened by the FBI; so we have made progress in that direction.

The third criticism about UNRRA was that we should have provided relief which was identified as American relief. This bill provides that. The relief is to carry labels and identification marks and trademarks as American products right down to the ultimate consumers.

The fourth criticism of UNRRA was that the supplies were not publicized abroad or at home and the press and radio were not permitted to follow through and report on the disposition made of UNRRA supplies. This proposal corrects that shortcoming. It provides that there shall be adequate and complete publication of the information about this relief, not only in America but in the countries receiving the relief.

The fifth criticism made of UNRRA was that it was an extravagant outfit; that it did not get the result it should have out of the $2,700,000,000. We are asking you today to appropriate only $350,000,000, a considerably smaller amount than any other we have been asked to provide, to aid legitimately distressed people in war-stricken areas. With the numerous safeguards written into this new program, I am confident this $350,000,000 will feed more people who are actually in need and in want than would be true of several times this amount if handled through UNRRA.

Now, let me go to the figures of this conference report. As you know, when it left the House, the over-all figure was $200,000,000. The over-all figure now before you is $350,000,000, but that does not mean that the House conferees receded entirely from the position which we took in the House because actually we are bringing you this conference report at a working figure of $290,000,000. That is the working fund for the specific purposes which this act provided when it left the House, namely, the general relief of people in war-devastated areas as specified by our legislation.

The figure that you must compare with the $350,000,000 item which the Senate approved is $29,000,000. Let me spell out to you specifically how that is true. Since this bill left the House of Representatives in the course of its enactment it has been expanded to do other things which were not originally included in the original $350,000,000.

Five million dollars, for example, has been set aside to pay the shipping costs for relief sent overseas by voluntary private organizations, a proposal which multiplies tremendously the benefits to be given by this relief program. So, $5,000,000 of the $350,000,000 is not available for the purposes originally contained in this legislation when it was last before us.

Fifteen million dollars has been set aside additionally for so-called emergency relief beyond and outside of the confines of the six countries named in this act, so there is another $15,000,000 which will not be available for aid to the specified areas, as was originally expected for the relief program.

Forty million dollars more has been set aside to take care of the needs of the International Emergency Children's Fund, $15,000,000 of it being made available by legislative mandate at once and $25,000,000 additional being set aside until well into 1948, until it has been demonstrated and determined whether or not the other countries will meet their 43 percent proportionate payments to this childrens' fund.

Mr. JONKMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. Not now. I will yield later.

If they meet their quotas the entire $40,000,000 will be available for childrens' relief and deducted from the money we are appropriating in this legislation for general relief. If they do not meet it, the President is authorized to expend the residual amount for the general purposes of the act provided he first determines there is no reasonable expectancy that these quotas will be met before June 30, 1948.

I now yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. JONKMAN. The gentleman says that $25,000,000 in addition to the $15,000,000 will go to the children's fund. That will not happen until the other nations contribute their 43 percent. Is not that true?

Mr. MUNDT. That is correct. I do not yield further.

Mr. JONKMAN. Can the gentleman name one nation that has said it would contribute to the fund?

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I decline to yield.

Answering the gentleman from Michigan, I may say that I cannot name specifically any other country that is going to contribute to the children's fund, because this is the first step by which the fund is implemented. We are making the initial contribution with the understanding that collectively the other countries will contribute 43 percent. If they do not contribute, then the $25,000,000 already referred to reverts to the general purposes of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, may I point out other respects in which the position of the House prevailed over the position of the other body? For example, the children's fund was not mentioned at all in the legislation passed by the Senate. It is now in the bill, as I have described to you. That was a distinct victory for the House conferees.

The countries were not named in the legislation passing the other body. We named the countries specifically, and they remain exactly as named by the House except we added the country of Trieste, which I think we all believe necessarily should be added, since we have assumed international responsibility for Trieste. That is another complete victory for the House position.

The third position of the House that was maintained is the provision for relief distribution, that it shall be done by American citizens screened by the FBI, permitting American control of these goods until they get to the ultimate consumer. The House position in that regard was maintained, as the so-called Mundt amendment remains in the bill.

This brings me to reparations. This has already been discussed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS] and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LODGE]. To the fullest extent possible the position of the House has been maintained there. We require the President to seek from other countries in the world an agreement whereby they will not extract reparations out of current production from any country being aided by this bill. That is all we can do practically at this present time, in view of circumstances beyond the control of this House. The author of that amendment, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LODGE], supports this action of the conferees.

In the fifth place, the termination date written in by the House remains in the bill; namely, that by concurrent resolution the Congress can withhold from any country or from all the countries further aid at any time the House and the Senate in the wisdom of a majority vote decide that it should be discontinued.

So I submit to you that in large measure the position of the House prevails in this conference report, and I think the conference report should be adopted. I say this as one of those who voted for the $200,000,000 amendment as originally presented by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JONKMAN]. I was in favor of it at that time and am so recorded both by speech and vote. However, we now face a different decision under different circumstances and we are considering legislation covering a much wider field of needs than was then the case.

It should be kept in mind, Mr. Chairman, that our action in reducing this proposed appropriation for relief to $2,000,000 by our earlier votes has in fact effected a saving for this country of perhaps $60,000,000 even though we now approve this conference report. This is true because we have expanded the purposes of this act to cover the Children's Fund thus obviating the necessity of the President sending us his $40,000,000 bill for that purpose as was previously announced and because we are using $5,000,000 of this fund to provide shipping for voluntary relief shipments and $15,000,000 is being withheld to meet possible emergency relief needs in countries outside of the prescribed areas. The House thus can take credit for effecting a great and a real saving by our earlier action and by approving this conference report we can supplement that worthwhile action by now expediting the establishment of an effective and efficient relief set-up to meet the most crying needs in Europe. I am not in favor of reducing the appropriation back to $2,000,000 at this time, however, because, as I have pointed out, we have increased the purposes, the objectives, and the responsibilities of this bill. We have made it responsible for a much larger achievement than was originally the case. So I submit that this $290,000,000 figure for a working fund is a legitimate and an honest reconciliation between the positions of the two Houses. It enables you to vote for economy and against starvation at the same time.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not true that those people have had an opportunity or time to make two crops since the war closed, and if they are not taking the production of their own people and using that to build up military establishments, at the same time calling on us to feed the people of those countries? And will not the gentleman be standing up in this well one year from today asking us for another appropriation to feed them through another year while this same procedure goes on?

Mr. MUNDT. The answer to the gentleman's question is in part "yes" and in part "no." It is certainly "no" as far as Greece is concerned, it is "no" as far as Italy is concerned, it is "no" as far as Trieste is concerned. The answer is "yes" as far as Poland is concerned and it is "yes" in part as far as Hungary is concerned. However, under the Mundt amendment which remains in the bill it is going to be "no" for all the countries from now on because these goods are being distributed by American relief missions, by American citizens, conveying the goods all the way down to the ultimate consumer. So at least insofar as the future is concerned it is going to be a negative answer under the terms of this legislation.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. LODGE. I want to point out to the gentleman from Mississippi that section 5 (a) provides that the President shall promptly terminate relief if he finds that it is being used to assist in the maintenance of armed forces in such countries.

Mr. RANKIN. May I call attention to the fact that in Italy and Trieste they are reaping their third crops now since the war closed.

Mr. MUNDT. I am not arguing about the number of crops. The food is not going to be taken out of the country to feed the Russians or to build military establishments under the terms of this bill.

Mr. MATHEWS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. MATHEWS. Since the President may terminate this if an excessive amount is used for military purposes, may I ask the gentleman why in a relief bill any part of it should be used for military purposes?

Mr. MUNDT. This says that the President can terminate it. It may be that in a country like Greece or Italy they may have soldiers in their own army who need rations to feed them; so we do not want to make it too conclusive. But the intent of this limitation is crystal clear.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. As one who has supported UNRRA all the way along, may I say that we have listened to the same enthusiastic appeal for that organization as we have for this bill today.

Mr. MUNDT. Not from the present speaker. Every time I spoke on UNRRA I did so with great reluctance because I realized it had an almost impossible administrative setup. But the position recommended by the Republicans on the Committee of Foreign Affairs at that time and the position since recommended both by Democrats and Republicans concerning UNRRA has been written into this legislation. So we are concerned with this decision: Do we want Uncle Sam to do anything at all to help the starving people of the world? If we do, we can do it now with American citizens, with American goods, with American publicity accruing all over the world. If we do not believe we should help them, then the answer should be in the negative. The decision is yes or no, whether you want America to help feed the people of a war-torn world. As for me, I think we should adopt this conference report and measure up to our responsibilities in an American way, with American methods administered by American citizens whose loyalty has been certified by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

Mr. JONKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the conference report?

Mr. JONKMAN. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Does any Member on the minority side wish to offer a motion to recommit? If not, the Clerk will report the motion offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JONKMAN moves that the conference report be recommitted to the committee of conference with instructions to the managers on the part of the House to insist on the House provision for authorization of $200,000,000.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JONKMAN].

Mr. JONKMAN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 170, nays 205, not voting 55, as follows:

Mr. McGarvey with Mr. Poage.
Mr. Keefe with Mr. Boykin.
Mr. Gifford with Mr. Sabath.
Mr. Dawson of Utah with Mr. Patman.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the conference report just agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is their objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for 10 minutes today after the other special orders.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H. R. 3245

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the committee of conference may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report on H. R. 3245.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

REPORT ON H. R. 2798, 2799, 2780, AND 3492

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking and Currency may have until midnight tonight to file reports on the bills H. R. 2798, 2799, 2780, and 3492.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOLCOTT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an article by Arthur Krock appearing in the New York Times.

Mr. PLOESER (at the request of Mr. MICHENER) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an enlightening comment on the Texas City disaster.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include annual report, Washington County soil conservation district. I am informed by the Public Printer that this will exceed two pages of the RECORD and will cost $213, but I ask that it be printed notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a short statement.

Mr. ROONEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. JACKSON of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

PERMANENT POSTAL RATES

Mr. VURSELL, from the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, submitted report (Rept. No. 410) to accompany H. R. 3519, to provide for permanent postal rates.

The SPEAKER. Under previous special order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SMITH] is recognized for 30 minutes.

PREPARE NOW TO DEFEND ALASKA AND CANAL ZONE

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, now that we have charted a new course in international affairs, it seems to me we ought to be thinking in terms of preparedness for our country. Certainly our global activities are going to require the spending of a lot of money in the years ahead to keep ourselves prepared in such a way that we can resist any attack that might come from without at any time.

It seems to me that under the bill which we passed last week—the Greek-Turkish matter—that it was nothing more nor less than the pointing of a gun at one whom we consider in the future to be a possible armed adversary. Now, we have charted a course, and we must implement that course by making ourselves strong from a military standpoint. Now is the time to prepare; we cannot wait until the bombs fall.

Mr. Speaker, during the debate of the Greek-Turkish aid bill I charged that it was designed for military purposes; that it would not stop communism in those countries and it was not intended for that purpose. It was clear to many of us that the people of this country were entitled to know all of the facts with their vast implications and that it was the duty of the President to so state. In this respect he is derelict in his responsibilities.

Since passage of the bill the Greek and Turkish Governments have officially stated that the money authorized will be used for military purposes. Thus, we see that our money is going to prepare foreign nations against aggressive action by the Communists. Mr. Speaker, it is my conviction that this is equivalent to a declaration of war. If it is, we had better prepare for the next war, right now. We have pointed a gun at Russia. What would we do, Mr. Speaker, if that country decided to furnish money or military aid to Cuba or to a friendly country in South America? We would consider such action a violation of the Monroe Doctrine and tantamount to a declaration of war against us—and properly so. Thus, we have a situation involving the risk of war under the pretense that it will stop communism.

Mr. Speaker, as we survey the results of World War II, without bias or prejudice, we realize that a full and complete victory was not achieved. Hitler and his Nazis have been eliminated, but another evil has been substituted for them. The price of victory cannot be determined. Lives and the intangibles that make for victory are beyond estimation.

Mr. Speaker, today we wonder about that victory for we realize that our honored dead and those who served in this last war really meant that victory was to bring the "four freedoms" to all mankind. Unfortunately, we have substituted communism for nazism and in the wake of victory the world is about to be engulfed in another wave of political despotism. Red Joe Stalin is as bloody as Hitler and there is no place in a free world for people of this kind. So we are again in a period of suspense, trying desperately to meet the peril of the moment. We have reached another armistice when we had a right to believe we had achieved permanent peace.

Mr. Speaker, although the clouds are dark and ominous, I believe there is a bit of silver lining. When historians appraise the results of World War II, I believe they will record a major victory for all countries in the Western Hemisphere. That victory was climaxed by the Treaty of Chapultepec, signed in Mexico City on the 6th day of March 1945. A most important provision in that treaty provides for a unified defense system for the entire Western Hemisphere.

Mr. Speaker, in our very sincere desire to help all the world, by the giving of our resources, we must never forget that we must remain strong at home, politically, economically, and militarily. Outstanding civilian statesmen, and there are many, say that the time has come for us to take account of our own resources before it is too late. The Godless Communist element at home and abroad, of course, want us to become weak so their task of taking over will be that much easier. It would therefore seem clear that our primary responsibility is to make ourselves secure from attacks without and within. This is necessarily so because we live in a world of power, with two ideologies seeking control. I wish it were not so, but it is and we must face the future with realism.

Mr. Speaker, if we are realists in the matter of hemispheric defense, then we must rivet our attention on the state of our defenses in the Panama Canal Zone and in Alaska to avoid attack from without. There can be no denying that the Communists have alerted both areas. Let us not be fooled by the campaign to stop communism in Greece and Turkey and close our eyes to it right here in this hemisphere.

A very timely article by Jim Lucas in the Washington Daily News for May 19, bearing the headline "Are Communists Monkeying Around With Panama Canal?" directs attention to the necessity for action in that vital spot.

It appears, Mr. Speaker, that a Senate subcommittee is investigating charges that the CIO Public Workers of America in the Canal Zone are led by Communists. A reading of the article by Mr. LUCAS seems to leave but little doubt that the Communists are preparing to take over in that area at the proper time. This is indeed a call to action; we are on notice. Our national security must be assured by proper action of our military services, not alone in Turkey and Greece but here at home. There must be no Pearl Harbor in the Panama Canal Zone or in Alaska.

Mr. Speaker, we consider now the Alaskan zone. It was good news to learn from a War Department release that a big bomber base is to be constructed in Alaska at a cost in excess of $8,000,000. The program involves the building of a new runway, a huge hangar, and other strategic facilities. This is surely on a meager start.

It is common knowledge, Mr. Speaker, that Russia has its eyes on Alaska. Reports were circulated a short time ago that it was prepared to repudiate the sale of that territory to this country. Only a few months ago a returned Army officer told me about Russian military activities on the Kamchatka Peninsula only 500 miles from Attu. His statement was later confirmed by Mr. Lucas of Scripps-Howard, who reported airfields are under construction, warehouses and barracks have been built, roads have been improved, and waterways are being dredged. There is, in addition, ample evidence of increased Russian air activity over Alaska, and that is not "just for fun." If we are not careful a Pearl Harbor is a possibility here. We must keep in mind that in this air age this Alaskan territory is of great strategic value. It is rich in minerals and oils and in addition may some day be the center of commercial air routes over the top of the world.

Mr. Speaker, I do not pose as a military expert. Common sense would seem to indicate that a job of first importance must be tackled without delay. The military experts must of necessity be called in to map out a plan of defense for Alaska. With due respect to them I venture to suggest a modest plan of action:

First. The immediate recruitment of military personnel.

Second. The promotion of a campaign to induce civilians to migrate to Alaska in order to develop its natural resources.

Third. The improvement of rail and truck facilities to the area. This means the construction of two or three hard-surfaced roads and the maintenance of a modern railroad.

Fourth. Increased and improved air and coast artillery facilities. Fighter- and bomber-plane bases are indispensable. We must have the best. The latest coast artillery equipment must be installed.

Fifth. Establishment and development of adequate naval bases, implemented by a strong air arm and undersea craft.

Sixth. Maintenance of advanced technological station equipped with powerful radar facilities.

Seventh. Statehood for Alaska. This is vitally needed for defense purposes.

Mr. Speaker, this first session of the Eightieth Congress is charged with an important responsibility. We can stop communism in the Western Hemisphere by acting courageously now. It took only a matter of a few weeks to pass the Greek-Turkish bill. Can we do less to protect and defend our very borders? Time is truly of the essence. Let it not be said of this Congress that it has been derelict in its duty. The time to act is now.

[From the Washington Daily News of May 19, 1947]

SENATE GROUP IS ASKING: "ARE COMMUNISTS MONKEYING AROUND WITH PANAMA CANAL?"

(By Jim G. Lucas)

A three-man Senate subcommittee is investigating charges that activities of the left-wing CIO Public Workers of America in the Panama Canal Zone are Communist-led.

The Senators are ZALES N. ECTON, Republican, Montana; EDWARD J. THYE, Republican, Minnesota; and HERBERT R. O'CONOR, Democrat, Maryland. They have been hearing testimony on the effect of a recent Civil Service Commission ruling which opened civil-service rolls within the Canal Zone to citizens of Panama.

TWO PAY ROLLS

The ruling would abolish gold and silver rolls. In the Canal's early days, two pay rolls were given these designations. One group was paid in gold and the other in silver. This is no longer true, but American citizens on the gold roll receive higher wages for the same work as aliens on the silver roll.

The CIO Public Workers Union, composed principally of silver-roll employees, wants the change. The AFL and Canal Zone military leaders oppose it, the latter partly for security reasons.

IT'S IN A TREATY

Most jobs under the military there are noncivil service, but for jobs which have a civil-service classification, the Commission's rules and regulations must be followed. Arthur Flemming, of the Civil Service Commission, said the ruling giving Panama citizens the same job privileges as Americans was in line with guaranties under the Roosevelt-Arias treaty of 1939 but which were inoperative during the war.

Walter J. Jones, legislative representative for the Canal Zone Central Labor Union, an organization of gold-roll employees, testified the order meant "our files will be made available to persons who owe their allegiance to a foreign government."

LOTS OF PROPAGANDA

"There are agents who already are busy spreading their propaganda among the Panamanians," he said. "We have in the Canal Zone two representatives of the CIO Public Workers of America, J. L. Strobel and Robert Weinstein, who, along with their colleague, Leonard H. Goldsmith, have records of Communist activity, which have been published and which they have never denied."

"It is interesting to note that with the arrival of these gentlemen there began publication of a new Communist magazine 'ACLA' (Actione Communista Latina Americana). This magazine is devoted to attacking 'Yankee imperialism' and extolling the virtues of the Soviet Union as the defender of Latin America. Their records show they have done nothing but create chaos and confusion in the minds of the workers."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Here's what happened when Mr. Weinstein appeared before the committee:

Senator O'CONOR: "Are you a member of the Communist Party?"

Mr. WEINSTEIN. "No; I am not, sir."

* * * * *

Senator O'CONOR (referring to the magazine Plain Talk): "I find reference to this fact:

"'Robert Weinstein was an instructor at the Communist Jefferson School. He has been active in numerous fronts and has a record which might be the envy of many a Communist leader.'"

Mr. WEINSTEIN. "It doesn't say I did it. It says 'A Robert Weinstein.'"

Senator O'CONOR. "It says Robert Weinstein, and I understand you are the Robert Weinstein to whom this reference is made."

Mr. WEINSTEIN. "That is right. I do not exactly recall the date, Senator, but about, I guess, a couple of years ago, the publicity department of our organization sent me a memo saying there was a round-table discussion at the Jefferson School on the various questions confronting labor organizations. I went over about 8 o'clock one evening and * * * stayed there 50 minutes. I never got paid and I presume that is what he means."

* * * * *

Senator O'CONOR. "It says the Robert Weinstein to whom reference is made signed Communist election petition No. 2366 on September 21, 1941."

Mr. WEINSTEIN. "Doesn't it say 'A Robert Weinstein?'"

Senator O'CONOR. That is right.

Mr. WEINSTEIN. "It doesn't say me."

* * * * *

Senator O'CONOR. "Did the Public Workers Union during the last year or so adopt any resolution commenting on the foreign policy of our country or of Russia?"

Mr. WEINSTEIN. At our last convention in Atlantic City we adopted a resolution asking for the withdrawal of troops from, I don't think we mentioned places, but from foreign countries."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KERSTEN of Wisconsin). Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] is recognized for 30 minutes.

CONSTITUTIONAL LIMITATIONS ON POWERS OF THE EXECUTIVE

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I think there is one subject upon which we can all agree regardless of which side of the House we sit, and that subject is national security. I congratulate the gentleman who just spoke, Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin, for his splendid presentation of facts relating to that subject. I am going to talk for a few minutes on the same subject.

Mr. Speaker, it not infrequently happens on the floor of Congress that when a legislative proposal is made or one is opposed that some Member will inquire, "Have you not confidence in your President to execute the law?" I shall not attempt to express my views in answer to this question, but instead will let Thomas Jefferson reply to the inquiry. Here is what he said on the question of confidence in the men chosen to make and to execute our laws:

> It would be a dangerous delusion if our confidence in the man of our choice should silence our fears for the safety of our rights. Confidence is everywhere the parent of despotism. Free government is founded on jealousy, not on confidence. It is jealousy and not confidence which prescribes limited constitutions to bind down those whom we are obligated to trust with power. Our Constitution has accordingly fixed the limits to which, and no further, our confidence will go. In questions of power, then, let no more be heard of confidence in man, but bind him down from mischief by the chains of the Constitution.

I know of no time when it is more essential to fix the limits to which, and no further, our confidence in those whom we are obliged to trust with power will go, than to establish that limit right now.

The American people have been put on notice by a series of acts on the part of those in positions of trust and confidence in the Government that our fundamental liberties are in imminent danger of destruction from within from officials sworn to preserve, protect, and defend our liberties from spoliation.

This is the hour of all times in our history when the enemies of our Republic are operating within our Government. A free people and their chosen Representatives in Congress should be on the alert to protect and defend their Government from all subversive activities. It may not be inappropriate at this time to recall the words of Joseph Story, Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court 1811 to 1845:

> Let the American people never forget that they possess a noble inheritance bought by the toils, suffering, and blood of their ancestors; and capably, if wisely improved and faithfully guarded, of transmitting to their latest posterity all the substantial blessing of life, the peaceful enjoyment of liberty, property, religion, and independence.
> The structure has been erected by architects of consummate skill and fidelity; its foundations are solid; its comportments are beautiful, as well as useful; its arrangements are full of wisdom and order, and its defenses are impregnable from without. It has been reared for immortality, if the work of man may justly aspire to such a title.
> It may, nevertheless, perish in an hour by the folly or corruption or negligence of its only keepers—the people. Republics are created by the virtue, public spirit and intelligence of the citizens. They fall when the wise are banished from the public councils because they dare to be honest, and the profligate are rewarded because they flatter the people in order to betray them.

I observe that practically every man who takes the floor to warn his colleagues and the people of an impending danger to the Republic, either from forces within or from without, is immediately attacked by left-wing newspapers and magazines. This is no time, however, for a Representative in Congress to shrink from his duty of fighting for the security of his Nation as well as for the people he has the honor to represent.

A serious situation has arisen in connection with the trade agreement negotiations at Geneva, Switzerland, which negotiations are now being conducted by our State Department with numerous foreign nations with respect to the tariff rates of the respective negotiating nations.

Since March 26, 1947, the Ways and Means Committee of the House has been conducting hearings with reference to the operation of the Trade Agreement Act and the creation of a proposed International Trade Organization. The first witness who appeared and testified before the Ways and Means Committee was William L. Clayton, Under Secretary of State for Economic Affairs, Department of State. Early in his testimony I inquired of Mr. Clayton how large the delegation accompanying him to Geneva would be. His reply was: "I think about 80. Counting the secretarial service, stenographers, and so on, I think it will be about 100."

On page 18 of the hearings held March 28, Secretary Clayton testified:

> The meeting in Geneva will be attended by representatives of 18 countries to do two things. One is to further discuss and attempt to agree upon a charter for the International Trade Organization which subsequently will be submitted to the Congress or the parliaments of the different countries, and the other is to negotiate among those 18 countries reciprocal-trade agreements having to do with elimination of discriminations in trade and the reduction of barriers to international trade.

In response to an inquiry to have the names of the 18 countries meeting in Geneva, Secretary Clayton named Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Chile, China, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, France, India, Lebanon, Luxemburg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Union of South Africa, United Kingdom, and the United States.

During the hearing I asked Secretary Clayton whether or not he could furnish the Ways and Means Committee the actual items which he would use for the purpose of trading at the Geneva Conference. Mr. Clayton said, "We would be glad to furnish a list of those commodities, Mr. REED."

The list referred to is as follows:

> DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
> Washington, April 8, 1947.
> The Honorable DANIEL A. REED,
> House of Representatives.
> MY DEAR MR. REED: Under the pressure of preparing to get away for the Geneva Conference Mr. Clayton was not able to communicate with you regarding a matter which arose in connection with his appearance before your committee on March 28 and requested me to do so. You asked him to furnish the committee a list of the items we were to use for the purpose of trading at the Geneva Conference. In his reply he evidently had in mind our published list of November 9, 1946, and said that he would be glad to furnish a list of those commodities for the record. I am informed that my associates have supplied the clerk of your committee with a copy of that list.
> I find, however, that according to the record you requested him to "furnish the committee in a confidential way the actual items to use—which you are to use for the purpose of trading at the Geneva Conference." This leads me to believe that you may have had a different list of products in mind.
> As Mr. Clayton explained to the chairman on March 26, they are going to Geneva as a set of traders to negotiate with representatives of other governments and they cannot very well make public to the world the limits of our negotiating ability. I think Mr. Clayton also made it clear in answering Mr. Kean's question on March 29 that the delegation needs to carry all of its bargaining power with it.
> If you feel that the list which has been supplied for the record is not responsive to your request, I should appreciate having this letter inserted at the appropriate place in the record so that the reasons why Mr. Clayton was unable to comply with your request may be known.
> Sincerely yours,
> WILLARD L. THORP,
> Assistant Secretary.

Representative KEAN inquired of Secretary Clayton whether or not he intended to take any businessmen over to Geneva in connection with the proposed negotiations of trade agreements:

> Mr. KEAN. Are you taking any businessmen over?
> Mr. CLAYTON. We are not taking any businessmen, as such, over. It has been decided, I think, that other delegations will not generally take businessmen over. We have consulted very frequently, however, Mr. KEAN, with businessmen, not only in the trade agreement matters through these hearings, where, as I have said, they have had a thousand briefs filed with the Department, with the Trade Agreements Committee; we have had over 500 witnesses appear and all of the vast amount of information has been carefully collected and digested and studied. Every interest in the country had an opportunity to present its case, and we had many informal conferences as well; that is on the trade agreements. In the ITO——
> Mr. KEAN. I am not asking about those; I just had in mind the trade agreements.
> Mr. CLAYTON. About trade agreements; yes.
> Mr. KEAN. I was just thinking that as to the Yankee bargaining you are talking about, that when a certain suggestion is made by a foreign government it would seem to me, in spite of all this data you have got, it might be a subject matter on which you would like to know from somebody who knows their stuff exactly what was involved.
> Mr. CLAYTON. We have tried to get all of that information in the hearing; the law provides for that, and we will go over all of that information ourselves carefully and fully on these subjects prior to getting to Geneva. I am sure that you could understand that with all this vast information covering the vast number and variety of commodities that are involved, both imports into this country and exports to other countries that are comprised in our total economy that it would be almost impossible to take a man over that would be familiar with any great number of those commodities, so that we have had to try to get our information and to get the views of these people in these preliminary hearings. Also obviously the day-to-day negotiations and trading back and forth cannot be made public.
> Mr. KEAN. That is right.
> Mr. CLAYTON. In the end everything is made public, but what you say you will do today and what you say you will do tomorrow, and what the other country says they will do, and so forth, from hour to hour and from day to day in this negotiation cannot be made public.

Mr. KEAN. If some of these businessmen who think that their industry is going to be particularly affected were to decide to go to Geneva at their own expense, do you think some of your people would be willing occasionally to consult with them?

Mr. CLAYTON. I do not think there is any doubt about that; that is to say, to talk with them. But we could not tell them, we could not give away our case to them.

Mr. KEAN. No; but you can say, if such and such a thing were done, how would it affect you?

Mr. CLAYTON. Of course, all those questions have been gone into, Mr. Kean, in great detail. We have got a vast record of just such questions as that, and answers.

I have called attention to the testimony to show that Mr. Clayton considers it most important to hold in strict secrecy, even from Congress and from businessmen, farmers, and industrialists, the items upon which to bargain and trade with foreign nations relating to concessions to be made in trade agreements. If it be true that for Yankee trading purposes neither Congress nor business interests can be trusted to know what items on the list may be subjected to a tariff cut, I say that no Communist in Secretary Clayton's group in Geneva should be permitted to have the information.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It may be of interest to the gentleman if I make this statement: Last year, along about July or August the industry of this country was expecting Mr. Clayton to publish that list. He later did publish it, but never got around to doing it until after the election. I wrote a letter to the State Department and called their attention to the fact and asked them if that was not the principal factor. Sure enough, they did not publish the list until just after the election.

Mr. REED of New York. And then they did not outline the trading items.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is right; they did not make it public until they had to.

Mr. REED of New York. Is there even a top secret in the State Department that is not known to the Communists and their fellow travelers in the State Department? Why should there be Communists in the American group at Geneva? Is it their philosophy to preserve and protect this Government of ours; or is it their philosophy to undermine it through every device at their command? Is it to be supposed that any secret in our trading program is unknown which the Communists believe will enable them to weaken our trading position at Geneva? Surely the Communists or their fellow travelers could penetrate no Department of the United States Government where their activities could and would be more destructive to our Republic.

The trade-agreement group at Geneva holds the power of life and death over large segments of our economy, yet in it and a part of this group are Communists. Not one agreement should be negotiated or executed until the group with Secretary Clayton at Geneva has been purged of its subversive element.

Now, I am not here making an idle charge. I have definite information that there is quite a large percentage of that group of 100 or more that was taken over to Geneva who are either Communists or fellow travelers. What are they there for? We know there has been a lot of smoke, and there certainly is fire in that State Department. I am not quarreling with Mr. Clayton and I am not charging him with being a Communist except that I believe he could have found out before he went over there what the members of his negotiating group stood for as between Americanism and communism. If our businessmen cannot be trusted and if the Congress cannot be trusted, why let these Communists and fellow travelers be in that group where they may be in position to warn Communists from other nations against the interests of this Nation?

I have reliable information that a substantial percent of his group are either Communists or Communist sympathizers or have had previous connections with Communist organizations. I have this day, therefore, introduced a resolution which reads as follows:

Resolution creating a select committee to investigate the loyalty of certain assistants and advisers to the Under Secretary of State for Economic Affairs

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby created a select committee to be composed of seven Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker, one of whom he shall designate as chairman. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made.

The committee is authorized and directed to conduct a full and complete investigation to determine whether any persons among those assistants and advisers to the Under Secretary of State for Economic Affairs who are in Geneva, Switzerland, for the purpose of assisting the Under Secretary in the negotiation of trade agreements with certain foreign governments, are, or at any time have been, (1) members of the Communist Party or (2) sympathetic with the general aims of the Communist Party.

The committee shall report to the House (or to the Clerk of the House if the House is not in session) on or before August 1, 1947, the results of its investigation, together with such recommendations as it deems advisable.

For the purpose of carrying out this resolution the committee, or any subcommittee thereof authorized by the committee to hold hearings, is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within or outside the United States, whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, and to require, by subpena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memoranda, papers, and documents, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or any member of the committee designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I want to compliment the gentleman on what he has stated today. I hope his resolution will be adopted. May I ask the gentleman if he has seen the current reports about the Geneva Conference? I get this from the New York papers and the International Chamber of Commerce that at the Geneva Conference Mr. Clayton has found, because of the Communists and the Socialists in the other nations, and because he represents a country where free enterprise is still the guiding principle, he cannot deal with them because he must come back and get his report finally from the people who yet rule in this country; but the emissaries from those other countries can deal right away, one representing a dictator, on representing a communistic country. They can deal together, but we cannot deal with them. We have no business in that conference.

Mr. REED of New York. I thank the gentleman. The fact remains there are Communists or fellow travelers in this organization at Geneva who can transmit any information they want to the Communist members of other nations and so absolutely sabotage any efforts we may make on a trading proposition. It is a reflection on the American public, on our businessmen not to be able to know whether or not he is being traded away by a little group of Communists within this organization. I say that not a single trade agreement nor one transaction should go on in Geneva until we clean the slate of this subversive element that is operating within our Government and in the one department in which we should have national security.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. I think the gentleman has answered my question already. I wanted to ask him, does he not believe that there is much more danger from subversive elements within our own Government than from without?

Mr. REED of New York. There is no question about it. They are working from within and then they are being taken abroad at the expense of this Nation to give away secrets. They are not there for any good purpose because their philosophy is against free enterprise.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CLEVENGER. As a Member of the Committee on Agriculture, and backed up by a couple of my fellow Members, I want to say that I have addressed an inquiry to the Secretary of Agriculture, to Mr. Nichols of the State Department, and to the heads of all groups that have come before the Commitee on Agriculture recently endorsing this reciprocal-trade program, with the challenge to bring me one item that would show a definite gain for America or American agriculture, and I want to say to my distinguished friend, the gentleman from New York, that up to this good hour I have been promised, but I have never received one single item that can definitely be said to be a gain for America.

Mr. REED of New York. I thank the gentleman. I will say this, that similar questions have been propounded by the members of our Ways and Means Committee, and we have as yet failed to receive an answer showing that they have made any contribution to the business of this country.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, if the gentleman will again look at the record of the testimony before our committee, the Committee on Ways and Means, he will find that I put a question to Mr. Clayton as to what he expected to do when he got to Geneva. He said he expected to build up a charter for the ITO but, he said, "That meeting is only the preliminary meeting. From that we expect to go on to the great world meeting"—to the great millennium, although he did not use those terms—when all the nations of the world would be there. And, I suppose, we will be dividing up what is left for their benefit.

Mr. REED of New York. The whole Government seems to be permeated with this godless ideology. I do not attach too much importance to these headlines because it comes out of a trial in court and, every man is presumed to be innocent until he is proven guilty. But, here are some headlines: "Reds plotted army's recall. Communists urged to enlist to destroy morale." So, we hear all these disclosures inimical to the security of our Government, but we have heard more, perhaps, about the infiltration of Communists into the State Department than almost any other Department of Government. Now, you cannot tell me that the head of that Department at this time, when we are carrying on transactions in all parts of the world, is unable to clean house and find honest men who are not Communists or fellow travelers to carry on the affairs of this great Nation through the State Department.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. CANFIELD] is recognized for 10 minutes.

FIRE PREVENTION

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, the Eightieth Congress has given considerable attention to measures which will save the lives of people abroad. We have been generous. We have fought starvation and suffering. We have labored to alleviate conditions which might cause disability and death. I have been pleased to give my vote for these worthy causes.

But I now rise, Mr. Speaker, to ask this House to give consideration to saving the lives of American citizens in the United States. I beg the Congress to act to spare another mother from the suffering that befell Mrs. Stella Kresokowski, a constitutent of mine living in Passaic, N. J., who had one young son burned to death and another who spent a year in a hospital and another year in a home for crippled children because of burns received when their play suits caught fire.

I ask Congress to act before we see another tragedy such as struck the Zibor family, also of Passaic, N. J., whose small son, burned when his cowboy suit ignited, spent a year in the Passaic General Hospital, where he was given 17 blood transfusions and underwent 11 skin-grafting operations.

I pray for congressional action in the name of the more than 11,000 Americans who will die in fires during the course of this year. Is Congress ready to do what it can to save some of these lives? I have cited some sad instances that occurred in my own District, but such accidents are not limited by any geographical bounds, and will occur this year in every State and district.

Does Congress intend to do its part to prevent tragedies such as occurred in the Winecoff Hotel in Atlanta, in the Canfield Hotel in Dubuque, Iowa, in the LaSalle Hotel in Chicago? Congress has the power to aid in preventing catastrophes such as those that sent hundreds to flaming and horrible deaths in the Coconut Grove in Boston, and in the blazing circus tents in Hartford. Will Congress do nothing to prevent the merciless killing and maiming of helpless children who wear playsuits that are nothing but death traps?

Several bills are pending in the present Congress that will prohibit the shipment of highly flammable fabrics in interstate commerce. One of these bills, H. R. 505, I introduced early this session. The House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has held hearings on this problem, and has considered the bills which have been introduced. I hope that in the near future it will report out a bill containing proper prohibitions. To delay is dangerous.

Meanwhile, I cannot understand those segments of our business world that say, "This is not the time for such legislation," and offer no solutions of their own. This attitude is shamefully un-American. If industry were to meet this problem squarely, as indeed several textile companies have, it would take the necessary steps to prevent these holocausts, and it would not be necessary for Congress to move. But when representatives of some textile industries come before a committee of Congress and say they are opposed to any legislation of this nature, and take no steps to keep their products from enveloping our fellow citizens, even our children, from tortuous and fiery deaths, offer no substitute proposal or concrete plan to remove this peril from the American scene, then it is up to Congress to act.

Early this month President Truman called a conference of the outstanding fire prevention experts of the country. These authorities, from all parts of the United States and representing all phases of our economy, meeting here in Washington, endorsed appropriate legislation to remove highly flammable textiles and apparel from the markets.

A May 7 newspaper account of this meeting states:

> Alarmed over the increasing incidence of disastrous fires which have exacted a heavy toll of both life and property, the Conference on Fire Prevention, convened at President Truman's request, adopted without revision a report of its committee on building construction, operation, and protection. The report singled out the types of merchandise the committee concluded should be kept out of circulation as a dangerous fire hazard for all types of buildings.
> "Long-nap fabrics of a material more flammable than wool, silk, and nylon and other highly flammable materials are extremely dangerous as wearing apparel," the President's conference agreed. "Celluloid buttons and trimmings and pyroxylin-coated materials are also dangerous. A garment should not be made out of material so flammable that, if ignited, the wearer cannot divest himself of it without getting seriously burned."

The conference did not limit itself to condemning flammable wearing apparel. Such materials take hundreds of lives each year, but it takes a major disaster, such as a hotel or night-club or circus fire, to focus the spotlight of public attention on the dangers of flammable textiles and fabrics. On these, the report of the President's conference says:

> Flammable draperies, decorations, upholstering, rugs, and bedding were said to have contributed significantly to the spread of fire and mounting loss of life in those structures. Combustible decorative trim, although part of the building structure, nevertheless, falls in the same category.
> Consideration should be given to the flameproofing of flammable fabrics, decorations, draperies, and clothing, or avoiding the use of such flammable materials when possible in buildings where the public is admitted, such as hospitals, hotels, theaters, auditoriums, restaurants, and night clubs.

This is not the first time that this matter has been called to our attention by experts. Last summer the Eastern Association of Fire Chiefs, meeting in New York, termed the United States "the world's No. 1 fire trap," and pointed out that within a year 11,000 lives would be lost in fires, and that property damage would amount to $600,000,000.

In March of this year, Life magazine presented a study on this very subject. It recalled the narrow escape from death of a New York girl whose flowing tulle dress ignited when she merely danced over a cigarette carelessly tossed on the floor. Life conducted experiments, and dressed a manikin in yards of gauzy rayon net, long a favorite party-dress fabric. When a burning match was touched to the skirt the dress exploded into flames, and in 14 seconds the dummy was reduced to a smoking, sizzling ruin. Right here in the District of Columbia, as well as in New Jersey and every part of the country, this horrible accident has occurred, not to dummies, but to human beings.

When I introduced H. R. 505 last January I received a message which typifies the call that is being made on Congress. This telegram is from a constituent of mine, Irving Sukinik, of Passaic, N. J., and it says:

> We lost our little boy last June through one of the cowboy suits that you are trying to outlaw. We thank you for your efforts to spare other parents the pain that we endured. If I can do anything in any way to further the bill, please let me know.

Is Congress ready to move to spare other parents such pain? Are we ready to do our part to combat death by burning in the United States? Or are we to yield to the temporizers who see the loss of profits in remedial legislation? No real American would ever approve clothing an infant with a garment that could in seconds make that infant a human torch. "Theirs not to reason why, theirs but to burn and die?" Never. Congress will not fail America's boys and girls.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York asked and was given permission to include certain tables in the remarks he made today.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

ADMINISTRATION WANTONLY DESTROYS FOOD

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, today the House authorized the appropriation of large sums of money to provide food for starving people in other countries. These people cannot eat money, so it takes food. Therefore, I shall talk about food, and in particular about potatoes. Potatoes are a vital and nutritious food and there should be no waste of them.

I call upon Secretary Anderson to halt the Department of Agriculture's wanton destruction of potatoes as it goes on today.

Some of us had thought that the new dealers' philosophy of scarcity—plowing under of crops—had been thoroughly exploded. But they are at it again—and at a time when food prices are high and people abroad are starving.

It is bad enough to destroy food in a hungry world, but when imports into this country of the same commodity occur simultaneously, the sinful policy becomes a worse scandal.

While Department of Agriculture agents pour kerosene on huge piles of new potatoes in Alabama, North Carolina, Virginia, and other Southern States, potatoes come in from Canada to supply those markets, and at higher prices for consumers already staggering under the cost of living.

The country must have been shocked by recent publication in newspapers of pictures of wanton destruction of potatoes. That was only part of the story. I have in my possession bills of lading and tags proving that potatoes are being imported for sale in the very territory where farmers are being paid not to harvest their crops.

This situation is on a parity with the reckless and ill-planned buying of wheat by the Commodity Credit Corporation for export to needy countries abroad. This buying set off a wild rise of $1 a bushel in the price of wheat.

That means higher prices for flour, bread, and other wheat products. Wheat being a bellwether crop, its price usually sets the pace for corn and other grain, and meat.

The Agriculture Department pours kerosene on newly harvested potatoes to make them unfit for human or animal consumption and for any other use. I am sure that there are thousands of low-income families in all parts of the country, and particularly in the South, who cannot afford to pay from 5 cents to 10 cents a pound for new potatoes.

Giving the surplus potatoes to these families would not destroy the purpose of the price-support program. There are civic agencies that would be happy to have some of these potatoes to distribute among the less fortunate families.

Congress is appropriating hundreds of millions of dollars to feed hungry peoples in other countries. Potatoes are a staple food. Surely the hungry peoples overseas would be happy to have surplus American potatoes.

Unfortunately, the surplus does not apply in other commodities. Witness the high prices for food generally. The only exception is found in the prices of certain manufactured dairy products. I hope the foreigners do not get a false impression of the food supply in America from pictures showing potatoes being wantonly destroyed.

The price-support program for potatoes does not add up. Our Government destroys potatoes after paying the farmers to produce them. Creating a scarcity in supply literally invites foreign countries to produce more potatoes to be sold in the United States.

During the last 8 months Canadian producers have shipped to the United States approximately 5,000,000 bushels of potatoes. These potatoes are now being sold to consumers throughout the Northeastern States at a price range from 6 to 10 cents a pound.

A typical illustration of what is going on in the potato program can be found at Richmond, Va. Several carloads of Canadian potatoes are being sold weekly to consumers at Richmond.

The wholesale price of Canadian potatoes at Richmond has advanced from $3.60 to $4.50 per 100 pounds during the last 30 days. There is a shortage of potatoes at Richmond.

However, investigation reveals that the Department of Agriculture is paying potato producers within 30 miles of Richmond $2.25 per hundredweight to destroy potatoes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Last summer in North Carolina—you may have the figures—there were literally hundreds of thousands of bushels of potatoes that they did not dig up.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is much closer to Richmond than Canada is.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am going to mention a point 80 miles from Richmond. I have a letter from a farmer living in North Carolina about 80 miles from Richmond. The report from this farmer in North Carolina advised me that the Government has paid him for not digging his potatoes this year. This farmer states that the Government agent had him dig up one row in order to permit the agent to estimate the entire crop. He could easily have sold his potatoes in the Richmond market but it would have been in competition with Canadian potatoes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I have never seen the figures as to how many millions or hundreds of millions of bushels of potatoes they did not dig up. We can see those that they do dig up and burn and destroy, and so forth.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am going to touch on that.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Do you have the figures on that?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Yes, I have.

During the last 12 months, the Federal Government has spent $3,235,000 to support the price of potatoes in Virginia, and producers in that State have received $2.25 per hundredweight, less handling charges, to destroy their potatoes. Around 442,000 bushels of Virginia potatoes were destroyed at a cost of $450,000.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. Probably you heard me tell the Committee on Agriculture about 20,000 bushels of potatoes being dumped on a single farm in my congressional district. The farmer got $2.70 per hundred for them, and now the people are paying excessive prices. It has not been going on only in the South. Throughout Pennsylvania and New Jersey it is full of it.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. But we are dealing now with new potatoes that are being destroyed in the South. New potatoes are being sold in Washington and eastern cities at from 5 to 10 cents a pound. For the old potatoes, to which the gentleman refers, we are getting Canadian potatoes in this country that are taking the market here at a higher price than the gentleman's farmers are receiving.

Mr. GROSS. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. Are they going to carry this on this year? Is the 1947 crop going to be dumped also?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. This program is now being carried on. If the gentleman saw the picture in last Sunday's Star, he would notice the big pile of potatoes down in Alabama that Government agents were pouring kerosene on so that the low-income families down there, who did not have the money to buy potatoes, could not eat them.

Mr. GROSS. The farmers do not want to do this kind of business.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. No, indeed; they do not.

Mr. GROSS. The fellows in my district had red faces, that the Government made them dump the potatoes. They did not want to do that.

Mr. CHURCH. The gentleman spoke about red faces. I saw the picture of those potatoes in the paper but I did not see any story about it. Did the gentleman see any story? The paper showed the picture of those potatoes being destroyed.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Well, the pictures spoke for themselves. No additional story was necessary.

But getting back to the situation that prevails here, I have said that Maine was our big potato-producing State. They produced 77,000,000 bushels of potatoes last year and the Government stepped in and bought 13,282,000 bushels at a price of $2.20 per hundredweight, less handling charges for those surplus potatoes. More than 12,000,000 bushels of Maine potatoes were destroyed, at a cost of $12,000,000 to American taxpayers.

It seems to me that the Maine farmers could have supplied some of their high-quality potatoes to the eastern market, rather than have them destroyed and the market turned over to foreign producers.

Secretary Anderson has been advocating a policy of abundance. I urge him to give his attention to the sinful destruction of potatoes.

I also call upon President Truman, when he inveighs against the high cost of living, to tell the people about the impact on prices that buying for foreign relief has upon prices paid by American consumers.

I do not question that we should give relief to the starving abroad. But let us not have any red herrings, such as blaming the farmers for the high cost of food.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for two additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROSS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. Is it true that the Government has made a lot of whisky out of potatoes?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Well, I do not know that potato whisky is being sold, but I do know that large quantities of these potatoes were sold at 5 cents per bag, and made into alcohol.

Mr. GROSS. Does the gentleman know how this potato whisky compares with the good old corn or rye whisky?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I will have to beg off on that because I am not a judge of whisky.

Our Government since July 1946, has bought 87,000,000 bushels of potatoes at a net cost of $80,000,000, to carry out the price-support program. Of this gigantic purchase, 22,000,000 bushels were destroyed. That will be news to the housewife when she goes to market.

It never was the intention of the price-support program to bring about a scarcity of potatoes or any other agricultural commodity in this country, so as to provide a support price and a market for potatoes produced in another country.

This is the second year that the Department of Agriculture has pursued its wanton destruction of a necessity of life. No changes have been made in policies in the light of last year's experience.

The Truman administration should learn from experience. If the ill-advised policies now in operation are continued, they will shake confidence in the entire price-support program for all agricultural commodities.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has again expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Carrell, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. J. Res. 153) entitled "Joint resolution providing for relief assistance to the people of countries devastated by war."

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. HOEVEN (at the request of Mr. DOLLIVER), until May 26, 1947, on account of business.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. LECOMPTE, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 193. An act to amend section 35 of the Mineral Leasing Act of February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. 437; 30 USC, sec. 191), as amended;

H. R. 1584. An act authorizing the erection and operation of a memorial museum and ship on the Fort Hall Reservation, Idaho; and

H. R. 2123. An act to amend the Locomotive Inspection Act of February 17, 1911, as amended.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, May 22, 1947, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

699. Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated April 24, 1946, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and illustrations, on a review of reports on, and a preliminary examination and survey of, Big Sandy River and Tug and Levisa Forks, Ky., W. Va., and Va., requested by a resolution of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, adopted on January 10, 1940, and authorized by the Flood Control Act approved on June 22, 1936, and an act of Congress approved on June 25, 1936 (H. Doc. No. 264), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Public Works, and ordered to be printed, with six illustrations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

552. By Mr. LECOMPTE: Petition of Miss Loleta Shipp and other members of Local 487, Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, in needle industry, Chariton, Iowa, in opposition to the present labor legislation; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

553. By Mr. FELLOWS: Memorial of the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Maine in the ninety-third legislative session assembled respectfully petitioning and urging the Members of Congress that the existence of the Marine Corps be assured by amendment to any merger bill, such amendment specifically providing that the United States Marine Corps shall continue to serve as our Nation's amphibious troops and as a force in instant readiness to protect our Nation; to the Committee on Armed Services.

SENATE

THURSDAY, MAY 22, 1947

(Legislative day of Monday, April 21, 1947)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God of our Fathers, give unto us, Thy servants, a true appreciation of our heritage, of great men and great deeds in the past, but let us not be intimidated by feelings of our own inadequacy for this troubled hour. Remind us that the God they worshiped and by whose help they laid the foundations of our Nation is still able to help us uphold what they bequeathed and to give it new meanings. Remind us that we are not called to fill the places of those who have gone, but to fill our own places, to do the work Thou hast laid before us, to do the right as Thou hast given us to see the right, always to do the very best we can, and to leave the rest to Thee. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. WHITE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday, May 21, 1947, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. WHITE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN] and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] are absent by leave of the Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] is absent on public business.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Swanson, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 153) providing for relief assistance to the people of countries devastated by war, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION—WITHDRAWAL OF MOTION TO RECONSIDER

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, yesterday, because of a certain misunderstanding and some confusion in regard to the adoption of the so-called Magnuson amendment to the National Science Foundation bill, I entered a motion that the votes by which the bill was passed, and the Magnuson amendment was agreed to, be reconsidered. I now request unanimous consent to withdraw my motion for reconsideration, and ask that the matter be considered as closed, so far as the Senate is concerned, in order that the bill may be sent to the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the motion to reconsider is withdrawn.

RESOLUTIONS OF SOUTH CAROLINA DEPARTMENT OF RESERVE OFFICERS ASSOCIATION

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present for appropriate reference and to have printed in the RECORD two resolutions adopted by the South Carolina department of the Reserve Officers Association on May 15, 1947, favoring the enactment of legislation providing for the merger of the armed forces, and also universal military training.

There being no objection, the resolutions were received, referred to the Committee on Armed Services, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution on merger of the armed forces

Whereas this Nation has recently emerged from a world-wide conflict in which combined operations of air, land, and sea forces were the rule rather than the exception; and

Whereas recent developments in weapons and methods of warfare indicate that combined operations will be increasingly used in future military conflicts, should such occur; and

Whereas for many cogent reasons—to meet the requirements of unity of command; to prevent disastrous delay in top level decisions; to effect a clearer delineation of duties and functions; to provide for an equitable division of personnel and material between the services according to their respective requirements; to insure uniform standards of pay, medical care, and other matters common to all the services; to prevent overlapping, duplication, and waste; and to promote economy and over-all efficiency in the national defense—a closer coordination of the armed forces than exists under the present separate departments is urgently needed; and

Whereas in modern and future warfare lack of unity and a functioning system of coordination in the over-all direction and application of the Nation's armed forces may very easily be the factor that spells disaster—from a military standpoint, the margin between victory and defeat: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the South Carolina department, ROA, go on record as favoring the enactment into law by the United States Congress of the armed forces merger or unification bill now before Congress, and that the secretary of this department be instructed to mail a copy of this resolution to each Member of the South Carolina delegation in the United States Congress (through the Reserve Officers Association national headquarters), and that they be urged to favor its passage in the Congress of the United States.

Passed the South Carolina department convention by unanimous vote, May 15, 1947.

Resolution on universal military training

Whereas the nations of the world are now faced with the alternatives of (1) combining to support a world organization capable of enforcing the peace, or (2) maintaining a peace based on balances of power and reliance upon their own defenses; and

Whereas until such time as the present world organization, the United Nations, is actually invested with sufficient police power in case of sufficient strategic strength to prevent a major conflict, it is essential that the United States maintain its military strength at a level required to discourage would-be agressors from designs on the wealth and people of this Nation, and to defeat such aggressors if need be; and

Whereas as an integral part of any preparedness program it is necessary that a fair proportion of the young citizenry of this country receive a basic training in the discipline and duties of citizens in national defense, in the techniques and skills required not only in the conduct of modern military operations but also in the operation of modern industrial equipment at a high level of production, and that those with exceptional aptitudes be ascertained and be given the opportunity for further progress in their specialties; and

Whereas the plan for universal military training now being sponsored before Congress by the American Legion is in accord with the above enunciated principles in furtherance of an adequate level of national defense, is very similar to the War Department bill, and has the support of the national organization of the ROA: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the South Carolina department of ROA go on record as being in favor of and as supporting the above-mentioned plan or one substantially like it as may be approved by the national headquarters of ROA for universal military training in the United States and that Members of the South Carolina delegation to the National Congress be so informed by copies hereof which the secretary is hereby instructed to mail to them and they be urged to favor the passage of the above-mentioned bill.

Passed by the South Carolina department, ROA, by unanimous vote, in convention, May 15, 1947.

Col. ROBERT M. JONES,
President, ROA, Clemson, S. C.
Maj. LEONARD R. BOOKER,
Secretary, ROA, Clemson, S. C.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

The following report of a committee was submitted:

By Mr. MALONE, from the Committee on Public Works:

S. 482. A bill to authorize the Secretary of War to permit the delivery of water from the District of Columbia and Arlington County water systems to the Falls Church or other water systems in the metropolitan area of the District of Columbia in Virginia; without amendment (Rept. No. 197).

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

(Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado introduced Senate bill 1329, to prohibit the destruction of food by Government agencies; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. MAGNUSON:

S. 1330. A bill for the relief of Constance A. Gilmore; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

S. 1331. A bill for the relief of Frances Ethel Beddington; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GREEN:

S. 1332. A bill for the relief of Giovanni Battista Angelotti; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BUTLER (by request):

S. J. Res. 118. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to sell timber within the Tongass National Forest; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. BROOKS:

S. J. Res. 119. Joint resolution authorizing the President to proclaim July 27, 1947, as Lithuania Day; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL HEALTH AND DISABILITY INSURANCE PROGRAMS

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, there are pending in the Senate two bills which have for their purpose improving the public health. I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a few brief moments while I place before it a few observations pertaining to the proposed legislation. I am one of the sponsors of Senate bill 1320, but I am not speaking about that particular bill; I am speaking about health in general.

We, as a nation, are proud of our high national health record, but national figures conceal the conditions in many States.

New Mexico is not a rich State; its per capita income is nearly one-third less than the per capita income of the Nation as a whole. Local governments in my State, conscious of the health needs of the people, have for many years been spending all they could to improve the health of the inhabitants of the State. The expenditures per inhabitant made by counties and cities for public health have actually been higher than the national average. We have been doing our share, within the bounds of our financial resources, yet in health status we are one of the poorest among the States. Our infant mortality is the highest—it is three times as high as that of Connecticut or Oregon, and more than twice as high as the national average. Our maternal mortality rate is almost twice as high as the national average. Our death rate from tuberculosis is one and a half times the national average. Of course, in this instance, it is brought about because a large number of persons afflicted with tuberculosis leave their homes in other sections of the Union and go to New Mexico. That, likewise, happens in the case of other preventable diseases.

I have been conscious for many years of the unenviable position of my State with respect to the health of its people in comparison with the people of many other States. I have tried to determine why our health record is poor. I have come to the conclusion that the main reason is that the average family in my State cannot—out of its own individual resources—bear the cost of what it takes today to pay for modern adequate medical care.

In comparison with the Nation as a whole, New Mexico has one-third less physicians than we should have to equal the national average; we have 60 percent fewer dentists; we lack 30 to 40 percent of hospital beds to come up to the national average, and a deficit exists with respect to other medical personnel and facilities. The consequences are reflected in the inadequate care received by our people.

I refer to a few figures. In 1944, only 56 percent of the births in my State took place in hospitals; the national figure is 76 percent. In 20 percent of the births no physician was in attendance; the national figure of births without a physician in attendance is only 7 percent. Such facts explain in large part why New Mexico has the highest infant mortality rate and a very high maternal mortality rate in comparison with other States. I, therefore, favor a national health program, because it will help save the lives of babies and mothers.

I have come to feel that if we are to conserve the health of the people of the Nation, we must take some positive action. Since the job is large and important, we should set up an adequate program. It would be a mistake to send a boy on a man's errand. I consider health of national concern, as well as of State and local concern. We must therefore have a truly national program, one which also relies on the aid and cooperation of States and local communities as provided in our new health bill.

Voluntary agencies can help, but despite all that has been said about the rapid growth of voluntary health insurance plans, they cannot do the job. In my State the only medical-care insurance plan known to me is the plan of the State medical society, and it covers less than 3,000 people or one-half of 1 percent of the State population. Even under the Blue Cross hospital insurance plans, which include nearly 20 percent of the population across the Nation, the membership in New Mexico is less than 2 percent of the population. Private and commercial insurance policies help, but most of our people cannot afford them for comprehensive protection. Voluntary insurance agencies have blazed a path. They can render valuable service. But the over-all pattern must be laid by the Nation, in cooperation with the States and localities, to assure health—the birthright of every American—to all of our people regardless of race, religion, residence, or income.

For these reasons I urge favorable consideration of the bill introduced by my colleagues and me. I urge speedy action. It is needed.

COMMITTEE MEETINGS DURING SENATE SESSIONS

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, as chairman of the Armed Services Committee, I ask unanimous consent that the committee be allowed to hold sessions of the committee during the sessions of the Senate, while the committee is considering the unification bill, S. 758.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency may sit this afternoon and tomorrow afternoon. The witnesses have been notified to appear.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

THE ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—EDITORIAL COMMENT

[Mr. AIKEN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "The Seaway Bill," published in the May 12, 1947, issue of the Duluth (Minn.) News-Tribune; and an editorial entitled "St. Lawrence Plan Chances Improve," published in the May 14, 1947, issue of the Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat and Chronicle, which appear in the Appendix.]

INTERIOR WATERWAYS — EDITORIAL FROM EVANSVILLE (IND.) COURIER

[Mr. AIKEN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "Interior Waterways," published in the Evansville (Ind.) Courier of May 10, 1947, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE HIGH COST OF LIVING—EDITORIAL FROM COLUMBIA

[Mr. MYERS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial published in the May 1947 issue of Columbia, which appears in the Appendix.]

REDUCTION OF INCOME TAX PAYMENTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1), to reduce individual income-tax payments.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read a proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado submits a unanimous-consent request, which the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That on the calendar day of Monday, May 26, 1947, at the hour of 4 o'clock p. m., the Senate proceed, without further debate, to vote upon the motion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] to postpone to June 10, 1947, the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce individual income-tax payments.

Ordered further, That the time intervening between the meeting of the Senate on said day of May 26 and the said hour of 4 p. m. be equally divided between the proponents and the opponents of the motion, to be controlled, respectively, by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the unanimous-consent agreement proposed is quite acceptable to me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I do not underrate the importance of tax reduction from the present wartime levels. I fully realize that we must at the earliest possible time reestablish conditions which will encourage and stimulate industry and enterprise and sustain the production and distribution of goods at high levels. Important, however, as tax reduction is, our fiscal solvency is more important, and that requires a soundly balanced budget, which must be kept in balance, and a reasonable payment on the public debt. Another period of deficits such as we have experienced in the last 17 years would shake the financial stability of the United States to its very foundation.

The effects of reducing taxes now and later finding it necessary to reimpose them would be much worse than if tax reduction were delayed until we have assurance that such reduction will be on a permanent basis. Such assurance lies only in the reduction of Federal expenditures. To predicate tax reduction, as the pending bill does, on the continuance in full measure of the existing and temporary inflation, which has swollen our tax revenue, is most unwise and may result in serious consequences.

It is true that for the present fiscal year a surplus is estimated by the Treasury at approximately $1,200,000,000, but this surplus has not come from retrenchment in expenditures but from temporarily swollen sources of tax revenue. Let me emphasize that tax revenue that comes from inflation may be here today and gone tomorrow. It is not a reliable barometer on which to base permanent tax reduction after a long deficit period. The only substantial basis for tax reduction is to reduce the cost of the government. This is what we must consider in determining whether or not we should adopt a tax reduction beginning on the 1st of July and reduce the Federal revenue for 1948 fiscal year by at least $3,200,000,000.

It is my firm conviction that we should not enact the proposed tax reduction until the Congress has passed appropriation bills which will reduce the budget estimates by at least a minimum of $4,500,000,000. This means establishing an expenditure ceiling of not more than $33,000,000,000 for the fiscal year 1948. A $4,500,000,000 reduction was adopted by the Senate, and it would seem only reasonable that the Republican majority in this body, before asking for the passage of tax reduction legislation, should present evidence that the majority party intends to reduce expenditures, at least to this extent, which is $1,500,000,000 less than proclaimed by the Republicans in the House.

I well know that cutting expenses is one of the hardest things Congress ever does, but it is vital to the future of America that it be done at this session. Right now decisions are being made here at Washington that will go far in determining the kind of society and economy we shall have in the future. During the thirties and the war period the Government intervened in one area after another in our economic life. The big executive budget recommended for the fiscal year 1948 assumes the continuance of that philosophy. What we do at this session of Congress about reducing expenditures will determine in large measure what we will be able to do in future years. If we cannot reduce expenditures in our third peacetime year and in a period of high prosperity, substantial reduction in the future will be even more difficult. This is especially true, since the Republican Party gained control of both the House and the Senate last fall on the pledge to the American people that substantial retrenchment in expenditures would be made; and that the waste and extravagance that has existed for so many years in the Federal Government would be eliminated.

Let us remember that the present budget, as recommended, provides for expenditures four times in excess of the year before the war. I say with absolute conviction that the Government cannot preserve its solvency and continue to spend at the rate set up in the budget submitted by the President. This is especially true in view of the foreign commitments we have undertaken, which will grow and grow throughout the years.

Let me say that I favor tax reduction at the earliest possible time, and that time is when expenditures are reduced to a point which will require less revenue to balance the budget and provide for reasonable payment on the public debt. I cannot support tax reduction upon the theory, which I believe to be utterly fallacious, that the present inflated revenues will continue. They may continue for a time, but the best informed economists do not predict a continuance of the present high national income for longer than a year or so. It is always well to bear in mind that every billion dollar reduction in national income means a loss of $300,000,000 in Federal tax revenue, at the existing tax rates.

Let us take a look at the record as to what has been done toward reducing expenditures by the present Congress. Up to date only one appropriation bill has been enacted by both branches of Congress. That is the appropriation for the Labor Department and Federal Security. It effected a reduction in the budget of $87,214,000. As an offset to this, the Congress has authorized a $400,000,000 appropriation for Greece and Turkey, which was not included in the budget. Therefore, to date on a budget basis we are $313,000,000 in the red.

The House has passed four other appropriation bills covering the Treasury and Post Office, the Interior Department, the State, Justice, Commerce, judiciary, and the Navy. The aggregate reductions by the House in these eight departments was $1,552,543,888, and this includes a reduction in the Treasury figure of $800,000,000 for tax-refund estimates. This is, of course, not a bona fide reduction in expenditures, because taxes overpaid must be refunded as a matter of honesty and law—guesses notwithstanding.

I would prefer to take the Treasury estimate rather than that of the House Appropriations Committee as to the amount of these refunds. In any event, this reduction does not constitute economy, because the tax refunds must be paid, no matter what total they reach. Therefore, in the eight departments above-mentioned the actual economies effected below the budget are $752,000,000. It is necessary for these reductions to run the gantlet of the Senate Appropriations Committee and the Senate before becoming law.

To recapitulate, the total reductions upon which action has been taken, exclusive of the $800,000,000 reduction in tax refunds, amount to $840,000,000—and most of this must be approved by the Senate—and all except the Labor Department and Federal Security, which was reduced by eighty-seven million, are yet subject to Senate action.

This reduction was made in departments having total expenditures of about $10,000,000,000, an average of approximately 8 percent. This is the record up to date.

The following bills are yet to be acted upon by the House Appropriations Committee. I give below the budget annual appropriation estimates:

War Department, military	$5,716,791,000
War Department, civil (including relief in occupied areas)	1,021,796,000
Agriculture Department	785,811,000
Independent offices (of which Veterans' Administration comprises about 90 percent)	8,053,014,000
Government corporations (includes permanent appropriations and expenditures from checking accounts)	1,850,000,000
Legislative branch	68,000,000
District of Columbia	8,000,000
Total	17,503,412,000

In addition are the so-called permanent appropriations, including interest on the public debt, aggregating $5,949,829,000. The balance of expenditures in the budget for the fiscal year 1948 are carried over from previous appropriations.

It therefore appears very evident, from noting the list of appropriations not yet acted upon, that unless a much more vigorous and firm position for retrenchment is taken by the Appropriations Committees and by both Houses of Congress, even the minimum of four and one-half million will not be remotely reached. I have heard prominent Republican Senators on this floor promise a reduction of four and a half billion dollars expenditures from the President's budget. It is possible that a realization of the conditions confronting us, along with concerted action by both parties in Congress, could even yet save the day for economy and enable a safe reduction in taxes, with a balanced budget and a reasonable payment upon the public debt.

My prediction is—and I am inclined to think it is optimistic—that the total bona fide reductions in the expenditure budget will not exceed $2,000,000,000, and from this must be taken the $400,000,000 Greek-Turkish gift, making a net expenditure reduction for the fiscal year 1948 of approximately $36,000,000,000. This does not allow for deficiency appropriations or for new foreign expenditures which may become necessary before the fiscal year is over. It is even possible, and not improbable, that without more rigid economy our total expenditures for all purposes, domestic and foreign, in the fiscal year 1948, may equal or even exceed the expenditure estimate in the President's budget of $37,500,000,000.

I ask in all seriousness, Can this country long survive with a permanent peacetime budget of thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, or thirty-eight billion dollars? What will happen when the end comes to the inflationary period through which we are passing? Our tax revenues will greatly decline and our expenditures will not. This means another era of deficit spending. It does not seem promising to me that more drastic action will be taken to reduce expenditures in view of the apparent determination of the Republican leadership of the House and Senate to ignore the plain mandate of law, which requires Congress to establish a ceiling on expenditures. In February the House passed a resolution fixing a reduction in the President's budget of $6,000,000,000. That was done in accordance with the recommendation of the Joint Committee. The Senate reduced it to four and one-half million. The joint resolution went to conference on March 4, 2½ months ago. I am, of course, well aware that the expenditure ceiling as established by the Legislative Reorganization Act is not binding on Congress. It was established as a part of the legislative reorganization machinery which was hailed by the press and the people as a great step forward and is the law of the land. The purpose of it was to fix a goal for expenditures which the Congress thinks can be safely financed by current taxation, with allowance for payment on the public debt. At least it sets a limit on expenditures which Members of Congress are morally bound not to exceed, and one which we should feel reasonably certain can be approximately accomplished.

I do not know why the Republican leadership has been unwilling to compromise the differences between the two Houses and have Congress accept the responsibility for a fixed amount of reduction in Federal expenditures, as required by the reorganization law. The Republican Party controls the membership of the conference. Therefore they must shoulder their responsibility for refusing to comply with the plain mandate of the law. Differences frequently occur between the House and Senate, and such differences are reconciled, and a conference report is submitted for action by both Houses. If the conferees on the expenditure ceiling resolution cannot agree they should report such disagreement to the House and the Senate and ask that new conferees be appointed.

Certainly it ill becomes Members of the House and the Senate to violate the letter and spirit of the legislative reorganization law, which received nearly unanimous support at the time of its adoption. The failure of the majority party to obey the legislative reorganization law is, in my judgment, indefensible, especially as they propose to claim credit for tax reduction without assuming responsibility for a fixed minimum of expenditure reduction.

I have stated that the task of reducing expenditures has enormous difficulties.

To my personal knowledge, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], and the chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House, Representative TABER, have made great efforts to accomplish worthwhile reductions. Every economy move is violently opposed by those affected. The opposition of highly organized and powerful minorities who are the beneficiaries of Federal spending must be met at every turn. Federal bureaus are always active in opposition to any effort to reduce their power, funds, or personnel, and many of these bureaus do not hesitate to use the radio, the mails, and other means to disseminate propaganda at public expense to oppose any retrenchment move that affects them. Never have the Federal bureaus used such high pressure tactics to protest against any reductions as they are doing now, apparently with executive approval. We have determined upon a bipartisan foreign policy. Our ability to carry out our commitments under this policy is dependent upon our fiscal solvency. It would seem that a bipartisan policy for retrenchment and economy should be the foundation stone upon which to build our foreign policy.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I do not wish to disturb the orderly presentation which the Senator is making. I am listening with great interest and, as always, with great respect, to what the Senator is saying. How can we have a bipartisan retrenchment policy when the administration contends that we cannot reduce our expenditure budget of $37,500,000,000 by a single penny?

Mr. BYRD. In answer to the Senator, I have said that I thought we should have a bipartisan policy. As I have already stated, I do not approve of the position taken by the President that the budget should not be reduced by a single dollar. Likewise, I do not approve of the failure of the Republican majority, for some reason that has never been explained, to carry out the law with respect to the expenditure ceiling. I still think that notwithstanding the difficulties which confront us, there could be bipartisan action on the part of the Republicans at least with some of the Democrats who have always been willing to vote for measures of retrenchment and economy.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I am quite sure that such an opportunity will be afforded when the appropriation bills come before the Senate.

Mr. BYRD. I will say to the Senator that I shall meet that opportunity with great pleasure and shall vote to reduce expenditures, as I have always done during my service in the Senate, and I think quite a few Members on this side of the aisle will do the same.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I hope the Senator will not for a moment consider my remarks as indicating an opinion on my part that he would not do that.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think, in connection with the Senator's very able discussion of the peculiar position which Congress at this time occupies because of the inactivity of the Joint Budget Committee as set up by the Reorganization Act, it ought to be stated that there has been only one meeting of the joint committee. It was instructed by the respective Houses to try to compose the differences between the two Houses on the budget ceiling. Since the Senate passed the joint resolution on the 4th day of March one brief session of the joint committee has been called, immediately thereafter, some 2 months ago, and there has been no meeting since that time. The members of the joint committee have not had an opportunity even to discuss a compromise between the House and the Senate, because the chairman of the joint committee, who is chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations, has either refused or declined or failed to give another opportunity to the joint committee to pass upon the question of a budget ceiling.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one further observation?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I think the Senator's very able discussion today makes it perfectly clear that no matter what the joint committee might do, no matter what figures might come back from it, the Senators would continue to use their individual judgment as to the validity of the figures.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will permit me, it seems to me that it is the duty of the chairman of the joint committee to give the members of the joint committee an opportunity to discuss the matter further. I realize that under the parliamentary rules it must confine itself to an adjustment between four and one-half billion dollars to six billion dollars. If it cannot arrive at any agreement with respect to any sum, it ought to have the frankness and the honesty to come before the respective Houses of the Congress and say so and ask that the committee be discharged. I make the further statement that unless some effort is made to get the joint committee to meet, at least, and discuss the matter, a motion ought to be made to discharge the conferees and ask that other conferees be appointed so that they might make some decent effort to get together on the question of the ceiling on the budget.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Regarding the statement which the Senator from Kentucky made, would it not be entirely possible for the conferees to come back to both Houses and ask for instructions?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, it is possible, and it is customary. But how can the conferees do so when they have not been permitted even to meet? They cannot go into session unless they are called by the chairman, who will not call them. The only meeting which they have had was a very brief and cursory discussion, and it adjourned practically sine die. The meeting adjourned subject to the call of the Chair, and the call has not been exercised after 2 months, as the Senator from Colorado no doubt knows.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I think it should be said as a practical matter that if the present committee were discharged a new committee would have to be constituted out of the same joint committee membership, and I doubt very much whether the result would be much different. There has been a conflict of opinion as to what the figures of the budget should be. I wish that that conflict had not presented itself. So far as I am concerned, I may say that I did what I could in the matter in the hope that an agreement might be reached. But things got to a point where that seemed an impossibility, as I said yesterday. I would not like to see us come back to the Senate with an unrealistic solution. I am completely satisfied, as has been demonstrated today, that no matter what we might bring back the Senators will continue to exercise their individual judgment as to what the figures should be.

Mr. BYRD. I should like to ask the Senator this question: Does the Senator from Colorado consider the Senate's action reducing the budget figures by four and a half billion dollars and applying $2,000,000,000 on the debt as being a realistic action?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Yes; I do.

Mr. BYRD. Is the Senator prepared to say that it will be carried out?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I think it will be.

Mr. BYRD. Does the Senator think there will be a reduction of four and a half billion dollars?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I am completely confident that there will be. I think there is some difference of opinion between the distinguished Senator from Virginia and myself as to what the legislative budget law requires. The legislative budget law requires a budget on the basis of actual receipts within a given period of time and actual expenditures within a given period of time. The Senator from Virginia, if I understand him correctly, interprets that as an absolute obligation to achieve economies to the extent of a $4,500,000,000 budget reduction on the expenditure side. I hope we shall achieve those economies; I hope we achieve greater economies; but if we achieve an expenditure budget reduction in the amount of $4,500,000,000 we shall have complied with the law.

Mr. BYRD. And does the Senator think that will be achieved?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I think it will be achieved.

Mr. BYRD. I wish I could share the optimism of the Senator, but I have been studying the appropriation bills very carefully and, to date, there is an actual cut of only approximately $800,000,000 below the budget, and 90 percent of that is still subject to the action by the Senate. I should like the Senator to inform me when he expects to achieve the balance of the reduction of $3,700,000,000 in the appropriation bills which the House has not acted upon.

Mr. MILLIKIN. After the House acts upon the appropriation bills and they come over to the Senate they are passed upon by the Senate. Except in one case they have not been acted upon here. I believe that the Senate's goal is a definite one. I believe it imposes as much of an obligation on our consciences as can be imposed, and I believe that the Appropriation Committee when it has finished its work, will come within a comparatively short distance of the desired $4,500,000,000 reduction. I do not see any reason why we should assume that once we have determined upon a goal, which we fixed by a substantial vote and after full debate, we have to have another charge on our consciences.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another observation?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I want it distinctly understood that the remarks which I made a moment ago were not in any sense a criticism of the Senator from Colorado, for whom I have not only an intellectual respect but a personal regard and affection.

Mr. MILLIKIN. The feeling is heartily reciprocated.

Mr. BARKLEY. I talked with the Senator when we had up the question of a budgetary ceiling of four and one-half billion dollars. I doubted then that we could attain it, but I thought it was worth the effort, and I sympathized with the viewpoint which seemed to me to be realistic at the time we were discussing the question of the budget. But even though the Senator's optimism may be justified, that does not absolve the joint committee set up under the Reorganization Act from the performance of its duty to at least make an effort to bring to the two Houses an over-all picture of the receipts and expenditures or to state why it has been impossible to bring about even a brief conference of the members of the joint committee charged with this duty, for whatever it may be worth in determining our expenditures in the two Houses. I am unable to explain why it has not been done, and I do not think there is a justifiable reason.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. My understanding is that preliminary exploration of the matter—the Senator knows there are always explorations in these matters—indicates that if we cannot reach an agreement reasonably close to the position of the Senate there is no use in having another meeting and come to another disagreement.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am afraid that the preliminary exploration to which the Senator refers has not even approached the goal set by the Senator in his own motion, and the members of the committee are devoid of the frankness to come before the two Houses and say so.

Mr. MILLIKIN. That is the Senator's implication.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is my opinion. That does not impugn anyone's motives. I think they set a figure which was too high, and they are not willing to admit it.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I should like to invite the attention of the Senator from Virginia again to the distinction we were drawing a while ago between savings, which I wish could very substantially exceed $4,500,000,000, and expenditures. There has developed here a habit of brushing off the $800,000,000 having to do with refunds, and also a failure to recognize the $830,000,000 which the other day was put into a bill in the Senate, which will require payment in this fiscal year of the Commodity Credit Corporation deficit, and which, of course, will correspondingly reduce by that much expenditures in the next fiscal year.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator from Colorado does not think that is a saving, does he?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I distinctly say it is not a saving.

Mr. BYRD. Because that will reduce contemplated surplus in this fiscal year, and may wipe it out entirely.

Mr. MILLIKIN. The surplus in this fiscal year automatically passes into debt retirement.

Mr. BYRD. There will be very little surplus after $800,000,000 is taken out, in the form of an appropriation which was scheduled to be paid next year, but which is paid this year.

Mr. MILLIKIN. What difference does it make whether it is paid next year or this year? The action which the Senate took was to have it paid this year. If it is paid this year, that much burden will be taken off of expenditures next year.

Mr. BYRD. I say to the Senator that if a payment is made this year, instead of next year, there is no saving to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I was drawing a distinction between savings and expenditures. The budget resolution we are talking about is not in terms of savings. I wish it were in terms of savings, but it is not. It is in terms of expenditures, and our duty in that respect is limited by expenditures. That is my sole point. From that standpoint, these lightenings of the burden on expenditures in the next fiscal year are in legitimate compliance with the budget requirements.

Mr. BYRD. But the reductions in estimated expenditures can be construed as savings. If the expenditures are less than the expenditures outlined in the President's budget, they are savings.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator again with respect to the matter of the "brush off" of $800,000,000, I should like to say that I am quite satisfied that the people who have paid excess taxes and are entitled to refunds will object to being "brushed off" even for a year; and if we might suppose and assume that the Treasury's estimate is correct, the $800,000,000 will have to be paid either this year or next year. If we may assume that we could postpone the payment to the affected taxpayers for a period of 12 months, as the Senator suggests, nevertheless we cannot overlook the fact that $800,000,000 will be drawing 6-percent interest for that year, which will amount to $48,000,000 more, so the final amount will be $848,000,000 next year if the $800,000,000 is found to be due and if we postpone paying it for a year. The result would be to add that much more to the expenditures for next year which would be affected by any tax bill we pass this year.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, that comes down to a question of the tempo of expenditures. The administration has one view of that matter. The House Appropriations Committee took another view of it. A while ago the Senator said that he prefers to adopt the administration's viewpoint, although the administration does not look very well so far as accuracy of estimates is concerned.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, speaking of the refund item, I was saying that the Treasury Department has more information and knowledge of the amount required for refunds than does the House Appropriations Committee; and the Treasury's estimates up to date have been comparatively accurate.

Mr. MILLIKIN. If the Treasury's estimates on that matter have been accurate, I say to the Senator that is a shining exception to their other estimates in connection with this budget.

I should like to bring one other matter to the Senator's attention: Under the parliamentary situation we could not, if we wanted to, now increase our estimate of receipts, so far as this budget is concerned.

Mr. BYRD. But the Senator from Colorado has increased it, and he predicates this bill upon an increase in revenue of more than $2,000,000,000.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Exactly.

Mr. BYRD. He has increased it by that much more than was estimated in February.

Mr. MILLIKIN. But I am talking about the result of the budget meeting. We cannot raise that estimate now, no matter how realistic the present estimate is.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. BUCK. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky whether he ever knew of anyone who had the experience of getting a 6-percent kitty with an overpayment?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not familiar with kitties, and therefore I cannot answer the question accurately. [Laughter.] But I know the law provides that after a tax refund is determined to be due, the taxpayer is entitled to interest on it until it is paid to him by the Government.

Mr. BUCK. But the interest paid is not 6 percent.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I think it is.

Mr. BUCK. That is what the taxpayers have to pay on amounts still due the Government, if they pay an insufficient amount of tax in the first place.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; the Government itself is obligated to pay interest on a refund due because of an excess tax payment, after determination is made that the refund is due; the Government is obligated to pay interest on it until it is paid.

Mr. BUCK. Is the Government obligated to pay interest at the rate of 6 percent?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. BUCK. I understand that the Government must pay interest, but is 6 percent interest required?

Mr. BARKLEY. I may be incorrect, but I think it is 6 percent.

Mr. BYRD. Yes; it is 6 percent.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to make an observation with respect to tax refunds: In the event the Congress passes a tax bill reducing taxes, as of July 1, for the fiscal year 1948, the Congress will thereby be increasing the amount of tax refunds which will have to be paid to the taxpayers from the Treasury Department.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me again?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Let me say there is nothing new in either slowing down or accelerating the rate of expenditures, as the Senator knows better than I do. In other words, the expenditures in a given year result not only from the appropriations made in that year, but also from commitments and obligations made in a preceding year; and it is an entirely normal procedure to regulate the expenditures for a given year in the light of the budgetary requirements. There is nothing strange or novel about that; and I think the House Appropriations Committee, assuming that it acted on the basis of information—and I believe there will be some support for its position—had a perfect right to estimate the rate of expenditures in the light of its own budgetary conclusions.

Mr. BYRD. But they are fixed expenditures, because if a taxpayer overpays his taxes—and many of them will do so, by reason of the decreased taxes as proposed in the bill we are discussing—he will be entitled to a refund, and it is not within the power of Congress to decrease the amount of a refund which is due and owing. Whatever it is, it must be paid.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I suggest that we have many fixed obligations which carry over into the fiscal year 1948 from the fiscal year 1947, and they must be paid. They are a part of the picture. That is recognized in the President's budget and in our own resolution with respect to the budget. There is an obvious disparity between the amount of estimated appropriations and expenditures.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me once more?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Let me ask the Senator from Colorado a question. The Senator agrees that if tax refunds in the amount of $800,000,000 are due, they must be paid at some time; does he not?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Yes; if they are valid obligations.

Mr. LUCAS. If they are, they must be paid; is that correct?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. And they must be paid either this year or next year; is that correct?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Yes, that is right; just as we have to pay the appropriations, which are obligations made in this fiscal year, but are carried over into the next fiscal year.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am happy to have the assurance of the able Senator from Colorado, the chairman of the Finance Committee, that there will be a reduction in expenditures for the fiscal year 1948, in the amount of $4,500,000,000, so that the expenditures for fiscal 1948 will not exceed thirty-three billions. How he arrives at that conclusion, I have been unable to ascertain, but I have great confidence in his statement and in his word. If I felt definitely sure that that would be correct, I would vote for the tax-reduction bill. But my judgment tells me, after a careful study of the matter, that the Senator is entirely too optimistic.

Let me call his attention to the fact that of the $17,000,000,000 of appropriation bills which have not yet been acted upon, the appropriation bill for the War Department will require $6,000,000,000 and the appropriation bill for veterans will require $7,000,000,000; in other words, together they comprise $13,000,000,000 of the $17,000,000,000 of appropriations which have not yet been acted upon. I should like to have the Senator tell me where he will reduce more than three and a half billion dollars in those items.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I would not assume to tell the Senator just how that will be done, but I believe that by savings, in which the Senator is primarily interested, plus rescissions, plus other things that will be done, our expenditures for the fiscal year 1948 will be approximately four and a half billion dollars lower than those contemplated by the executive budget.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator is not prepared to give any details?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Even if I were, I doubt whether I would go into it, because that would provoke a repetition of the tail-chasing we got into when we were debating this matter in connection with the Senate budget resolution.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, as I was saying when I was interrupted, it would seem that a bipartisan policy for retrenchment and economy should be the foundation stone upon which to build our foreign policy, as America can perform its commitments only by remaining strong at home, by preserving its fiscal solvency and productive capacity, by safeguarding its ability to finance its obligations without crushing taxation.

Upon our financial security at home depends our capacity to protect our defense if another war should come. An American internal collapse would be the best weapon for the advocates of expansion of world communism. The financial strength of America, let us always remember, is the chief bulwark in the world today against autocracy and totalitarianism. Weaken the financial security of America at home, and you have made the whole world defenseless to the assaults of communism.

But, instead of bipartisan action on the vital question of preserving our financial strength, we find that the President has said his budget should not be reduced one dollar, and the Republicans cannot make up their minds as to a spending ceiling. The 1,141 bureaus cry to the high heavens whenever one dollar is taken off any of their appropriations. Yet an analysis of the appropriations shows that virtually every peacetime bureau is receiving, even under any reductions at this time made, substantially more than in peacetime years.

Mr. President, I have a table here which shows that there is hardly a bureau of Government, even after reductions have been made, about which we have heard so much, that has not tremendously increased its expenditures as compared with 1941.

Let us take for instance the Department of Justice. Sixty-one million dollars was spent for the Department of Justice in 1941; in 1944, $102,000,000 was appropriated and the amount approved by the House Committee on Appropriations for 1948 is $108,000,000. In other words, there has been an increase from 1941 to date of from $61,000,000 to $108,000,000, as approved by the House committee.

Let us take the Department of Labor, about which we have heard so much. In 1941 that department received $23,000,000. In 1944, in the midst of the war, it received $46,000,000, and it was finally given $79,000,000 for 1948, three times as much as it got in 1941.

Let us consider some few others, the Civil Service Commission, for example. It received $97,000,000, in round figures, in 1941; in 1944 it received $192,000,000, and under the budget estimate for 1948 it would receive $260,000,000, increasing the appropriation from before the war from $97,000,000 to $260,000,000.

Take the Federal Communications Commission. In 1941 it received $2,300,000. In 1944 it received $7,600,000, and the budget estimate for 1948 is $7,300,000, just a little less than the height of the appropriations during the war.

The Federal Power Commission received $2,500,000 in 1941. In 1944 it received $2,497,000, and the budget estimate for 1948 is $4,259,000, nearly twice as much.

Let us take the General Accounting Office, which I think is doing splendid work, and it is probably one of the most necessary of the Government agencies. It received $10,900,000 in 1941, $26,000,000 in 1944, and the budget estimate for 1948 is $36,000,000.

The Railroad Retirement Board got $135,000,000 in 1941, it received $277,000,000 in 1944, and $690,000,000 was finally given it for 1948.

Mr. President, I ask that at this point, as part of my remarks, recommendations I made on February 19 with respect to economy and reductions in expenditure be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

While I am a member of the Joint Legislative Budget Committee, I am not a member of the subcommittee which had the benefit of detailed study and which made the recommendation to reduce expenditures from $37,500,000,000 to $31,500,000,000. Neither am I a member of the Appropriations Committee. I speak for myself alone, and I shall attempt to give a broad pattern of expenditure reduction, which can be taken for what it is worth.

First, I would proceed to reduce the number of Federal employees from the present number of 2,300,000 to either 1,600,000, or, if possible, to 1,500,000, placing the number of Federal employees on a basis of 50 to 60 percent more than the year before the war, which number, I am convinced after long investigation, is adequate to perform the functions of government. This would save, in the salary and expenses such as traveling, stationery, rental of buildings, and so forth, the sum of $2,500,000,000. That is the way in which I would start to realize the reduction of $6,000,000,000.

The average salary of Federal employees is $2,640; and with incidentals each employee is costing the Federal Government approximately $3,000 a year, because they must have places in which to work and other facilities.

I would then seek, as the second item of reduction, to require Government corporations to finance out of their existing assets at least $1,000,000,000 of the $1,850,000,000, which is to be withdrawn from the Treasury next year by such corporations. The net capital of Government corporations is approximately $10,000,000,000. The Byrd-Butler bill provides that as the assets of these corporations are liquidated, or if earnings were made, such balances should be returned to the Treasury of the United States instead of remaining in the hands of the corporations. Consistent with this legislation, it would be entirely reasonable to require these corporations to absorb a part of the amount of the funds included in the expenditure budget. They are requesting $1,850,000,000, and I propose to require them to finance $1,000,000,000 out of their existing assets. This may be difficult, but it can be done, I think, even though it may be necessary to reduce the activities of the forty-odd corporations; and I believe that the time has come for this. I have thought for a long time that we should substantially reduce them. That is the next item I would reduce.

In any event, speaking of Government corporations, the item of $830,000,000 which is in the budget to restore the capital of the Commodity Credit Corporation has no place in the 1948 budget, as the impairment of the capital of the Commodity Credit Corporation occurred in 1946 and 1947 and, to be fair about it, that impairment should be handled in the present budget and not passed on to the next budget.

These two savings, if effected, would amount to $3,500,000,000, leaving a balance of $2,500,000,000 of the $6,000,000,000 reduction proposed.

Those are my suggestions. Frankly, if I were called upon to balance the budget, that is how I would go about it as to $3,500,000,000.

I am firmly of the opinion that within the scope of the remaining budget expenditures, a saving of $2,500,000,000 can be effected without endangering our national security or any other essential functions of government—the Army, the Navy, or any others—by scrutiny and careful action on the part of the Appropriations Committees. That would aggregate $6,000,000,000. I will expand that further.

It may be that we shall have to do without some things that are desirable, but not necessary. If the people, through Congress, continue to add to the burdens of the Federal Government by asking the Government to do things which they should do for themselves, then of course these economies are not possible. When I say that there can be a reduction of $6,000,000,000 without doing injury to the essential functions of Government, I want to emphasize that the important feature of that program is to allocate and distribute the reductions in the most scientific and fairest possible way. If we apportion the $6,000,000,000 reduction in a just and fair way on the expenditures that are proposed in this budget, I am convinced that we can effect this economy and not endanger the functions of Government.

It may be that some of the things which we have been doing for years we ought not to have been doing, and that they should be dropped in order to reduce our stupendous obligations. It can be done if there is a will to do it. If we say that we cannot do it, we shall not accomplish the desired saving. Every Member of the Senate knows the extravagance that exists in practically every branch and activity of the Army and the Navy. I say this, as I have said before, without criticism of our great military leaders, because they have neither the time nor the inclination to conduct peacetime operations with the necessary economy and efficiency. Let me give a little itemization of the $2,500,000,000.

It may be that there must be reductions in the less essential public-works programs and in other fields of activity of the Government, including the reduction or elimination of an item of $500,000,000 for housing and community work. Personally, I can see no need for such an expenditure under the present situation. Those two items aggregate approximately $1,600,000,000.

From the combination of public works and housing it should be possible to obtain a reduction of $500,000,000, reducing the balance to be cut $2,000,000,000.

The field for economies to produce this $2,000,000,000 cut is very wide. It includes the Veterans' Administration, in which certainly some economies can be made. I believe that such a plan will be devised. It is a comparatively new agency on its present basis, and, naturally, it has been more wasteful up to date than it should have been. I do not know how much can be cut from it. I think something can be, and still give needed service to the veterans.

Economies can be effected in such items as agriculture, national resources, transportation and commerce, finance, and industry, and general government. On the items which I have just mentioned we propose to spend $8,000,000,000. We certainly should save at least $500,000,000 out of that $8,000,000,000 in addition to personnel cuts.

That brings us within a billion and a half of what we need to make the $6,000,000,000 reduction. I have not reached the Army and Navy.

Notwithstanding the public statements that have been made by officials of the Army and Navy that no cuts can be made without disaster to our national defense, I am informed by high-ranking officials of both the Army and the Navy that reasonable cuts can be made in the proposed appropriation of $11,200,000,000. I think a 10-percent reduction can be made in this appropriation in addition to a proper reduction of civilian personnel.

It is my opinion that the best service that the Congress can now render the cause of national defense is to insist and demand that the national defense program shall be administered with due regard to economy and efficiency. Looking forward to the future, we must realize that the longer exaggerated military spending is tolerated now, the more difficult it will be to sustain public opinion favoring necessary expenditures for adequate national defense in years to come. Unless we so conduct our national defense program as to bring it within the ability of the people to pay, and at the same time eliminate unnecessary waste and extravagance, then, as the years go on, it will be more and more difficult to induce the people of the United States to pay the taxes necessary to maintain a proper national defense program.

I want to eliminate the water in the national defense programs without injuring our essential objective of a strong national defense; and, by doing so, to convince the people of America that we are performing an essential public service at minimum cost. In the budget for the third fiscal year of peace after the end of the war the proposed expenditures of $11,200,000,000 is 11 times more than our national defense cost the year before Pearl Harbor, and nearly half the total cost of World War I.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I should like to say that I am reliably informed that interest on refunds due to excess withholding—and I understand that accounts for about a billion and a half dollars out of the $2,000,000,000 refund item—does not start until the return is filed 1 year after the date of payment.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I know of nothing that would strengthen our hand abroad and encourage Americans at home more than for the Republican and Democratic leaders, as I have said, to have a bipartisan policy for economy at home, as we have in our policy abroad. The one is necessary to implement the other. How are we to carry out the great obligations we have assumed all over the world unless we have at home the strong government which is made possible by retrenchment and economy, and the elimination of waste and extravagance which have existed in this Government for 14 years?

The greatest internal menace confronting America today is a public debt which is equivalent to more than twice as much as the assessed value of all the property in America. This debt averages more than $5,000,000,000 for each State, and the average value of all the tangible property of a majority of the States in the Union is estimated at being less than $5,000,000,000.

Let me state the reason why I am so much concerned that we have not as yet been able to reduce expenditures substantially. If we cannot reduce the expenditures of government in the third peacetime year, let me ask the Senate, when will we be able to reduce them? What reason is there to think that next year or the year after next we will be able to reduce expenditures if we cannot reduce them now? We are now enjoying the greatest prosperity this Nation has ever known. We have a national income of $180,000,000,000, which is twice as much as the annual income before the war. Senators know that when a recession of business comes, demands will be made upon the Public Treasury to give more and more for different purposes. Not only will we lose the tax revenue that comes from the present inflated national income, but we will have to spend more money.

I say in all seriousness, if we adopt a budget four times as large as that of the year before the war, as it seems apparently we will do, we will be inviting financial disaster.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Can the Senator give us any theory as to the reason for the adamant resistance of the administration to any reduction in the budget?

Mr. BYRD. I could not do that, Mr. President. This is not a political question with me. I wish to associate myself with Senators who believe in economy and retrenchment, I care not whether they are Democrats or Republicans. I will cooperate with anyone in any move that will eliminate waste and extravagance. I do not desire to become involved in any political question regarding this matter. I said that I did not agree with the President's contention that there could be no reduction in the $37,500,000,000 figure for the 1948 budget, and I deplore the failure of the Republicans, through the Joint Committee on the Budget, to say that they will make substantial reductions in expenditures. If they cannot do that, let the joint committee come forward and say they cannot do it, and ask to be discharged.

Mr. MILLIKIN. One reason why I referred to the attitude of the administration was because the Senator has been quite critical of the Republican Party in one aspect of his argument.

Mr. BYRD. I am sorry the Senator thinks I am critical. I have the highest personal regard for him. I am merely stating facts. When the time comes that the Congress can ignore a law it has passed, how can we expect the people of the country to respect the laws? I say it is the moral duty and the legal obligation of the conferees to meet; and, if they cannot agree, to ask to be discharged, or at least advise the Senate that they cannot come to an agreement—and let it be remembered that they have had one meeting in 2½ months.

As I have said, Mr. President, if we freeze our peacetime annual expenditures between $35,000,000,000 and $40,000,000,000, we are inviting disaster. No man living is sufficiently wise to look into the future and say how long the present inflation will continue. Again let me emphasize that, should the national income go down even $10,000,000,000—and proportionately that is not much; it is only 6 percent of our present national income—if it went down $10,000,000,000, we would lose $3,000,000,000 in tax revenues, and there would be a deficit for the coming year. That is why it is so essential to reduce expenditures; such action has substance to it, for when expenditures are reduced, something is being accomplished, money is being saved. But what is being done by the pending bill is to predicate a tax reduction upon an inflation and upon an inflated revenue, which may not materialize; it will be like the mist before the morning sun; it may be here today and gone tomorrow. No Member of the Senate, I imagine, believes that the national income will continue on a level of $180,000,000,000, because, as I shall discuss a little later, that is entirely out of proportion, even when we consider the reduced purchasing power of the dollar. That is why it is so essential to reduce expenditures rather than to base our prospects upon a continuation of the existing inflated conditions.

Mr. President, I want Senators to mark this: As compared to August 15, 1939, on a basis of consumer value, the dollar is now worth 63 cents. If it was worth 100 cents in August 1939, the Bureau of Labor Statistics say it is worth 63 cents now. The national income in 1939 was $70,000,000,000. On a comparative basis of the dollar value, the national income today would be about $110,000,000,000. It is $180,000,000,000. A national income of $110,000,000,000 would cause one of the greatest deficits we have ever known, except in 2 or 3 years of the period when we were financing the war.

Mr. President, the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee and the committee itself are predicating the bill upon revenues on a basis of $170,000,000,000 of national income for the fiscal year 1948. That means the year beginning the 1st of July 1948. It is significant that, after meeting in February and estimating an income on the existing rates of taxation—I think thirty-nine and one-tenth billion dollars was the revenue estimated by the committee; of course, it was not the estimate of the Treasury, this is not the administration; it is not those who should have the best information regarding such matters—the committee claims we will have $41,400,000,000. They increase their own estimate by more than $2,000,000,000 within a period from February up to the time the bill was reported.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MILLIKIN. The rate of national income payments, at the time we adopted the concurrent resolution, in the Senate, was at the rate of $165,000,000,000 per annum; whereas, now, it is $176,000,000,000.

Mr. BYRD. I know; but what the Senator is doing is this: The income estimate is for the year beginning July 1, 1948. The Senator is taking the month of March and basing the next year's estimation that month upon that income.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I think it would be obviously unrealistic to adhere to an estimate that was based on $165,000,000,000, when, during the intervening months, we now learn that our rate of national income payments is $176,000,000,000.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator has no assurance, let me say, that it is going to continue for the next 14 months.

Mr. MILLIKIN. No. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I think a conservative estimate should be made. It is much better to be on the conservative side in a matter of this kind, than to take the full share of the highest income we have ever known, which was last month, and then say we are going to continue at the same ratio for the next 14 months.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I should like to make it very clear in the RECORD that we have not accepted the highest rate. The highest rate is around $176,000,000,000. Our rate is based on $170,000,000,000, which allows for a modest recession. The administration has revised its estimates to $168,000,000,000. We are only a little bit above the administration's revised estimates.

Mr. BYRD. Let me say, that the estimate of the Administration was made in December, and it has not been changed since then. The estimate of the joint committee was made in February, and it was hiked up over $2,000,000,000, between February and May.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. Does the Senator agree with that statement?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Yes, I agree with that. I have no confidence in the Administration's estimates.

Mr. BYRD. I hope we can have full confidence in the committee's estimates, as the months go on.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I shall put forth my best evangelical efforts to inspire that confidence in the Senator.

Mr. BYRD. Even with as great power as the Senator has, I do not think he has power over the national income of this country to cause it either to go up or down.

Mr. MILLIKIN. The income of the country has been estimated by the Department of Commerce, and I have heard no one challenge the figures, as running at a rate of $176,000,000,000 of income payment. We are running our estimates on the basis of $170,000,000,000. Under simple arithmetic, that would allow for a recession to $164,000,000,000 some time during the year, to make the figure of $170,000,000,000, which is the basis on which we are operating.

Mr. BYRD. Let me call to the attention of the Senator the fact that in December it was $168,000,000,000. It then went up, during January, February, and March. It is now on the decline. It is not stationary and can readily decline for fiscal 1948. The Senator is assuming that the same ratio will continue throughout the fiscal year 1948.

Mr. MILLIKIN. No, Mr. President; I wish to disagree with that. We are not assuming that. We are assuming that there will be a decline, which will reflect over the fiscal year 1948 in our estimate of $170,000,000,000 instead of the present $176,000,000,000; as to which there is no question. For the first half of the fiscal year 1948, if I may suggest it, short of some entirely unforeseen cataclysm, it is bound to remain high. That will be accomplished merely by momentum of the income of the first 3 months—the reflection of corporate profits, and the reflection of the increased pay scale, that are expanding all over the country. Therefore, the estimate of $170,000,000,000, if it comes that low on the average, will have to represent a very substantial decline in the last half of fiscal 1948.

Mr. BYRD. Let me ask the Senator, suppose the income goes down, in the next fiscal year, not 1948, but 1949—then there will be a deficit, if the present rate of expenditures is maintained. Would it not have been better to have taken the surplus money—because it is all inflationary; there is nothing substantial about it—would it not have been better to have taken it and applied it to the public debt?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I am heartily committed to a substantial payment on the public debt. We have before us the choice of a plan which contemplates $2,600,000,000 a year payment on the national debt, or the administration plan, which contemplates $1,250,000,000 this fiscal year, and $1,400,000,000 next fiscal year. Under the administration's theory it would take 200 years to pay off the national debt. The Senate theory contemplates a much shorter period.

Mr. BYRD. But plans do not amount to anything, unless there is the money in the Treasury with which to pay on the public debt.

Mr. MILLIKIN. No.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, let me remind the Senator that we have had amortization of the public debt in the budget, for years. In the deficit years, what did we do? We borrowed new money in order to pay the amortization. So a mere plan means nothing; there must be the money, in cold cash, with which to make payment.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I agree. I should now like to answer directly the Senator's question. He refers to the possibility of a deficit after the fiscal year 1948. I think a man would be a fool who would foreclose possibilities of deficits in the future. I would not for one moment tie myself to any theory that we shall never again have a deficit. But I may say to the Senator my point is that from our viewpoint, at least, where, under all considerations and under all estimates of which I have knowledge, we are running at a surplus under the administration's theories and under the theories of the majority of the Senate Finance Committee, I think we should do both:

We should pay on the debt, but we should reduce taxes. I do not believe we can say to the people of the United States that, because, at some unforeseeable time in the future, we may run into deficits again, we will never give them a tax reduction.

Mr. BYRD. Let me make myself clear to the Senator. What I mean is that we ought not to take the surplus resulting from inflated revenue and authorize continuing expenses with it, for the day will come when the revenue is going down, and the high governmental expenses will continue.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I hope, Mr. President, that I have made it clear that I am not in favor of continuing the Government on a deficit basis when it is not necessary.

Mr. BYRD. I understand, but I think the policies advocated by the Senator are going to bring us to that situation. The administration estimates the revenue for the next year to be $38,800,000,000. The Senator and his experts estimate it at $41,400,000,000. If there is no reduction in expenditures—and no one can say yet whether there is going to be any such reduction in the next year—what may be the result? Suppose new foreign demands for assistance are made, and new commitments are entered into during the year. No one can say that such commitments will not be made. If there are no reductions made in expenditures the country may find itself on a deficit basis. Why not take the conservative view of the situation? If we have a little extra money, why not apply it on the public debt? It is not going to do any harm to apply the extra money upon the public debt; not a bit in the world. When conditions are unsettled as they are now it is the thing to do.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. It is our theory that if we are correct respecting the figure of $170,000,000,000 of national individual income payments—and that figure is only a little above the administration's estimate—if we are correct in respect to that figure——

Mr. BYRD. Does not the Senator from Colorado think that $2,000,000,000 is a little something? We used to think that a billion dollars was quite a figure. Two thousand million dollars is more than a little something.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I would not say it is a little something. But we could accept the administration's figure and still achieve debt reduction and carry the weight, if it turns out to be a weight, of our income-tax-reduction bill, as was developed yesterday. One could make a very strong argument, I suggest to the Senator, that in this kind of an economy the revenues are not decreased by a tax-reduction bill.

Mr. BYRD. One could also make another strong argument that another series of deficits would shake the belief of the people of the world and of this country in the financial stability of this country. The very foundation of the stability of the country can be shaken by another series of deficits. One can make all sorts of arguments.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I agree with that statement. Neither of us can look into the future far enough to chart what may happen.

Mr. BYRD. Is not the very fact that we cannot look into the future a reason why we should be very careful and prudent about our fiscal policy?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I always believe in being careful and prudent, and from my viewpoint we are being careful and prudent. We are figuring on the fiscal year 1948. I wish I could look beyond that. But I must necessarily be content with taking a look at the fiscal year 1948, because that is the year we are dealing with and I do not believe that anyone can say now what is going to happen in the fiscal year 1949. We are in disagreement even as to what is going to happen in 1948.

Mr. BYRD. I think, Mr. President, that any businessman or any government in times as unsettled as these ought to be very prudent and lay up reserves as large as possible.

Mr. President, I wish to discuss very briefly the question of the national income, because we have a taxation system now that is dependent, practically entirely, for its receipts upon the amount of the national income, because we rely so heavily upon the income taxes. I think our tax system is volatile and undependable because it relies so heavily upon income taxes, particularly upon income taxes in the higher bracket. I will not detain the Senate much longer. Let me give a few figures about the national income which no one disputes.

In 1921, and that was a pretty prosperous year, we had a national income of $96,000,000,000. The present tax-reduction bill is predicated upon a national income of $170,000,000,000. For every billion dollars of national-income decline we lose in taxes $300,000,000, or 30 percent, under the existing tax rates. The Senator from Colorado has just spoken to me and said "national individual income." The figures are comparable, and what I have stated is based upon the estimates upon which the experts of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation and the Treasury Department agree. If the national income goes down the tax revenue is reduced 30 percent of the decline. If the national income goes up the Government revenue from it increases 30 percent.

What would happen, Mr. President, if the national income went down to $96,000,000,000 as compared to $170,000,000,000. The Government would lose over $20,000,000,000 of tax revenue. Just think of that. I do not say the national income will go down to that figure, but 1941, when the national income was $96,000,000,000, was not a year without prosperity. That was a year when we were preparing for war.

In the year 1942, the national income was $122,000,000,000. When I say that I mean the national income that comes from individual wages, salaries, and so forth.

In 1943, the national income was $149,000,000,000. That was a prosperous year. We were then in the midst of the war. We were turning out production at a great rate.

In 1944, the national income was $160,000,000,000.

Mr. President, the point I am trying to make is that so long as we collect 85 percent of the Government's revenue in income taxes we have the risk of great fluctuations occurring in our Federal Government income as the national individual income goes up or down.

As compared to August 15, 1939, on a basis of consumer value, the dollar is worth 63 cents, as reported by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. In 1939 the national income was $70,000,000,000. On a comparative basis of dollar value, the national income today would be about $110,000,000,000, while the revenue receipts upon which this reduction is predicated is $170,000,000,000 for fiscal 1948. This indicates to some degree the inflated values between this period and 1939.

Mr. President, I have a chart showing the national income from 1909 to date, and I intend to place it in the RECORD. There has not been a period between those years when the national income has been stable. It has fluctuated, moving up and down. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point in my remarks a statement of the national income payments and the method upon which these payments are computed, from 1909 to 1946.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

National income

Year:
1910	30.4
1911	30.5
1912	32.9
1913	34.8

METHOD OF COMPUTING NATIONAL INCOME

1. Salaries and wages (including employees' contributions to social security).
2. All net income to proprietors.
3. Interest and net rents to individuals.
4. All net corporate profits.
5. Supplements to salaries and wages (including compensation for injuries such as workmen's compensation, and employers' contributions to social security).

Mr. BYRD. I emphasize again how great the variations in national income have been as proof that our tax system is not on a sound basis. It is volatile and undependable because it relies so heavily upon income taxes, and particularly upon income taxes in the higher brackets.

If the national income should go down to one hundred and ten billion, the tax revenue would be twenty-one billion five hundred million.

If the national income should go down to one hundred and twenty billion, the tax revenue would be twenty-three billion five hundred million.

If the national income were one hundred and thirty billion, the tax revenue would be twenty-six billion five hundred million.

If the national income were one hundred and forty billion, the tax revenue would be twenty-nine billion.

If the national income were one hundred and fifty billion, the tax revenue would be thirty-two billion.

If the national income were one hundred and sixty billion, the tax revenue would be thirty-four billion five hundred million.

These estimates of tax revenue from the various amounts of national income were supplied to me by the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation in February last, and were approved by the Treasury Department.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCGRATH in the chair). Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator of course realizes that the two are not comparable, because we now have an increase in wages, in wage rates, of more than 50 percent over 1941.

Mr. BYRD. I brought that point out previously in my statement.

Mr. TAFT. Consequently, so far as those prices are concerned, consideration must be given to the 50-percent increase over 1941.

Mr. BYRD. I brought that out while the Senator from Ohio was not in the Senate Chamber. As compared with 1939, the dollar today is worth about 63 cents. That is a difference of about 55 percent. The Senator is correct in his statement. Taking that difference into consideration, it will be found that, as compared to 1940, the entire period before the war, the present national income of $170,000,000,000 is greatly in excess of the 1940 income, after taking into consideration the difference in the purchasing power of the dollar.

Mr. TAFT. A moment ago the Senator spoke of the estimate made by the Treasury of $39,100,000,000.

Mr. BYRD. That was the estimate made by the Joint Legislative Budget Committee.

Mr. TAFT. The estimate of the receipts of the Treasury as being $39,100,000,000?

Mr. BYRD. That was the estimate of receipts for the fiscal year 1948, yes, as made by the Joint Legislative Budget Committee.

Mr. TAFT. That estimate was made, however, in December or November of last year.

Mr. BYRD. No; that was the estimate made by the Joint Legislative Budget Committee. The Treasury estimate was $38,800,000,000.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator was present when we had the Secretary of the Treasury before us, at which time I tried to ask him, "Have you, in view of the new developments reestimated the income for the fiscal year 1948?" Was it not clear to the Senator that he did not, or at least that he did not wish to reveal what those figures were?

Mr. BYRD. He said he had not reestimated them. But the Senator from Ohio did not catch my point. What I said was that the Legislative Budget Committee controlled by the Senator's party estimated in February, I think it was, that the Federal tax income would be $39,100,000,000. This bill is predicated upon an estimate made 2 months later of an income of $41,400,000,000, a difference of $2,300,000,000.

Mr. TAFT. Exactly, because of increase in prices, because of increase in the estimate of the income, because of increases which the Treasury has already taken into account in its estimate for the fiscal year 1947, but which the Treasury refuses to take into account for the fiscal year 1948.

Mr. BYRD. I make the point again, Mr. President, that this bill should be predicated upon an estimate for the fiscal year 1948, not an estimate for today or tomorrow. It is an estimate for the year ending July 1, 1948.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. With respect to the question raised by the Senator from Ohio, I simply wish to say that it does not necessarily mean that because prices have advanced buyers will be found who will buy at those advanced prices. It does not necessarily mean that because the hourly wage rates are high full jobs and full employment for all workers at those high rates are going to be found.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Senator from Georgia. He is entirely correct in his statement.

In conclusion, I wish to say that I will support the motion made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] to postpone consideration of the tax bill until a further indication can be given by the action of the respective committees and by the House, and, if possible, by the Senate, as to the extent of the reductions to be effected in the President's budget. This is the only safe and prudent way for us to proceed.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. With reference to the Senator's recommendation that we make a substantial payment on the national debt, does the Senator foresee any future time when we shall be in a better position to make a payment on the national debt?

Mr. BYRD. I cannot conceive of our being in any more fortunate and better position than we are in today, so far as paying off at least a part of the debt is concerned.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Is it not also true that in estimating the national debt at $258,000,000,000 we include in that total the current redemption value of E bonds, but not their maturity value; and that if we take the national debt at its maturity value, it is $10,000,000,000 more than the current estimate? If we do not pay on the national debt now, it will automatically increase.

Mr. BYRD. My colleague is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Can the Senator tell us what the expenditures of Government were in 1939? He has used that figure from time to time.

Mr. BYRD. Approximately $9,000,000,000.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator further stated that at the present time, in comparison with 1939, the dollar is worth only 63 cents. If that is true, compared with 1939, the budget submitted by the President on the basis of $37,500,000,000 would be a budget of only $23,600,000,000 if it were computed on the basis of the value of the dollar in 1939.

Mr. BYRD. It would not be that much. As I calculate it, the figure would be about 55 percent more than the budget of 1939.

Mr. LUCAS. I may have the wrong figure, but I thought it was interesting to make that comparison. If we are dealing with a 60-cent dollar at the present time in comparison with 1939, it is interesting to make the comparison with respect to what the budget would be on the basis of the dollar of 1939, if we are comparing the budget estimate with that of 1939.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGRATH in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] to postpone further consideration of House bill 1 until June 10.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, we have a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on this motion at 4 o'clock on Monday afternoon. Are any proponents of the motion ready to speak?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, several other Senators desire to speak in support of the motion.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Swanson, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3245) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes; that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12 to the bill, and concurred therein, and that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 7 and 13 to the bill, and concurred therein, each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS, 1947—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on House bill 3245, the second deficiency appropriation bill, 1947, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the conference report.

The clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3245) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 9, 10, 11, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, and 28, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum of "$70,000" named in said amendment insert "$60,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"FEDERAL WORKS AGENCY

"BUREAU OF COMMUNITY FACILITIES

"Veterans' educational facilities: For an additional amount for the completion of construction and installation of veterans' educational facilities, fiscal year 1947, $3,000,000, to be available until expended, but not to be available for new projects after September 30, 1947, of which amount not to exceed $100,000 shall be available for administrative expenses: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the relocation of any building at a cost greater than $3 per square foot."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

"Maintenance and operation of air navigation facilities: For an additional amount, fiscal year 1947, for 'Maintenance and operation of air navigation facilities', $20,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 7, 12, and 13.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the report was considered and agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its action on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 3245, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
March 22, 1947.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12 to the bill (H. R. 3245) making appropriations to supply deficiences in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, and concur therein.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert:

"Such sums as may be determined by the Bureau of the Budget to be necessary are hereby appropriated for making for the first quarter of the fiscal year 1948 (1) grants to States for assistance to aged needy individuals, needy dependent children, and needy individuals who are blind, as authorized in titles I, IV, and X, respectively, of the Social Security Act approved August 14, 1935, as amended, and (2) grants to States for unemployment compensation administration: Provided, That the obligations incurred and expenditures made for each of such purposes under the authority of this appropriation shall be charged to the appropriations therefor in the Labor-Federal Security Appropriation Act, 1948."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert:

"FARM LABOR SUPPLY PROGRAM

"Supply and distribution of farm labor: The funds provided by the Farm Labor Supply Appropriation Act, 1944, as amended and supplemented, are hereby continued available through January 30, 1948, for carrying out the purposes of said act, as amended, and the act of April 28, 1947 (Public Law 40, 80th Cong.), an act providing for a 6 months' extension and final liquidation of the farm labor supply program; and, in addition to the amount continued available, there is hereby appropriated for such purposes the sum of $5,000,000 to be merged with the funds hereby continued available. Not less than $2,000,000 of such additional funds shall be apportioned among the several States in the manner and for the purposes specified in section 2 of the Farm Labor Supply Appropriation Act, 1944. In addition to the amounts heretofore made available for administrative expenses pursuant to section 3 of such act, there is hereby made available out of said funds the sum of $250,000 for such purposes: Provided, That not to exceed $258,500 of the total funds remaining as of January 30, 1948, shall be available until June 30, 1948, for administrative and other expenses, including personal services in the District of Columbia, incident to the settlement of growers' and workers' contracts and accounts, the collection of reimbursements due the Government, the payment of transportation and other obligations outstanding, and the handling of other necessary fiscal and administrative work in the final liquidation and disposition of Government assets and liabilities under the program: Provided further, That not to exceed $500,000 of the receipts derived from sales of labor supply centers, labor homes, labor camps, and facilities under the provisions of section 2 (d) of the act of August 14, 1946 (Public Law 731), as amended, shall be available for the payment of costs of the liquidation of such labor supply centers, labor homes, labor camps, and facilities, including personal services in the District of Columbia, and any appropriations or other funds from which such costs have been advanced may be reimbursed therefor from any such receipts, the net proceeds of such sales to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States."

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 7 and 13.

The motion was agreed to.

WANTON DESTRUCTION OF FOOD

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, on last Sunday, May 18, readers of many of our Sunday newspapers must have been shocked by the Associated Press wire photo of a huge pile of potatoes which were destroyed by the Government—at least, I was shocked by it. Knowing that starvation is prevalent throughout the world, I sincerely hope that the Voice of America does not employ a wire-photo service for foreign countries. I am afraid that a picture such as the one I have before me would cause mutiny and perhaps revolution abroad.

The description accompanying the photograph published on May 18 is as follows:

FOLEY, ALA.—Government condemns surplus potatoes. More than 50 tons of surplus potatoes grown in Baldwin County, Ala., were dumped by the Government near here Friday because of a glutted market. Two production and marketing administration checkers stand atop the pile dumping the spuds into an open field. Kerosene was then poured over them to make them unfit for consumption.

Mr. President, today those same potatoes would cost the consumer 10 cents a pound in the market in Washington. To me this was a revolting display of wanton destruction of food. I know that the argument is made that there was a surplus, and that they did not know what to do with the potatoes.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I shall be glad to yield in a moment.

Mr. President, in this Nation we have all sorts of tax-supported institutions which are having a most difficult time staying within their budgetary requirements. It seems to me that these potatoes could very well have been sent to such institutions, and might well have been used by them, on a basis of no charge whatsoever, rather than being poured out on the dump and soaked with kerosene to make them unfit for human use.

I now yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am in thorough accord with the Senator from Colorado regarding the destruction of food. I saw the same article and the same picture. I have intended to make some investigation to ascertain, if I could, if there was any satisfactory explanation or answer. I have not made such an investigation. I wonder if the Senator from Colorado has done so.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I have tried to make an investigation, and the only thing I am told is that there was a surplus, and that in order not to weaken the market it was necessary to dump the potatoes and render them unfit for human consumption.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. I am in thorough accord with the Senator from Colorado on the question of destruction of food which can be used in America. However, so far as shipment of the potatoes to Europe is concerned, no shipping is available, and no refrigeration is available. At one time an attempt was made to send several shiploads of potatoes to Antwerp. I happened to have been there at the end of the war in 1945. The operation was not successful. Badly needed shipping was used, and, even then, because of a lack of refrigeration, potatoes were dumped in the harbor of Antwerp. It is difficult to obtain refrigerated ships in which to transport potatoes to the starving people of Europe.

I suggest—and I hope it may be done—that potatoes be dehydrated and be made available in that form to those in need. But so far as shipping raw potatoes to Europe is concerned, it cannot be done. There is no refrigeration. I hope when the Senate investigates this question some way will be found to dehydrate early potatoes so that they can be shipped abroad.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. In a moment. Of course I understand that these potatoes could not have been shipped to Europe; it was absolutely impossible, because early potatoes are very perishable and cannot be shipped very far. What I contend is that instead of destroying them they should have been shipped to tax-supported institutions.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, the Senator has brought up a subject which has been discussed on the floor many times previously. I should like to add to what I have stated that there are not sufficient iced cars in the United States in which to ship the early Alabama, Florida, Carolina, and Georgia potatoes even to New York.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina is giving some of the answers which I knew or thought were involved in this question. I think I should say that I have discussed the potato situation with the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Anderson, several times, but it was some months ago. I know the Secretary of Agriculture very well, of course; I have known him for many years. He comes from my State. I know that no one in the United States is more opposed to the destruction of food or products which could be utilized as food than is the Secretary of Agriculture. I also know that the potato problem has been a source of constant headache to the Department of Agriculture for a long time. They are unable to find the complete answer to the situation. Of course, there is no satisfactory answer which would involve approval of the destruction of potatoes. I think that should be said for the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I share the high regard which the Senator from New Mexico holds for Secretary Anderson. He is, in my estimation, perhaps the ablest man who has ever held that position. I have every respect for him and every confidence in him, but, nevertheless, I do not think there is any justification whatsoever for dumping potatoes in a pile and destroying them. The Senator from South Carolina has said there is not sufficient iced cars and, of course, that is true; but the potatoes were hauled in trucks, and I have pictures of the trucks dumping them. I contend that it costs just as much to haul those potatoes out and spill them over the dump as it would have cost to take them to some institution where they might have been used.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. I do not want the distinguished Senator from Colorado to believe for one moment that I agree to such a procedure as destroying potatoes. My only desire was to bring out the point that Georgia, the Carolinas, Alabama, and Florida potatoes will be coming on the market next week, and I know whereof I speak when I say that there are not sufficient refrigerator cars to haul potatoes to New York, or even to Washington, without spoilage. As many Senators will remember, I spoke on the floor of the Senate several years ago regarding the situation in Potomac Yards. At that time the odor arising from the rotted potatoes which had been shipped there in cars was so bad as to be almost overpowering.

I am in thorough agreement that something should be done. There is a shortage of iced cars to take care of the potatoes which are planted early and heavily fertilized and rushed to market. Unless something can be done to provide the necessary iced cars or the necessary refrigerated ships to transport products of this kind there will be a continuation of present conditions. I thoroughly agree with my distinguished friend from Colorado that an investigation should be made to ascertain what may be done by way of treating and preserving this type of potatoes which are now allowed to go to waste.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I called attention to the fact that such potatoes are now costing the consumer in Washington, and, I presume, in all the other cities in the East, 10 cents a pound.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is eminently correct. But only a few of these potatoes can reach here.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. There are sufficient trucks to haul them. A great many of them could be moved, I am sure. As I have already stated, they could have been moved just as easily to market as they could have been moved out to the dump.

I do not care to prolong the discussion.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I merely wanted to ask a question which perhaps someone familiar with potato growing can answer. I am not myself familiar with it. Am I correct in my belief that a subsidy has been paid potato growers, but that no control over production is exercised?

Mr. MAYBANK. There is control over production, but most of the potatoes are going to the Government.

Mr. HATCH. Is the Senator certain that there is any control over production?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The subsidy is tied up, as I understand, with the acreage.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator is correct. The subsidy is tied up with the acreage. The only thing that can be done with this type of potato is to dehydrate it or use it for some other purpose. It is not like the Idaho or Maine potatoes. It is an early potato which is planted in my section not later than George Washington's Birthday in order to get new potatoes early in the season to New York, Philadelphia, and other cities. The production is large. There are not sufficient iced cars any more, and we have not enough ships. I am glad that the Senator brought up the problem. The Secretary of Agriculture has worked diligently in an effort to try to find some solution of it.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. I should like to confirm the statement which the distinguished Senator from South Carolina has made with reference to the difficulty of getting sufficient refrigerated transportation. About a month or 6 weeks ago one of the largest areas in Florida which produces somewhat earlier than does the area in South Carolina which has been mentioned—I am referring to the area around the little town of La Crosse, Fla.—got in touch with my office and they were in great difficulty because they had been notified by the railroad serving that area that they could not have any iced cars for the shipment of the potato crop which was about ready to move. Naturally we tried to assist them and were able to assist them by locating some cars and getting them in there, but not in sufficient numbers to fully take care of the crop. That is a problem which will not be solved until more cars of the type used in such transportation are made available.

I might add that this problem has arisen in my own State and that the Senator from South Carolina is correct in his statement that we are dealing with an early product which is full of water, which is very difficult to keep, and that it by no means compares with the potatoes moved later in the season from points farther north.

Without at all trying to excuse the practice complained of, for I also feel that the problem should be approached with the idea of disposing the potatoes for any useful purpose to which they can be put, I should like to say that they do not constitute the same type of potatoes sold on the market here at the prices which have been mentioned by the Senator from Colorado, because the support program offered under the Steagall amendment to give some help to farmers who met the war-production challenge for a period of 2 years after the cessation of the war has operated so far, at least in our area in the southern part of the Nation, in connection with only the second-class potatoes and not the first grade of potatoes. So, without at all excusing or justifying the practice of destroying potatoes, I do want to say that there are terrific difficulties in connection with it, and I want to approve what has been said by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Florida gave an example of what recently happened in his own State with respect to potatoes that could not be delivered to proper destinations. What would have happened to the potato crop if he had not intervened and been able to obtain cars to transport them?

Mr. HOLLAND. A great proportion of that crop would have spoiled.

Mr. LUCAS. Would not the same thing have happened to that crop which has happened to the particular crop which is being photographed throughout the United States?

Mr. HOLLAND. The Senator is correct that the crop, or that proportion of it which is being destroyed, is only the second-grade variety of potatoes. If refrigerator transportation had not been available, both that class and the better class of potatoes would have spoiled.

Mr. LUCAS. The able Senator from Florida is a former governor of his State and knows about State institutions. The able Senator from Colorado has made the suggestion that perhaps these potatoes could have gone to some State institution which might use them. Does the Senator know of any State institution to which could have been sent the particular crop of potatoes about which he has told us; and if they could not have been shipped there in freight cars, could they have been taken there by truck?

Mr. HOLLAND. I am unable to answer in detail, but I may say that the State of Florida has its own farms which produce large quantities of potatoes and other vegetables and fresh food for its penal and other institutions. But even if this were not so, the consumption of potatoes at local institutions in Florida would not have begun to meet the problem, because the quantity of potatoes produced in Florida is greatly in excess of the quantity that could be consumed at the State institutions.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, in order to bring the matter before the proper Senate committee—the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry—I have prepared a bill, and I now ask unanimous consent to introduce it and request that it be referred to that committee, so that the entire matter may be given further attention by the committee which is qualified in every way to investigate this whole situation.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I think the Senator is doing the proper thing. As I recall, about a year ago, or possibly even more recently than that, the same question of spoiled potatoes was before the Committee on Agriculture. As I remember, in that case the potatoes were in the North, possibly in North Dakota. When we finally received the testimony of the Secretary of Agriculture he convinced every member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry that there was nothing else that could be done under the circumstances.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me once more?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I wish to concur in what the Senator from Illinois has said. Knowing the Secretary of Agriculture as I do know him, as I stated before, I am positive in my own mind that he had no recourse whatever except to take the course which was taken in the case of these potatoes, regrettable though it may have been. I certainly do not want the impression to be created throughout the country that the Secretary of Agriculture believes in the wanton or willful destruction of any food supply.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I should not want such an idea to be spread throughout the United States either, because I am a very ardent admirer of Secretary Anderson.

I also ask unanimous consent that the bill may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion the bill should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, inasmuch as it provides a penalty for the destruction of food.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 1329) to prohibit the destruction of food by Government agencies, introduced by Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person employed by the United States who, in the course of such employment and for the purpose of supporting or increasing prices, limiting the quantity of any commodity available for market, or disposing of a surplus, shall destroy or abandon food, render food unfit for use or consumption, or cause food to be destroyed or abandoned or rendered unfit for use or consumption shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both. As used herein "food" means any commodity used for food or drink for man or other animal, or used as a component of any such food or drink.

SHORTAGE OF NATURAL GAS

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, in view of several very important recent developments in the field of natural gas, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD an editorial from the Pittsburgh Press, a Scripps-Howard newspaper, of May 14, 1947, which goes right to the heart of a very vital aspect of our national economy.

The Federal Power Commission will soon be called upon to rule on the final use of the Big Inch and Little Big Inch pipe lines. As I have frequently stated on the floor of the Senate, Mr. President, I am sure the Federal Power Commission will agree that at this time, when the supply of natural gas in interstate transport is so short, we cannot allow that urgently needed industrial fuel to be transported into new market areas, when existing traditional markets for that fuel are suffering from a lack of supply.

The editorial, echoing that same belief, states how important it is to the industries of Pittsburgh and to the future of the natural-gas industry itself that the pipe lines be continued in the service in which they are now engaged, namely, the transportation of natural gas to western Pennsylvania, eastern Ohio, and portions of the Middle West which now are dependent upon this source of supply.

So, Mr. President, if the application of the Texas Eastern Transmission Corp. to take that natural gas to the eastern seaboard cities were to be approved, industries in the western portion of my State and in neighboring States to the west and to the south would be forced to shut down next winter because of lack of natural gas, just as many of them had to close down during the past winter.

Mr. President, there now are pending before the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, bills to set aside the authority of the Federal Power Commission to oversee essential phases of natural-gas use and transmission, opening the way for that industry itself to ignore the public interest and the public needs. I shall have more to say about such legislation at a future date, but I now ask that the editorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TIP FOR POWER COMMISSION

The prediction of the Federal Power Commission that next winter's shortage of natural gas will be as bad as last winter's shortage is grim news.

It spells unemployment, lost production, and disruption of normal operations in the Pittsburgh industrial area. It will—if the prediction is right—affect thousands of persons in their homes, jobs, and pocketbooks.

Fortunately, there is a ray of hope in this dark cloud. The announcement came, bear in mind, from the Federal Power Commission.

We're reassured that the Federal Power Commission knows what the score is on natural-gas supply in Pittsburgh and the other industrial areas which depend on it.

The same Federal Power Commission will have to rule on the use to which the Government-built Big Inch pipe lines may be put by their new owners. Under present laws, it can designate the areas to which natural gas supplies can be sent.

The owners, a newly formed Texas company, would like to pipe gas to the eastern seaboard, to which the lines were built. It's unthinkable that the Commission would allow new markets to be opened while established markets are desperate for supplies.

It's even more unthinkable when you know that the Federal Power Commission realizes the needs of the established markets.

There's another piece of reassurance in the announcement. The Commission says the bottleneck in the gas supply is a shortage of steel pipe. Pipe-line companies are clamoring for it, and the mills can't turn it out fast enough to stave off a gas shortage.

We're glad the Commission knows that. It's the best argument we can think of for getting as much gas as possible to the mills of the Pittsburgh area.

Those mills will turn out steel and steel pipe all winter long, if they get the fuel to run on. There will be costly delays if they're forced to shut down.

If the FPC does all it can to assure those mills enough gas, it will hasten the end of the pipe shortage, the gas shortage, the steel shortage, and a lot of other shortages.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be absent from the Senate tomorrow, Friday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, consent is granted.

THE CRITICAL SCHOOL SITUATION

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, the crisis which is shaking the foundation of the public-school system of America today is not simply cause for grave concern, it is cause for genuine alarm.

The number of school children in the United States is on the upgrade; the school system is definitely on the downgrade.

Evidence of the seriousness of this problem continues to pile up.

Teachers are grossly underpaid, their tenure is insecure, their morale is undermined, they are leaving the schoolroom for better jobs, the caliber of teaching is falling off drastically, classrooms are overcrowded, school buildings and equipment are run down and inadequate, and college students are boycotting the teaching profession.

The school situation in the United States is so critical as to constitute a threat to the very cradle of our democracy.

If this problem is not met effectively and promptly our democracy will be weakened at its source and ultimately I fear our way of life will wither on the vine.

The world which our children are facing today is a tremendously complex world. There are serious economic problems and social problems involving class and racial tensions; there is international unrest; and there are many other problems which, if dealt with anywhere near adequately, will require the very best training and education our children can possibly be given. They are not getting this now.

My purpose in speaking today is to bring to the attention of my colleagues some facts and observations which may serve to focus their attention more sharply upon this vital issue, and to arouse a keener awareness of our responsibility in this matter.

The shortage of good teachers is the anemia that is sapping the lifeblood of our public-school system.

This shortage of teachers is traceable primarily to the terribly inadequate pay they receive. Their low salaries are explained largely by insufficient funds for educational purposes.

We have never provided adequately for our school program. The war and its aftermath have simply made more acute a problem of long standing.

Is it any wonder that trained teachers have made a grand exodus from their profession when we realize that bartenders, garbage-truck drivers, and even school janitors and a long list of other untrained, unskilled workers, can make far more money than school teachers—the people who are entrusted with the molding of our children's minds and characters?

The most precious asset this Nation, or any nation, has is its children. To conserve and develop this human resource is the best insurance we can have for the future greatness and security of our Nation.

There are those who protest that we cannot spend the money to modernize our school system. And yet, the people of this Nation last year spent nearly three times as much for liquor as was spent on our public schools.

The Nation's citizens spent more money for tobacco than was spent in educating our children, and we are told the cosmetics bill of Americans is just about equal to the Nation's educational expenditures, which amount to about $3,000,000,000 annually.

Mr. President, what I am trying to emphasize is not that it is wrong to spend money for other things, but rather to call attention to the shamefully low salaries paid our teachers.

This, the richest country in the world, is rapidly falling behind other powers in the proportion of national income devoted to education. We are spending in the United States less than 1.5 percent of our national income for schools. Great Britain spends an estimated 3 percent of its income on education, and the Soviet Union with a keen appreciation of the value of education in a modern world, is reported to be spending about 7.5 percent of its income for educational purposes.

We cannot expect to educate our children at bargain-basement prices without getting bargain-basement quality.

If we are to meet the growing demand for schooling in the United States, the sums appropriated for public schools should be tripled, according to a recent report by the American Association of School Administrators. This same association reports also that the number of teachers now serving American schools should be doubled, if the demand is to be met.

The 13,000,000 babies born in the 5 years after America entered World War II were 4,000,000 more than had been predicted by the population experts. The elementary schools are already beginning to feel the impact of this high birth rate; the high schools will begin to feel it by 1953.

But what is happening to our supply of teachers, a supply that is already grossly inadequate to meet current demand? It is rapidly diminishing. Since 1940, more than 350,000 teachers have said good-by to the school room. This is at the rate of about seventy-five thousand a year. It is predicted that another seventy-five thousand are quitting their teaching jobs this year. It is important to note that the three hundred and fifty thousand I have referred to are over and above the eighty-five thousand annually who normally leave the profession. In other words, today's turn-over in the teaching profession is about 20 percent, as against a normal of 10 percent, or twice the turn-over that existed before the war.

To add to the seriousness of this exodus of teachers from the schools, the new supply of teachers is drying up at the source. An unprecedentedly small number of students are preparing to teach. In 1920, for example, 22 percent of all college students attended teachers' colleges, whereas today only 7 percent attend.

Adding to the seriousness of that alarming situation is the fact that an overwhelming proportion of those who go to teachers' colleges do not plan to teach; they are going there because they can get in—other schools are so crowded. Less than one-third of those attending teachers' colleges are preparing to teach.

Let me give an example of what I am talking about: It was recently reported to me that a well-known State teachers' college had graduated 60 seniors. Of those 60 members of the graduating class, only 1, please note that figure, 1 only was headed for the field of education.

I regret to report that the situation to which I refer is peculiar neither to that school nor that State.

The shortage of school teachers has inevitably led to serious impairment of the caliber of teaching. One out of seven teachers has an emergency or substandard certificate. Approximately 60,000 teachers in the United States have a high school education or less. In some cases grade school teachers are teaching several grades above the grade which they themselves completed as students.

I want to make it clear, Mr. President, that I appreciate the efforts of these emergency teachers. Their public spirit is admirable, and I am sure they are doing the best they can. But I submit, without casting any aspersions whatever upon them personally, that substandard teaching qualifications are not enough in this day and age.

Only fully trained lawyers who have passed the bar are permitted to handle our litigation. Only fully trained physicians are permitted to attend us when we are sick. Only fully trained veterinarians are permitted to doctor our animals when they are ailing. Yet we are so short of teachers that we must accept for the instruction of our children those who fall far short of the fully trained mark. This is not fair to the children of America.

So much is at stake here, Mr. President. The welfare of the Nation as a whole, as well as the welfare of the individuals who make up the Nation, is at stake.

A primary requirement for a strong, dynamic democracy is an enlightened citizenry. Education is the means to enlightenment. The public schools of America are the keystone of our educational arch.

The demands of today require that our citizens achieve the utmost ability in the exercise of the skills of democratic procedures and processes. The kind of schools we have today will determine the kind of citizens and the kind of democracy we will have tomorrow. Nineteenth century education cannot meet the needs of an atomic-energy age.

With reference to the individual's stake in education, we should not lose sight of the fact that education is the most permanent and the most valuable asset any person can possess. It cannot be lost in times of adversity. It also offers the one best hope that underprivileged children and children of minority groups have for rising from the ranks and scaling the ladder of opportunity in America.

The individual has a further stake in education because, in the economic realm, education pays dividends. Reports of the Committee on Education of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States show clearly the close relationship between education and the earning power of the individual. These reports show that among wage and salary workers, the higher incomes generally are received by persons of higher education. Persons whose education is limited to the grade-school level are found to predominate in the lower income brackets. The percentage of those attaining the high-school educational level rises up to a certain income figure, around $3,000, and then begins to fall off. In the big money brackets, those with higher education hold a decided percentage advantage. It is clear, therefore, that education at the elementary-secondary-school level is the stepping stone or foundation for economic success.

Mr. President, my remarks thus far have been devoted primarily to a discussion of the importance of education in the life of our people and of the serious situation confronting our public schools. The question that logically presents itself now is: What can be done about this critical school problem? The first step obviously is to find some way to provide more money for the elementary and secondary schools of the United States. State and local units have not been successful in meeting this problem. The time has come when the Federal Government must assume a rightful responsibility in this field. We might as well face the issue squarely and forthrightly. The price of failure to assume this responsibility will be far more costly to the future welfare of our country than will be the cost in dollars and cents if we act now.

I think it is an entirely sound procedure to shift a portion of the tax load for the support of education from the shoulders of the real-estate owner in each local district, where it now rests far too heavily, to the shoulders of all who contribute through direct or indirect taxes to the Federal Treasury.

Education is no longer, if it ever was, a local problem. We are a roving people in the United States. We move around plenty, even though we do not like to be pushed around. Sixty percent of our people are not living in the States where they were born. So an uneducated person from one State may become a drag on progress in another State. Illiteracy is no respecter of State lines. In the last war one and three-quarter million men fell short of the Army's minimum standards of a fourth-grade education. That illiteracy was not a State or local problem; it was a national one.

Moreover, in a nearby camp, not far from Washington, where the Army undertook to teach grown men to read and write so that they could fulfill some useful role in the service, this rudimentary training cost $175 a month. They could have received that instruction in youth for $100 a year. Aside from the increased cost of teaching adult Army recruits the modern equivalent of the three Rs, their usefulness to their country was impaired by lack of education.

Now, getting back to the question of Federal aid, Mr. President, I am aware of the expressed concern of some that Federal aid might mean Federal domination. It is too late to enter into debate on that question now. There are too many examples of Federal aid that does not mean domination. Take, for example, the case of the State land-grant colleges. For close to 100 years these colleges have been receiving Federal grants-in-aid, first in the form of land and subsequently in the form of money. Federal control has not cast any sinister shadow upon this Federal grant. The same can be said with regard to Federal aid to States in connection with agricultural Extension Service programs and vocational education programs in high schools.

There is this very interesting point in connection with the question of the Federal Government subsidizing education: It seems that certain private industry groups do not fear Federal control if they can get Federal subsidies. At least, they were willing to accept Federal subsidization last year to the tune of more than a billion dollars.

I am convinced that legislation can be worked out whereby the Federal Government can aid elementary and secondary schools without the National Government exercising any semblance of control over the public schools. Bills designed to attain this objective have been introduced in the Eightieth Congress. I shall not take the time of the Senate today to discuss any specific legislation in this field. The hearings on the bills have been held. The subcommittee is now studying the evidence presented, with a view to preparing a bill for presentation to this body.

Mr. President, before I close, I should like to refer to a very noteworthy article which appeared in the New York Times of February 10, 1947, under the heading, "Teacher shortage imperils our public-school system." I realize that this article has been quoted time and time again, but I do not think that we can bring home to our people too often the facts which it presents.

Among the summary points emphasized by Mr. Benjamin Fine in that article based on a New York Times survey, are:

One hundred and twenty-five thousand teachers are serving on an emergency or substandard certificate.

Classroom teachers get an average of $37 a week today.

Two hundred thousand get less than $25 weekly.

Veterans do not want to prepare to teach. Only 20,000 of the 1,000,000 veterans in American colleges and universities are in teachers' colleges. And, as I have said, a good number of those are in teachers' colleges, simply because they could not obtain admission anywhere else. They have no idea of teaching after they leave college.

Six thousand schools will be closed because of lack of teachers; 75,000 children will have no schooling during the year, for that reason.

Two million children will suffer a major impairment in their schooling because of unqualified teachers.

Five million children will receive an inferior education this year because of the inadequate teacher supply.

Only 50 percent of the teachers employed in 1940–41 are still teaching today.

Appalling educational inequalities exist throughout the Nation.

Top schools spend $6,000 per classroom unit, bottom ones spend $100. The national average is $1,600.

School buildings are in a deplorable state all over the Nation.

Nearly $5,000,000,000 will be needed to bring the educational plants into good condition.

Fifty-six percent of the teachers of this country do not have tenure protection.

The morale of the teachers has dropped to a new low.

That ends the excerpts from the New York Times.

With reference to the morale of teachers, is it any wonder that morale is low, the way we have neglected the welfare of the teacher and looked down on the teaching profession? Teachers are being made to feel that they are something less than top-grade people. On top of that, their personal affairs are being pried into with unmitigated, and often malicious, curiosity. Their community life is all too often restricted by fear of unwarranted and unreasonable gossip and criticism. The unfair discipline that has been imposed upon the lives of public-school teachers, coupled with the low salaries they receive, has shattered their morale and is causing them to revolt. Teacher strikes are the latest manifestations of this revolt. The nature of their calling requires that teachers be patient people. But their patience is running out. They traditionally have borne their burdens and maintained a commendable respect for authority. But the provocation to rise up against their unhappy lot has been so flagrant that some of them are unable to endure it longer.

Mr. President, I hope the Congress may be able to approve a program which will provide the school teachers of America with some of the financial support they need as the first major step toward boosting their sagging morale. I hope Congress will give its approval to a measure of this kind before taking the summer recess.

My main concern is that in dealing with this problem we deal with it positively and adequately. We must not deal with education as a relief problem. We should regard it as a national responsibility and vital to our national security. If we as a nation continue to sow the wind of neglect and inaction concerning our schools, we shall reap the whirlwind of chaos and regret. The teachers of the United States deserve our support; the children of America need it, and the welfare of the Nation demands it.

ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSIONS AND RUSSIA

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to read for the RECORD a news article taken from the Washington Times-Herald of today respecting an occurrence which took place in the proceedings of the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission yesterday. It seems that the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission is doing what I said would probably be done by the United States Atomic Energy Commission which was appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate not long ago; namely, that it would give Russia aid wherever and whenever and in what measure it could whenever the opportunity presented itself. At Lake Success yesterday the Russian delegates had their first semblance of a victory in the proceedings which took place there. A great feat was performed. Senators who voted for the confirmation of Mr. Lilienthal and the members of the American Commission on the ground that they would be looking after America's interest should begin to take heart when they contemplate what occurred there. If, as I suggested may prove to be the case, our own Commission should also contribute to the Russian victory, a number of my associates in the Senate who voted to confirm certain nominations might consider themselves open to congratulations.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to read the article:

MINOR VICTORY IN UNITED NATIONS BATTLE WON BY RUSSIA

LAKE SUCCESS, N. Y., May 21.—Russia won a minor moral victory today when members of the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission agreed in principle that the proposed world atomic-control agency should be established within the framework of the United Nations Security Council.

The agreement left unsettled the basic disagreement over Russia's insistence on retaining the big power veto over atomic punishment, and it had no effect on the rest of the issues which separated the Russians and the Western Powers from agreement on global atomic-control machinery.

It gave a psychological lift to the bogged-down atomic negotiations, however. It was the first time Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Gromyko has been able to win a change in the wording of the American atomic proposals adopted by the Atomic Commission months ago over Russian objections.

A possible hitch in the barely started UN negotiations on disarmament developed later in the day when Russia and the United States submitted conflicting work plans at a private meeting of Big Five delegates. The Big Five are supposed to agree on a plan of work for the full Commission.

Gromyko, who flits from one important committee to another as Russia's chief UN commissioner on conventional armaments, must keep in mind the twin problem of prohibiting atomic weapons. Americans shied away from even the mention of atomic control in the Disarmament Commission, remembering the tough fight they encountered in putting down Gromyko's apparent attempt to lump atomic and disarmament negotiations into one earlier this year.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I submit to my able colleague from Tennessee that the Commission referred to in the article is in no sense related to the Commission which the Senate confirmed a short time ago on which Mr. Lilienthal and the other members were up for confirmation, and whose appointments were to the Atomic Energy Commission. The Commission to which the Senator refers and to which the article refers is the United Nations Commission, and neither Mr. Lilienthal nor any of the other members of the Atomic Energy Commission are members of that Commission.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that, but I was drawing a parallel, and I have not the slightest doubt that the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission and the United States Atomic Energy Commission, presided over by Mr. Lilienthal, are working in closest and most congenial harmony, and other victories will doubtless accrue to Russia from the Commission which the Senator from California made such a gallant fight to have confirmed, a Commission so very friendly to Russia and to the things Russia stands for.

I read in the newspapers this morning that on the 2d of June Mr. Lilienthal will address the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission at Lake Success, N. Y. I am sure that he will rise to the occasion and give Russia further encouragement.

COMPLETION OF VETERANS' TEMPORARY REUSE HOUSING PROGRAM

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGRATH in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 854) to amend section 502 (a) of the act entitled "An act to expedite the provisions of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes," which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 502 (a) of the act entitled "An act to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes," approved October 14, 1940, as amended (42 U. S. C. 1572 (a)), is amended by striking out "$410,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$445,500,000."

SEC. 2. That the additional funds herein authorized shall be available to carry out the purposes of sections 501, 502, and 503 of said act of October 14, 1940, as amended, but shall be available only for necessary expenses in (1) completing the provision of temporary housing for which a contract in writing with any educational institution, State or political subdivision thereof, local public agency, or nonprofit organization had been made prior to the enactment hereof pursuant to title V of said act of October 14, 1940, as amended: Provided, That such additional funds shall not be available for completing suspended units with respect to which, prior to April 1, 1947, no expenditures were made by the Administrator or the only expenditures made by the Administrator were for dismantling or dismantling and transportation, and (2) reimbursing any such educational institution, State or political subdivision thereof, local public agency, or nonprofit organization (a) for funds expended by it in completing any such temporary housing (exclusive of the costs of site acquisition and preparation, or the installation of streets and utility mains), or (b) for the cost of utility and other work in connection with any such temporary housing performed by it for the Administrator on a reimbursable basis pursuant to section 502 (d) of said act of October 14, 1940, as amended, and (3) making payment, to such educational institutions, States or political subdivisions thereof, local public agencies and nonprofit organizations of amounts equal to actual expenditures made by them prior to April 1, 1947, for costs of site acquisition and preparation, or installation of streets and utility mains, with respect to suspended units referred to in the proviso in clause (1) above.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

CONTROL OF PISTOLS AND OTHER DANGEROUS WEAPONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. BUCK. Mr. President, when the calendar was recently called, House bill 493, Calendar No. 150, was passed over. If I am not out of order in doing so, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 493, which is commonly known as the gun-toting bill in the District of Columbia. It provides that in searching for weapons a police officer shall have the right to make an arrest without a warrant. When the bill was reached on the call of the calendar it was objected to by the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. COOPER]. He is present today. I ask him if he still objects.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COOPER. I inquire if the request of the Senator is directed toward consideration and passage of the bill.

Mr. BUCK. That is my purpose.

Mr. COOPER. I have no objection to its consideration, but I wish to speak on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Delaware for the present consideration of House bill 493, without displacing the unfinished business?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 493) to amend section 4 of the act entitled "An act to control the possession, sale, transfer, and use of pistols and other dangerous weapons in the District of Columbia," approved July 8, 1932 (sec. 22, 3204 D. C. Code, 1940 ed.).

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, on its face the bill appears to be very simple; and upon a first reading probably everyone would say that it should be passed. If, however, we analyze the bill and the applicable laws of the District of Columbia, and if we consider its implications, I do not believe that many who give the bill such analysis and consideration would approve it. I object to its passage because I think it is another example of the use of an expedient to meet an emergency, which ultimately strikes at more fundamental rights than those the expedient aims to protect.

I oppose the bill because it is a threat to one of the fundamental rights guaranteed in the Bill of Rights of the Federal Constitution, and in the constitution of practically every State in the Union.

Specifically, the bill affects the right of privacy preserved by the fourth amendment, the right of an individual to be secure in his person and effects, and in his house, against unreasonable search and seizure.

I have sympathy with the objectives which give rise to the introduction of the bill. It is my understanding that within recent months in the District of Columbia a great many crimes have been committed with deadly weapons. There have been murders. As a result, the police say that they are unable to cope with the situation. Private citizens are asking for aid.

Mr. President, I shall not leave the subject without saying that I believe that measures should be taken to correct the situation, and without suggesting such measures, but, I believe that the end can be accomplished and law and order established without attacking and threatening a fundamental right which, in its larger considerations, is more important than the temporary situation.

It may be said by some that the bill affects only the District of Columbia, and that therefore it is not a matter of great importance or, at least, of importance to those who live in other places. I think it is important because it is the Congress of the United States which is speaking. I think it is important, because if the Congress enacts this bill, we lay down a precedent for legislatures throughout the country.

The laws in the District of Columbia with respect to concealed weapons are, briefly, as follows:

First, it is illegal for an individual or a corporation or other entity to sell weapons without a permit to do so.

Second, it is illegal for anyone to purchase a weapon without first having obtained a permit from the proper authority of the District of Columbia.

Third, it is illegal for anyone to have in his possession a deadly weapon upon which the identification marks have been changed or altered.

Finally, it is illegal for anyone to carry upon his person, openly or concealed, a deadly weapon, without a permit, except upon his lands or premises. The offense of carrying a concealed weapon is denounced as a misdemeanor.

The pending bill gives to the police the right to arrest for the last-named offense, as if it were a felony, that is, upon probable cause.

When we use the term "on his person" we are speaking not alone of the physical person. The decisions of the courts are to the effect that "on his person" includes everything which is within reasonable proximity or which is reasonably accessible. A bag which one may be carrying, a pocketbook, the pockets and glove compartment in one's automobile may be "on the person"; and under the recent decision of the Supreme Court, in the case of the United States against Harris, I believe it might be extended to include the entire automobile. So to carry a concealed weapon upon one's person means not only a weapon carried upon the physical person, but it includes articles in reasonable proximity and reasonably accessible. This should emphasize the wide powers proposed by the pending bill.

The Supreme Court has spoken many times upon this question. It has been held that no police officer may arrest except by warrant, or unless a misdemeanor is being committed in his presence, or unless he has reasonable grounds to believe that a felony has been committed. Generally, no police officer can make a search unless he makes a legal arrest in the manner I have indicated; and until the decision in the case of United States against Harris, of which I have spoken, he could search only the person arrested and premises in reasonable proximity, unless a search warrant had been issued by a magistrate upon affidavit, showing probable cause for its issuance.

What are the present safeguards, and what are the rights of a police officer in the District of Columbia? If he sees a person with a pistol upon him, he has a right to arrest. The other day I read an editorial in one of the newspapers to the effect that if a police officer could see the outlines of a pistol he would have no power to make an arrest. I disagree with the statement. If he saw the outlines of a pistol he would know that an offense was being committed in his presence, and he should have authority to make an arrest.

In the final analysis the bill gives a police officer the right to arrest when he does not know that an offense is being committed, when he sees no offense and when no affidavit has been made that an offense has been committed. Ipso facto, it gives him the right of search when he has no right to arrest, and without a search warrant. In other words, it is a return to the exploratory search, the search without warrant, and the general search warrant, which was denied in this country as early as the Massachusetts constitution, and has been made illegal by the provisions of the constitution of every State in the Union, and by the Constitution of the United States. The last State to adopt such a provision in its constitution was the State of New York, which acted as late as 1938. It saw the necessity for such a provision, and it placed in its constitution a prohibition against unreasonable search or seizure.

If this offense is of such importance—and I believe it is of such importance—that it demands a search without warrant, then the Congress should make the carrying of concealed weapons a felony in the District of Columbia.

It may be said that in this respect there is no difference between making a search upon probable cause without a warrant legal for a felony and not for a misdemeanor. I say that there is a great difference because when the legislative body denominates an offense as a felony there is behind its action the judgment of the people and the judgment of the legislature that the offense is of sufficient importance to justify the invasion of privacy, and there is imposed severe punishment which will deter the crime and make less frequent the invasion of privacy. If permitted for one misdemeanor, it sets a precedent for extending the broad power to other misdemeanors. We do not know whether the concealed-weapon law has been enforced in the District of Columbia.

I would recommend, I would advise, I would introduce, and I would support a bill to make the carrying of weapons in the District of Columbia a felony, and then, upon reasonable grounds, a police officer could search without a warrant. There is no reason why anyone except the police and those with permits should carry a weapon in the District.

Mr. President, I do not want to devote too much time to this subject, but I believe it is important, and for that reason I have spoken longer, perhaps, than I should have spoken.

I should like to say that when we step aside from the Constitution upon the ground of expediency or emergency history indicates that the power will be directed against those who are least able to protect themselves and to defend themselves against encroachments of the law. Some persons might say, "What difference does it make? I will not be searched without a warrant; I will not be searched unless there are reasonable grounds upon which to do so." But I should like to call to the attention of this body that the Bill of Rights of the Constitution protects within its terms not only those who are law abiding but as well the lawless. It protects every person. Who has the right to determine who is law abiding and who is lawless?

If we pass this bill, it will be found, I believe, that no matter how desirous police officers may be of enforcing the law, and I speak with respect for them, the same unhappy results found under similar laws will obtain, resulting in disrespect for law such as under the Volstead Act. The power will be more strictly enforced against those who cannot raise their voices to protect themselves, perhaps more strictly against the colored citizens of the District. Such deviations from fundamental rights are not the incidents of our law. They are found when martial law has been invoked. We have only to look back through our history, and recently to Hawaii, to see how much the people of this country resent martial law. It is an incident of the military government of defeated peoples, and is used in the occupied territories of Germany, Austria, and Japan. I read a few days ago that the military governor of one of the towns of Germany said they would search houses for food and, of course, without warrant. They have that power in occupied territories. It has been used in Palestine. It was the great power of the rulers of the totalitarian countries. Yet today, Congress is being asked to pass a bill which imposes this device used in systems of force upon people of the District of Columbia.

I wish that the Members of the Congress would read in the Appendix of a recent issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the eloquent dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Frankfurter in the case of the United States of America against George Harris. There are many fine statements in his dissenting opinion, and also in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Murphy, and of Mr. Justice Jackson, and in the majority opinion of Chief Justice Vinson, emphasizing again and again the value of the fundamental right of privacy.

A few days later the Supreme Court rendered decision in a case in which the freedom of the press was at issue, which has been widely applauded. I would like to remind those who applaud that the right of privacy is guaranteed in the Bill of Rights as is freedom of the press, freedom of religion, and freedom of assembly.

So I ask the Members of the Senate to consider this matter very seriously. If we make the carrying of concealed weapons a felony police officers can search without a warrant; but do not create the precedent of giving police officers the right to search without a warrant in case of a misdemeanor.

I appreciate the indulgence of the Senate in permitting me to extend my remarks upon the subject to some length, but I think it is a matter of great importance. I am afraid that it will be passed over lightly and that after we have voted upon it we will regret the step we have taken.

I wish to close by reading from the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Murphy in the case of United States against Harris, to which I have referred.

He said:

> But freedom from unreasonable search and seizure is one of the cardinal rights of free men under our Constitution. That freedom belongs to all men, including those who may be guilty of some crime. The public policy underlying the constitutional guaranty of that freedom is so great as to outweigh the desirability of convicting those whose crime has been revealed through an unlawful invasion of their right to privacy. Lawless methods of law enforcement are frequently effective in uncovering crime, especially where tyranny reigns, but they are not to be countenanced under our form of government. It is not a novel principle of our constitutional system that a few criminals should go free rather than that the freedom and liberty of all citizens be jeopardized.

In the opinion he quoted the words of the great Judge Learned Hand:

> If the prosecution of crime is to be conducted with so little regard for that protection which centuries of English law have given to the individual, we are indeed at the dawn of a new era; and much that we have deemed vital to our liberties is a delusion.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield.

Mr. BUCK. I am not clear about it, but do I correctly understand the Senator to say that he withdraws his objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. COOPER. Is the Senator about to ask for passage of the bill with only seven or eight Senators present?

Mr. BUCK. It can be automatically passed if the Senator withdraws his objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill, and it will then be voted on unless there be further debate.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator will yield to me for a question or two and withhold his request for a quorum call?

Mr. COOPER. Yes.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Under the law of the District of Columbia do I correctly understand that the possession of a pistol or deadly weapon concealed on the person is a misdemeanor only?

Mr. COOPER. It is only a misdemeanor.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Is it confined to the concealment of the weapon itself which is carried on the person?

Mr. COOPER. No. The law provides that if a weapon is carried either openly or concealed it is an offense. It is made a misdemeanor.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Does it extend to shotguns and rifles?

Mr. COOPER. I am not certain, but I believe there are certain provisions which apply to sawed-off shotguns.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. And to rifles which have barrels less than 18 inches in length?

Mr. COOPER. I think there is a limitation on the length of the barrel.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. What is the provision by which a citizen who has a legitimate reason for carrying a pistol or a weapon of that kind may secure authority to do so? Is there a provision granting a permit in such a case?

Mr. COOPER. Yes. I believe a person may apply to the Superintendent of Police, and, upon a proper showing, may be given a license to carry a concealed weapon.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Does the bill change that situation in any way?

Mr. COOPER. No. A police officer has the right to search upon probable cause.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. If the officer searches and finds no weapon is he still immune from any liability?

Mr. COOPER. If he can show it was done on probable cause. Who, though, can disprove it was on probable cause?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, the point I am trying to make clear, if the Senator will yield further, is this: I have great sympathy with the Senator's argument as to the care with which we should approach any change in the search and seizure principle under which we have operated so fundamentally for a great many years. Certainly I do not want to give police officers or law-enforcement officers any arbitrary right to seize people willy-nilly and search them. That is the procedure against which our forefathers fought 150 years ago. But what fundamental difference is there, if the law would permit the search of an individual upon probable cause, whether the act is denominated a felony or a misdemeanor? In other words, the search would be bottomed upon probable cause that the individual was carrying a concealed weapon. What actual difference does it make on the question of principle whether it be denominated a felony or a misdemeanor? I think it should be a felony.

Mr. COOPER. I can answer the Senator by saying that the only difference is one of principle. Throughout the whole history of our constitutional government the only offense which the people themselves said was important enough to permit a search without a warrant was a felony. If we say that search without a warrant should be permitted for a misdemeanor we are eliminating that principle, and creating a bad precedent.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I did not mean to argue the legal principles involved, but there is a great divergence or difference of opinion in various jurisdictions throughout the country as to the limitations of a misdemeanor and a felony. Some States define as felonies certain acts which other States classify as misdemeanors; and States very often vacillate between calling an offense a felony or a misdemeanor, insofar as prescribing the punishment for various violations is concerned. There is a twilight zone between a felony and a misdemeanor which sometimes is very difficult to understand.

But I wish to ask the Senator whether the bill contains any provision to the effect that if I own a shotgun or a rifle or a pistol and have it in my house, I will no longer be able to have it there or will be regarded as violating the law if I do not do something other than what I am doing today.

Mr. COOPER. No; if the Senator has a license to have a firearm in his possession or if it is on his premises, there will be no offense. But I should like to call attention to a matter which I have not previously mentioned, namely, that under the law, if a police officer has reasonable grounds for the suspicion or belief that the Senator has a pistol on his person, then, in pursuit of the Senator, the police officer could enter the Senator's house, under the doctrine of "hot pursuit," and once entering the house, and arresting the Senator, under the decision in the case of Harris against United States, the officer could search the entire house.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Under the new philosophy adopted by the courts, evidence seized collaterally in connection with a search can be used in a prosecution, even though such evidence is obtained on the basis of probable cause, regardless of whether a search warrant was issued for that purpose; is that correct?

Mr. COOPER. Yes.

Mr. President, I should like to say further that if a man walking down one of the streets of Washington—someone who would not be able to protest so loudly or with so much influence as the Senator could—was suspected by a police officer of having a pistol on his person, and if that man then entered his home, under the provisions of this bill the officer could follow him into his home in pursuit, and then, under the doctrine of search and seizure as laid down several weeks ago in the case of Harris against United States, the officer could search the entire home. In the Harris case, the officers stayed in the home 5 hours, and ransacked and tore up the entire home. So I say that the officer could stay in that home; and if he found there anything which in itself was criminal, the owner of the home could be prosecuted for that, and the original purpose of entering the home on the basis of the suspicion or belief that the man had a pistol on his person could be entirely forgotten or ignored.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I say to the Senator from Kentucky that I think he has raised a most ominous point. I think a most important fundamental principle is involved, if the Senator is correct in his statement of what could be done under the provisions of this measure.

Mr. COOPER. I am absolutely sure that what I have stated could be done under the provisions of the bill. I have talked to several Senators who are lawyers, and I believe they agree with me about the matter. I would hate to have this bill voted on unless a quorum call was first had.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. COOPER. I yield.

Mr. BUCK. I assume that the Senator from Kentucky objects to the passage of the bill at this time. If he does, I shall withdraw my request.

Mr. COOPER. I shall answer in this way, because I do not wish to say something which will apparently be contradictory of what I have said before: The other day the Senator asked whether I would object when the bill was brought up again. I told him that I would not object to its consideration; but if we are going to vote upon it, I should like to have a quorum call and I should like to be heard upon the bill, and I should like to let the other Members of the Senate know something about its implications.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. President, I withdraw my request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's request for present consideration of the bill is withdrawn.

REDUCTION OF INDIVIDUAL INCOME TAX PAYMENTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce individual income-tax payments.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, on a number of occasions, I have pointed out the extreme importance of beginning to make some substantial payment on our gigantic national debt. I have emphasized my opinion that it was even more important to do that than to give the taxpayer some of the tax relief he so thoroughly deserves. A few months ago, I even went so far as to say that I believed that tax relief should be deferred for another year, because of the tremendous cost of the 1948 government and the great revenues we need to support it.

Today, however, I feel fully justified in supporting the measure we have before us, which suggests an immediate reduction in taxes. In recent months, with the high level of national income payments we have been experiencing, the revenue picture has improved to a marked extent. At the same time, this Congress is beginning to achieve real results in cutting out the waste in the budget estimates.

In other words, I feel that we have now reached the point where we do not have to choose between debt reduction and tax reduction. I think we can have both. This bill, in effect, provides for both.

On the side of tax reduction, it reduces taxes by an estimated amount of $3,200,000,000 for the fiscal year 1948 alone. It will give substantial relief to every individual income-tax payer. In the case of the vast majority of such taxpayers, this relief will amount to from 20 to 30 percent. We have also made provision to give additional relief to our citizens aged 65 and older.

Mr. President, in recent weeks we have been hearing a great deal of talk about the necessity of a decline in the cost of living. Strangely little has been said by administration spokesmen about the importance of a decline in one major item in the cost of living, i. e., the cost of Government. That is one cost that has been inflated out of all reason. It has not increased a mere 50 or 75 percent, like many prices. The Federal tax burden on the average man of moderate income has increased 5, 10, or 20 times over the prewar level. When we enact this bill we are not merely talking about the cost of living in this modern world, we are doing something about it.

At the same time we expect to have a substantial surplus to apply against our mammoth debt. It is difficult to say exactly how much debt reduction will be possible during the next fiscal year. So much depends on the level of income payments throughout the Nation, as well as on the extent to which Government spending can be reduced. However, a study of the revenue figures proves conclusively that we shall be able to reduce the debt to a very considerable extent next year.

At the present time the level of income payments is running at a rate of better than a hundred and seventy-six billions a year. If this level of income payments continues through next year we shall have Federal revenues of $39,500,000,000. This Congress has already made commendable progress in cutting down the excessive cost of Government. Five major appropriation bills have been reported and acted on by the other body, and the savings in those five bills already amount to almost $2,000,000,000. In the half dozen major appropriation bills still to come probably additional savings will be achieved, to bring the total reductions to approximately the $4,500,000,000 voted by the Senate.

Under these circumstances, even after enactment of the pending bill, we might be able to reduce the debt by as much as $6,500,000,000 during the fiscal year 1948. If accomplished, that should be pleasing to everyone.

For that reason, I have difficulty in understanding the proposal to put off consideration of the bill. The opposition speaks of the danger that we shall not achieve our economy goal. The five 1948 supply bills already acted upon by the House, and the one already acted on by the Senate, are clear proof of the determination of the majority party in this Congress. I can understand why many adherents of the New Deal do not wish to reduce taxes. They want us to continue to tax, so that they can continue to spend. That is not the view of the majority.

Even based on those reductions already achieved by the other body to date, we shall have over $4,000,000,000 to apply on the debt after enactment of the pending bill, assuming our national income continues at the present level. If we delay consideration of this measure until the last minute, we shall make it doubly difficult to put into effect in time the administrative changes provided for in the measure. Almost every business firm in the country will have to change its schedule of tax deductions withheld from pay checks. The Government will have to do the same. This cannot be done in a few days. Forms and charts have to be prepared and widely distributed. I believe we have already waited until the last hour on this matter. We have no right to thrust an unreasonable administrative burden on pay roll offices throughout the country, both Government and private.

Mr. President, I hope we shall proceed to the consideration of the pending bill promptly, and I hope we enact it as presented by the Finance Committee. The war has been over almost 2 years, yet tax rates on the poor man still amount to almost 20 percent of his income, above the very small personal exemption. Tax rates on the larger incomes are almost confiscatory. Both categories deserve tax relief, and both will secure it under this bill.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, as a preliminary to a request that the Senate proceed to consider bills on the calendar to which there is no objection, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Hatch	Myers

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of bills on the calendar to which there is no objection, beginning with Calendar No. 156, at which point we ended consideration of bills at the last call of the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will proceed to state the measures on the calendar, beginning with Calendar No. 156.

JOHN H. GRADWELL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 470) for the relief of John H. Gradwell, which has been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment, on page 1, in line 6, after the words "the sum of", to strike out "$351.30" and to insert "$211.30", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John H. Gradwell, of Meriden, Conn., the sum of $211.30 in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for compensation for damage to his automobile resulting from a collision with an Army vehicle in Hamden, Conn., on January 4, 1943: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT C. BIRKES

The bill (S. 561) for the relief of Robert C. Birkes was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Robert C. Birkes, of Portland, Oreg., a former member of the Navy, the sum of $98, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for payment of the amount which the Price Administrator recovered from the former landlord of the said Robert C. Birkes because of overcharges for rent for the premises at 30 Linnaean Street, Cambridge, Mass., during the period March 1, 1945, to July 31, 1945; recovery of such sum by the said Robert C. Birkes having been prevented by the fact that he was ordered by the Navy to make a change of station soon after the overcharge was determined by the Office of Price Administration: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

WHITE HOUSE POLICE FORCE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1022) to authorize an adequate White House Police force, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Works, with an amendment on page 2, line 3, after the words "as may be necessary", to insert "but not exceeding 110 in number", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (a) of section 2 of the act entitled "An act to create the White House Police force, and for other purposes," approved September 14, 1922 (42 Stat. 841, as amended; U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 3, sec. 62), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. (a) The White House Police force shall consist of such number of officers, with grades corresponding to similar officers of the Metropolitan Police force, and of such number of privates, with grade corresponding to that of private of the highest grade in the Metropolitan Police force, as may be necessary, but not exceeding 110 in number. Members of the White House Police shall be appointed from the members of the Metropolitan Police force and the United States Park Police force from lists furnished by the officers in charge of such forces. Vacancies shall be filled in the same manner."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF PROVISIONS OF AGRICULTURAL ACTS TO THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 512) to extend provisions of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act and the Soil Conservation Act to the Virgin Islands, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, with amendments, on page 1, line 9, after the word "area", to strike out the word "to"; on page 1, line 9, after the word "finance", insert a comma; on page 1, line 9, after the word "State", insert a comma; and on page 2, line 23, before the name "Puerto Rico", to strike out "possessions" and insert "possession", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sections of title IV of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, as amended, except insofar as they affect title III of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, as amended, are hereby amended as follows:

(a) Subsection (b) of section 41 is amended to read: "The Secretary may administer his power and duties under this act through such area finance, State, and local offices in the United States and in the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii and in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands as he determines to be necessary: Provided, That existing regional offices shall be liquidated on or before June 30, 1947. The Secretary may authorize one office to serve the area composed of two or more States (Territories or Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands) if he determines that the volume of business in the area is not sufficient to justify separate State offices."

(b) Section 54 is amended to read: "The provisions of this act shall extend to the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii and to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. In the case of Alaska and Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, the term 'county' as used in this act shall be deemed synonymous with 'Territory', or any subdivision thereof as may be designated by the Secretary, and payments under section 33 of this act shall be made to the governor of the Territory or to the fiscal agent of such subdivision."

SEC. 2. Subsection (a) of section 17 of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment

Act (49 Stat. 1151), is amended to read as follows: "This act shall apply to the United States, the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, and the possession of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, and, as used in this act, the term 'State' includes Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands."

SEC. 3. All acts or parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. ELLENDER. The only purpose of the bill is to include the Virgin Islands in the agricultural relief acts. I am sorry the Virgin Islands were omitted from the laws when they were enacted some time ago. That is the sole and only purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 597) to provide for the protection of forests against destructive insects and diseases was announced as next in order.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks for an explanation. There seems to be no explanation forthcoming. Is there objection to the passage of the bill?

Mr. LUCAS. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1081) to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, sodium, potassium, oil, oil shale, gas, and sulfur on lands acquired by the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LUCAS. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1154) to amend the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act of 1946 was announced as next in order.

Mr. LUCAS. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

EMPLOYMENT OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES AS COUNSEL IN PROSECUTING CLAIMS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1073) to extend until June 30, 1949, the period of time during which persons may serve in certain executive departments and agencies without being prohibited from acting as counsel, agent, or attorney for prosecuting claims against the United States by reason of having so served, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (j) of the Renegotiation Act (50 U. S. C., Supp. V, App., sec. 1191 (j)) is amended to read as follows:

"(j) Nothing in sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code (U. S. C., title 18, secs. 198 and 203) or in section 190 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 99) shall be deemed to prevent any person by reason of service in a department or the Board during the period (or a part thereof) beginning May 27, 1940, and ending on June 30, 1949, from acting as counsel, agent, or attorney for prosecuting any claim against the United States: Provided, That such person shall not prosecute any claim against the United States (1) involving any subject matter directly connected with which such person was so employed, or (2) during the period such person is engaged in employment in a department."

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, we have a group of professional men who are on the excess-profits tax counsel of the Bureau of Internal Revenue and who work with the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, helping to expedite excess profits refund problems. They are doing a fine job. They are men who cannot give up their private professional lives. They may have business with the Federal Government. There was a time limitation which exempted them from the operation of the usual Federal rule that a person cannot be a Federal employee and at the same time bring an action against the Government.

The purpose of the bill is to carry forward the exemption for another period, and at the same time, not permit the person affected to sue the Government in matters on which he was employed by the Government.

Mr. FERGUSON. Does the bill apply only to the particular group to whom the Senator refers?

Mr. MILLIKIN. They are the ones we had in mind. It may go somewhat beyond that but subject to the same limitations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FEDERAL COURT BUILDING FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 450) to provide for the acquisition of a site and for the construction, equipment, and furnishing of a building thereon for the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia and the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Works with amendments.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask my colleague a question about the committee's approval of the bill, merely to elicit certain information. As the Senator from Washington knows, there is a crying need throughout the United States for public buildings. I do not know that the need is so great in certain places as it is in others. In my State we are getting along satisfactorily, but Federal buildings for post offices, courts, and other uses, are really needed. In our State we have had an over-all policy, which is probably a wise one, of not embarking on public works at this time, owing to the employment situation. It is thought that public works might well be postponed. I know that in one or two places in the State of Washington, and even in my home town, there is a crying need for public buildings, which should probably receive priority when the public works program is begun. I refer particularly to the need for a post office. I was wondering why an exception was made of the District of Columbia from the general rule applying to the remainder of the country.

Mr. CAIN. I would say to my colleague the senior Senator from Washington that I think we are making no exception in this case. The bill authorizes the appropriation of $400,000 for the drawing of plans and specifications against the day when the Federal building in question can be constructed, but there is no intention through this bill to begin construction at any time in the immediate future, and the Congress itself will determine the date of construction in the future.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I thank my colleague.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair asks the Senator from Washington whether the Senate bill is not identical with House bill 3029, Calendar No. 192.

Mr. CAIN. Yes. It was our intention, Mr. President, to have the House bill substituted for Senate bill 450.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, House bill 3029, Calendar No. 192, will be substituted for Senate bill 450, Calendar No. 165, and will be now considered.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3029) to provide for the acquisition of a site and for preparation of plans and specifications for a courthouse to accommodate the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia and the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Works with amendments on page 3, line 9, after the words "this", to strike out "title" and insert "act"; and on page 4, line 1, after the word "this", to strike out "title" and insert "act."

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 450 will be indefinitely postponed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 28) to supersede the provisions of Reorganization Plan No. 3 of 1946, by reestablishing the offices of registers of land offices, and providing for appointment of the Director and Associate Director of the Bureau of Land Management, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LUCAS. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF THE PHILIPPINE REHABILITATION ACT

The bill (S. 1020) to amend the Philippine Rehabilitation Act of 1946, as amended, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 101 (b) of the Philippine Rehabilitation Act of 1946, as amended, is amended by inserting after the word "employees," the following: "who shall be entitled to accumulate annual leave to the maximum of 90 workdays exclusive of the time actually and necessarily occupied in going to and from the continental United States and such time as may be necessarily occupied in awaiting sailing or flight,".

SEC. 2. Subsection (c) of section 101 of such act, as amended, is amended by inserting after the words "Commonwealth of the Philippines" the following: "(or the Republic of the Philippines)".

SEC. 3. Subsection (a) of section 106 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 106. (a) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amount of $400,000,000 for the purpose of paying compensation to the extent authorized by this title, and of such sum, not to exceed $16,000,000 shall be available to pay the expenses of the Commission. All moneys heretofore or hereinafter appropriated under authority of this title shall remain available until April 30, 1951."

Mr. REVERCOMB subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Senate bill 1020, Calendar No. 167.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill in question was passed.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I ask unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1020) to amend the Philippine Rehabilitation Act of 1946, as amended.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I think the report made by the committee gives all the information I could give. As the distinguished Senator from West Virginia realizes, there was previously appropriated a total sum of $400,000,000, as I recall, to cover war damage in the Philippines. At the time it was passed a provision was made that only 1 percent could be expended for administration.

It has been found necessary to expend for administration considerably more than 1 percent in the settlement of damage claims. As was brought out in the hearings, the expenses incidental to the settlement of an ordinary damage claim are usually between 6 and 8 percent of the amount involved. In this case, the administration proposes to increase the amount allowed for administrative expense to 4 percent as an over-all figure for the total amount of claims. The distinguished Senator from West Virginia is an attorney. Perhaps he has not settled claims of this kind, but undoubtedly he has had to do with the settlement of claims of some sort. I believe he will admit that an administrative cost of 4 percent is a reasonable charge for settlement.

Mr. REVERCOMB. The Senator from West Virginia has not settled any claims in the Philippine Islands. I wanted the record to show that a limit had been placed on the amount that might be used for administrative expenses.

Mr. BUTLER. That is correct. The amount allowed under the original act was 1 percent. It is now proposed to increase it to 4 percent.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I believe the amount involved is $16,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UTILIZATION OF SURPLUS WAR DEPARTMENT OWNED REAL PROPERTY AS NATIONAL CEMETERIES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 272) to provide for the utilization of surplus War Department owned military real property as national cemeteries, when feasible, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 2, line 7, after "cemeteries.", to insert "No national cemetery established pursuant to this act shall have an area in excess of 640 acres."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when the Secretary of War determines that there is need for an additional cemetery or cemeteries for the burial of members of the armed forces of the United States dying in the service or former members whose last discharge therefrom was honorable and certain other persons as provided for by existing law (24 U. S. C. 281), he is authorized to utilize, when practicable, federally owned lands under the jurisdiction of the War Department for military purposes and not needed for such purposes for the establishment thereon of a national cemetery or cemeteries.

SEC. 2. Upon the selection by the Secretary of War of such land, as provided in section 1 hereof, the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to establish thereon national cemeteries and to provide for the care and maintenance of such cemeteries. No national cemetery established pursuant to this act shall have an area in excess of 640 acres.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of War is authorized to prescribe such regulations as he may deem necessary for the administration of this act.

SEC. 4. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry into effect the purposes of this act.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 299) to extend the reclamation laws to the State of Arkansas was announced as next in order.

Mr. ELLENDER. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

W. H. BAKER AND WALTER BAKER

The bill (H. R. 384) for the relief of W. H. Baker and Walter Baker was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISAAC B. JONES

The bill (H. R. 2094) for the relief of Isaac B. Jones was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARION O. CASSADY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 824) for the relief of Marion O. Cassady, which has been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$275.30", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Marion O. Cassady, of Louisville, Ky., a deputy United States marshal in the Western District of Kentucky, the sum of $276.30, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for property damages sustained by him on and about January 3, 1942, while in the discharge of his official duties as a deputy United States marshal: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a disdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. MABEL JONES AND MISS MILDRED WELLS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 116) for the relief of Mrs. Mabel Jones and Miss Mildred Wells, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. Mildred Wells Martin, 1512 Lakeview Street, Camden, S. C., the sum of $4,000, in full settlement of all claims against the United States on account of medical and hospital expenses incurred and loss of earnings and personal injuries sustained by the said Mrs. Mildred Wells Martin on April 23, 1944, when the automobile in which she was riding as a passenger was involved in a collision with a United States Army vehicle on United States Highway No. 521, near Camden, S. C.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "For the relief of Mrs. Mildred Wells Martin."

CONSTRUCTION OF HIGH-SCHOOL BUILDING NEAR ROOSEVELT, UTAH

The bill (S. 805) authorizing an appropriation for the construction, extension, and improvement of a high-school building near Roosevelt, Utah, was announced as next in order.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of order No. 174, which immediately precedes on the calendar Senate bill 805, which has just been called?

Mr. MILLIKIN. The distinguished Senator from Oregon wishes an explanation of Calendar No. 174. That, I understand, is the unfinished business before the Senate, and I hope the Senator does not want an explanation in extenso at this time.

Mr. MORSE. I suggest, Mr. President, that this all goes to show how unsuccessful the Senator from Colorado has thus far been in persuading the Senate with respect to this measure.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, in regard to Senate bill 805, I should like the same sort of explanation I asked my colleague to make of a previous bill dealing with construction of public buildings. I do not see the Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS] present. A different situation may exist with respect to this measure, but in view of the absence of the Senator from Utah, I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. MAGNUSON subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Senate bill 805, Calendar 175.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 805) authorizing an appropriation for the construction, extension, and improvement of a high-school building near Roosevelt, Utah, for the district embracing the east portion of Duchesne County and the west portion of Uintah County.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS] has just explained to me that this is a bill authorizing the construction of an Indian school.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $250,000 for the purpose of cooperating with the school districts in Utah comprising the east portion of Duchesne County and the west portion of Uintah County for the construction, extension, and improvement of a high-school building near Roosevelt, Utah: Provided, That the expenditure of any moneys appropriated hereunder shall be subject to the condition that the school authorities for the said school districts shall take any and all necessary steps, under the laws of the State of Utah, to provide any and all additional funds required to complete the construction, extension, and improvement of the said high-school building, and shall submit proof of compliance with this provision to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs: Provided further, That plans and specifications for the construction, extension, and improvement of the said high-school building shall be furnished by the local or State authorities, without cost to the United States, and submitted to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for approval, before any moneys appropriated hereunder may be expended, and that upon compliance with this provision actual work shall proceed under the direction of such local or State officials: Provided further, That payment for work in place shall be made monthly on vouchers properly certified by local officials of the Indian Service to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, whose determination and approval of the proper amount chargeable to any appropriation made hereunder shall be final and sufficient for such payment thereof: And provided further, That the said high school so constructed, extended, and improved shall be maintained by the said school districts and shall be available to all the Indian children of the said districts on the same terms, as to other children of said school districts.

EASEMENTS IN CERTAIN LANDS

The bill (H. R. 1844) to authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to grant easements in lands belonging to the United States under his supervision and control, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

VETERANS' AFFAIRS OFFICES IN THE PHILIPPINES

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 115) authorizing the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to continue and establish offices in the territory of the Republic of the Philippines was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the authority in section 7 of the World War Veterans' Act, 1924 (43 Stat. 609; 38 U. S. C. 430), and section 101 of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944 (58 Stat. 284; 38 U. S. C. 693a), to establish regional offices, suboffices, contact units, or other subordinate offices may continue to be exercised by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs with respect to territory of the Republic of the Philippines on and after the date of its independence if he deems such offices necessary.

AUTHORITY OF ADMINISTRATOR OF VETERANS' AFFAIRS TO ENTER INTO LEASES

The bill (S. 1135) to extend for 1 year certain provisions of section 100 of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended, relating to the authority of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to enter into leases for periods not exceeding 5 years, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second paragraph of section 100 of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended (38 U. S. C. 693), is hereby amended by deleting "June 30, 1947" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "June 30, 1948."

DESIGNATION OF APRIL 5 OF EACH YEAR AS BOOKER T. WASHINGTON DAY

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 92) designating April 5, 1947, as Booker T. Washington Day, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after "April", to strike out "of 1947" and insert "of each year"; and in line 6, after the word "authorized", to strike out "and requested", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the 5th day of April of each year is hereby designated as Booker T. Washington Day, in commemoration of the birthday of the great educator, and the President of the United States is authorized to issue a proclamation calling upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all Government buildings on such day.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read "Joint resolution designating April 5 of each year as Booker T. Washington Day."

DESIGNATION OF OCTOBER 9 OF EACH YEAR AS LEIF ERIKSON DAY

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 64) authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim the 9th of October of each year as Leif Erikson Day, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized to issue a proclamation designating the 9th day of October of each year as Leif Erikson Day, calling upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all governmental buildings on the 9th of October of each year, and inviting the people of the United States to observe the day in schools and churches or other suitable places with appropriate ceremonies.

DESIGNATION OF SEPTEMBER 17 OF EACH YEAR AS CONSTITUTION DAY

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) designating September 17 of each year as Constitution Day, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, after the word "authorized", to strike out "and requested", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the 17th day of September of each year is hereby designated as Constitution Day, in commemoration of the formation and signing, on September 17, 1787, of the Constitution of the United States, and the President of the United States is authorized to issue annually a proclamation calling upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all Government buildings on such day, and inviting the people of the United States to observe the day in schools and churches, or other suitable places, with appropriate ceremonies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DESIGNATION OF AMERICAN INDIAN DAY—BILL PASSED OVER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 309) designating American Indian Day, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the word "is", to strike out "requested" and insert "authorized", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the fourth Saturday in September of each year is hereby designated and shall hereafter be known as American Indian Day.

SEC. 2. The President is authorized to issue a proclamation calling upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all governmental buildings on such day and inviting the people of the United States to observe such day with appropriate ceremonies as a memorial to the aborigines of this Nation and their contributions to the establishment and maintenance of this Nation.

SEC. 3. The President is also requested to communicate this declaration, by proclamation or otherwise, to the Governors of the several States, and request them to take such action as they may deem advisable in order to bring about observance of such day.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I notice that there are four bills on the calendar designating certain days to be observed in commemoration of persons or events or occasions of one kind or another and to accord them national recognition. I am sure the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] has seen to it that two celebrations will not be held on the same calendar day.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, if any man is capable of celebrating twice on the same day, we have no objection to his doing so. But I will say that none of these bills designate the days in question as national holidays. All the bills do is to authorize the President "to issue a proclamation calling upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all Government buildings on such day and inviting the people of the United States to observe such day with appropriate ceremonies," as they may see fit.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am familiar with the bill, Mr. President, but we have passed many bills designating days of one kind or another in the past several years. I certainly hope we will not have two designations falling on the same calendar day. In that case, of course, we will have to carry along, and certainly the people must have to determine not only what the celebrations are, but which one of the two they wish to observe on that date. I do not think it would be very appropriate to have two designations made for the same calendar day.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, has objection been made to the pending bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No objection has been made.

Mr. HATCH. So long as Indian schools are being closed all over the Nation, so long as appropriations are being cut down and valid obligations to the Indians are not being fulfilled, I shall object to any bill which makes such an ostentatious display as setting aside a day to be called American Indian Day. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico objects. The bill will be passed over.

CREDIT FOR MILITARY OF NAVAL SERVICE

The bill (H. R. 603) to amend an act of September 27, 1944, relating to credit for military or naval service in connection with certain homestead entries, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator who introduced the bill does not seem to be present at the moment, so an explanation does not seem to be available.

Mr. CAIN. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. CAIN subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to House bill 603, Calendar No. 184. The question which I had in mind has been answered by the report itself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 603) to amend an act of September 27, 1944, relating to credit for military or naval service in connection with certain homestead entries was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRANT OF PRIVATE RIGHT-OF-WAY TO ROSCOE L. WOOD

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1288) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to grant a private right-of-way to Roscoe L. Wood, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands, with an amendment, on page 1, line 8, after the word "right-of-way", to strike out "for so long as needed" and insert "until this land has access to a contiguous highway or public way."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

SYLVIA DE CICCO

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 514) for the relief of the legal guardian of Sylvia De Cicco, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment on page 1, line 6, after the words "the sum of", to strike out "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,000", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the legal guardian of Sylvia De Cicco, a minor, of Jersey City, N. J., the sum of $2,000, in full satisfaction of the claim of the said Sylvia De Cicco against the United States for compensation for personal injuries sustained by her as a result of an accident which occurred when she was struck by a United States Army sedan at 228 Princeton Avenue, Jersey City, N. J., on June 8, 1944: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A. A. PELLETIER AND P. C. SILK

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 882) for the relief of A. A. Pelletier and P. C. Silk, which has been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "the sum of", to strike out "$498.21" and insert in lieu thereof "$334.72", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to A. A. Pelletier and P. C. Silk, of Great Falls, Mont., the sum of $334.72, in full satisfaction of their claim against the United States for compensation for reporting and transcribing certain hearings held at Helena, Mont., during the period July 8 to July 16, 1946, by the Special Committee To Investigate Senatorial Campaign Expenditures, 1946, pursuant to Senate Resolution 224, Seventy-ninth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH OCHRIMOWSKI

The bill (S. 50) for the relief of Joseph Ochrimowski was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Joseph Ochrimowski, who arrived at the port of New York on January 22, 1946, as a stowaway, shall, upon the payment of the required head tax, be considered for the purpose of immigration and naturalization laws to have been lawfully admitted into the United States. Upon the enactment of the act the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the Polish quota for the first year the Polish quota is available.

CHARLES N. BEMIS

The bill (H. R. 428) for the relief of Charles N. Bemis was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF ARCHIE S. WOODS, DECEASED

The bill (H. R. 444) for the relief of the estate of Archie S. Woods, deceased, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATURALIZATION PROCEEDINGS IN THE CASE OF SICK OR PHYSICALLY DISABLED INDIVIDUALS

The bill (H. R. 236) to amend the Nationality Act of 1940 so as to permit naturalization proceedings to be had at places other than in the office of the clerk or in open court in the case of sick or physically disabled individuals was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REGINALD MITCHELL

The bill (S. 315) for the relief of Reginald Mitchell was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Reginald Mitchell, of North Hollywood, Calif., the sum of $106.85, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for compensation for property damage sustained by him, as a result of an accident which occurred when a United States Army vehicle collided with another automobile and pushed it into the rear of the automobile which he was driving, at the intersection of East Seventh Street and Maple Street, in Los Angeles, Calif., on November 10, 1944: Provdided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

ROBERT B. JONES

The bill (S. 317) for the relief of Robert B. Jones was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Robert B. Jones shall be considered to have been commissioned ensign, United States Naval Reserve, and placed on active duty as of December 8, 1941, to have continued on active duty in that rank until February 23, 1945, to have been promoted to the rank of lieutenant, junior grade, as of February 23, 1945, and to have served on active duty in that rank until February 28, 1946.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Robert B. Jones a sum of money equal to the active-duty pay and allowances due him by reason of the provisions of section 1 of this act: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

ESTATE OF NELLIE P. DUNN

The bill (H. R. 1494) for the relief of the estate of Nellie P. Dunn, deceased, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

The bill (S. 1230) to amend sections 2 (a) and 603 (a) of the National Housing Act, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I will say to the distinguished Senator from Ohio that the bill was unanimously reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency. The chairman of the committee, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] asked me to report it yesterday. It is the last bill on the calendar. It has to do with the extension of the FHA title I and title VI program, which expires on June 30. It is proposed to extend the program only through January. The Congress will be in session at that time, and, if it is desired to make further changes, they can be made at that time.

The bill involves no additional authority. It merely extends the program under titles I and VI, as the report shows. There was no objection to the bill on the part of any member of the committee. As I say, the bill was unanimously reported from the committee. The Senator has the report of the Housing Administrator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 (a) of the National Housing Act, as amended, is hereby amended by striking out in the first sentence the following: "and prior to July 1, 1947."

SEC. 2. Section 603 (a) of the National Housing Act, as amended, is hereby amended by striking out of the second proviso "June 30, 1947" in each place where it appears, and inserting in lieu thereof "January 31, 1948."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That concludes the calendar.

PROTECTION OF FORESTS AGAINST DESTRUCTIVE INSECTS AND DISEASES

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 597, Calendar 161, which will have to be acted upon now if it is to do any good this year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 597) to provide for the protection of forests against destructive insects and diseases, and for other purposes.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I was absent from the Chamber at the time the bill was passed over. The bill is to provide for the protection of forests against destructive insects and diseases, and for other purposes. It was introduced by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD], and was considered by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and unanimously reported.

The Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture would be authorized to conduct surveys on any forest lands to detect and appraise infestations of forest insect pests and tree diseases, to determine the measures which should be applied on such lands to eradicate such forest pests, and to carry out such measures as the Secretary might deem necessary to accomplish the objectives and purposes of the bill.

I think it is well known that hundreds of millions of dollars of damage has been done to our forests each year by reason of insect pests. Much of this damage could be obviated if the presence of the insect were detected in time and measures were taken to control it. This necessitates cooperation between the Federal Government and States and communities which own forests in the public domain, and also the owners of private lands.

The reason for this is that airplane dusting is a common method of controlling many insects. Among the insects which should be controlled is the spruce bark beetle which, in 1943 and 1944, killed more than 2,000,000,000 feet of timber in Colorado alone. There are also the western pine beetle and the hemlock looper. Much work could be done, I am sure, in the control of the gypsy moth in order to keep it from spreading out of the area in which it is now prevalent.

As I say, there was no objection to the bill in the committee, as I recall. It was reported out unanimously. The need for speed in passing it was emphasized, if we intend to do the work this year. The Senator from Maine knows that serious outbreaks of the spruce fly have occurred in Maine. Now that we have means of controlling these insects, the Forest Service having demonstrated that they can control them, I think authority to do so should be granted in order to cooperate with private and public land owners, because no landowner by himself can effectively control an outbreak of forest pests.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I regret that I was absent when this bill was reported. That is why I objected a moment ago, and that is the reason that I should like to ask the able Senator from Vermont as to the amount of money requested.

Mr. AIKEN. I do not know the amount of money asked for. It is the amount that is from time to time determined to be necessary. Therefore the department would have to make out its case before the Appropriations Committee, just as it now has to make out a good case in order to get appropriations for other activities.

Mr. LUCAS. In other words, there is no request for any authorization of funds in this bill?

Mr. AIKEN. No specific amount. There is authorized to be appropriated such sums as the Congress may from time to time determine to be necessary.

Mr. LUCAS. May I inquire what the evidence disclosed may be the amount necessary in order to meet the situation?

Mr. AIKEN. I do not recall the amount. I would expect it to be a normal amount. I think the Forest Service is already doing some of this work.

Mr. LUCAS. That was to be my next question.

Mr. AIKEN. I am very sure that the Forest Service is doing some of this work and they probably have an appropriation at the present time for it. But the Senator well knows that many agencies of the Government which have been doing work on an appropriation basis in past years are now coming before the Congress to get authorization to do that which they have already been doing.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not quite understand why this bill is necessary if the department is doing the work at the present time, and there is no authorization requested for funds to carry out the purposes of the bill.

Mr. AIKEN. Because, if authorization has not been on the books for the past 15 years, but the Appropriations Committee has been appropriating for a particular purpose, we have now reached a time when someone raises a point of order against it; and it is particularly emphasized by the Reorganization Act which was passed last year that there shall be no legislation carried in an appropriation bill.

Mr. LUCAS. I take it that whatever money is authorized by the Appropriations Committee if it should see fit to go along with the theory of this bill will be beyond what is requested in the present budget. There is nothing of this kind included in the present budget.

Mr. AIKEN. I do not know whether there is or not, or, if there is, what item is included. But certainly the Department would have to show cause to the Appropriations Committee why money should be made available for the purpose of controlling forest insects. Personally, I have seen the damage which forest insects can do and how quickly they can destroy a billion feet of timber if they are not controlled. I recall an outbreak of the spruce bark beetle approximately 2 years ago. I think it started in New Brunswick, Canada, and spread over into the New England States. I know what the gypsy moth can do if it gets out of hand. It can destroy hundreds of acres of foliage.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] mentions the spruce budworm, which can do a tremendous amount of damage.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not question that. The only point I wanted to raise was the cost, because everyone seems to be economy-minded in the Congress of the United States, and here is another bill which apparently will take more money from the Treasury of the United States to control insects in various forests throughout the country. If what the able Senator says is true, it undoubtedly will cost a tremendous amount of money to do what he has in mind. I am for it; I think it ought to be done, but it seems to me that we should know what it is going to cost.

Mr. AIKEN. I do not know, and no one can tell what it will cost.

Mr. LUCAS. The Appropriations Committee will have to know before it can appropriate any money for the purpose. Certainly someone will have to give the committee some concrete evidence as to the cost.

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator from Illinois is undoubtedly correct. A case will have to be made before the Appropriations Committee. I am very glad that the Senator from Illinois is concerned about the cost of the project. I think we should all be concerned about the cost. If the Senator from Illinois had great forests in his State he would have a realization of what it would cost not to control the ravages of insects when they once get started.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Mr. President, I was called from the floor and was not able to return until after the discussion of this subject began. I should like to present a brief statement about it.

Billions of powerful, though tiny, enemies are attacking America's forests. Though many of them are so small that they are scarcely visible to the naked eye, they threaten the very future of the Nation's timber supply. From Maine to Washington to Texas and Florida, beetles and caterpillars are feasting on trees in ever-increasing amounts. Along with these insects go numerous tree diseases, many of which are actually carried by the insects.

Congress long ago recognized the importance of protecting our forests from fire. Under the Clarke-McNary law, the Department of Agriculture cooperates with the States in the provision and control of this scourge. No similar provision has been made for protection from insects and disease which in 1944 destroyed nearly four times as much sawtimber as did fire.

On March 24, 1941, a joint congressional committee on forestry recommended an amendment to the Clarke-McNary Act to provide additional funds for cooperating with the States in forest-fire protection. In 1944 Congress passed the necessary legislation and this year the Federal budget carries a requested appropriation of $9,000,000 for that purpose. A fact apparently overlooked is that that same joint committee recommended a similar amendment to the Clarke-McNary Act to provide for cooperative protection against forest insects and diseases on private- and State-owned forest lands.

Last year the Nation's loss to forest fires was reduced by nearly 50 percent but losses to insects and disease are going steadily up. In the Northeast and in the Lake States, so much white and yellow birch is being killed by the bronze birch borer that the very future of these valuable species is threatened. In Maine, the common beech louse carries a disease which is steadily destroying all the beech in the State and threatens to spread to other States to the south and west. Unless the disease is checked, beech promises to follow chestnut, which was long ago wiped out by the chestnut blight. But hardwoods are not the only hosts of insects and diseases in the Northeast. The spruce budworm, a leaf feeder, kills thousands of spruce and balsam fir trees annually and during recent years has spread into Vermont and New York.

In the southern pine forests, little-leaf disease, a new and little understood tree disease threatens the future of shortleaf pine, one of the four major southern pines and the only one of the four which grows at the higher elevations. The turpentine borer, southern pine beetle, and the engraver beetle have long been recognized as timber destroyers in our southern forests. Numerous leaf feeders, such as the pine sawfly, add to the yearly toll.

Let us move along to the western forests, which contain 65 percent of the Nation's saw-timber supply. Here the insects are really enjoying a holiday at our expense. During the past two decades beetles have destroyed 25,000,000,000 board feet of western pine timber, valued at $125,000,000. The most serious enemy of western white pine, sugar pine, and lodgepole pine in Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, Washington, Oregon, and California is the mountain pine beetle. When epidemics of this species develop thousands of acres of lodgepole forests may be swept as by a forest fire.

In recent years the Engelmann spruce beetle has swept through the spruce forests of western Colorado, killing more than 3,000,000,000 board feet of timber; and the outbreak is still continuing. The current rate of timber loss is estimated at four to six times the total annual growth of all the forest lands in Colorado.

In Utah there have been several recent outbreaks of the Black Hills beetle, which, sad to say, owes its name to my native State. An uncontrolled outbreak on the Wasatch National Forest increased in extent from 13,900 infested trees in 1944 to 33,900 trees in 1945.

A recent outbreak of the Douglas fir tussock moth in Idaho already covers nearly half a million acres, and threatens to destroy a major portion of the Douglas fir and white fir stands unless it is promptly checked.

Long recognized as the most serious insect enemy of the Douglas fir in the Rocky Mountain region, the Douglas fir beetle has now crossed the mountains, and is responsible for killing 1 percent per year of some of the finest Douglas fir stands in western Oregon; and the damage is steadily increasing. One percent of Oregon's Douglas fir stand is enough to build about 380,000 six-room houses.

Another insect which is becoming increasingly important in the Douglas fir region is the hemlock looper, which has killed over 700,000,000 board feet of western hemlock since 1918. In 1945, an intensive airplane spraying campaign was conducted to stop an outbreak on 12,000 acres, in Clatsop County, Oreg.

Mr. President, I could go on and on telling you about the forest-insect problem in the United States. I might even point out that in California, a State where forest fires are extremely bad, the annual timber loss due to insects is four times that incurred by fires. In the 350 years of our forest history, we have lost to insects and disease more than one and a half times as much timber as we have manufactured for use. I believe this gives you a fair picture of the situation in the United States.

The protection of our forests from insects and disease is a public responsibility. Insects and diseases recognize no State lines or property boundaries, and may cause losses which are even greater than the timber loss. Dead timber stands are readily swept by fire, and the land may be denuded of forest growth for generations. Silted streams, floods, and eroded wastelands may be the result. We have long recognized the public responsibility for controlling forest fires. We have the same responsibility in regard to forest insects and diseases. Let us assume that responsibility.

Mr. President, the Department of Agriculture has already recommended and approved this bill.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Did the able Senator from South Dakota advise the Senate what the cost of the proposed measure would be?

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Only what I stated in the discussion; namely, that the Department has been appropriating $9,000,000. But, of course, the Appropriations Committee would have to decide as to that and the Department would have to prove its case.

Mr. LUCAS. Heretofore, has the Department been spending $9,000,000 a year, on an average, to take care of this problem?

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I believe so.

Mr. LUCAS. I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I wish to say that today the Department can control insect pests on a much greater acreage and with much less expense than heretofore. It used to be necessary to virtually hand-pick gypsy moths, but now it has been found that half a pound of DDT to an acre, when spread by airplane, will effectively control them.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Of course I appreciate the remarks of the Senator from Illinois. This program will cost something; but if we do not make the proposed expenditure now, the future cost of controlling these insects will be increased one hundredfold.

Very few of us really appreciate the actual value of timber to the United States and the actual value of the millions and millions of acres of forests in our Nation. Senators may speak of oil and copper and other commodities; but so far as the various States are concerned, they own tremendous quantities of timber. For instance, I have seen 1 acre of timber in Oregon from which 150,000 board feet could be produced. Are we going to say that because the program will cost us a small amount of money, we will not protect the timber of the Nation? In my State the Government has 12,000,000 or 14,000,000 acres of timber land, and in Arizona it has large timber acreage, and so on in the rest of the States. That timber belongs to the people of the United States.

So I hope there will be no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to ask several questions about the bill. Of course I desire to assure the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD] of my complete support of the bill.

As I understand what has been stated by the Senator from Vermont, the enactment of this bill is necessary in order to obtain authorization for any future expenditure of funds which may be appropriated by the Congress for the carrying on of the warfare against forest insects.

Mr. AIKEN. That is my understanding of the matter.

Mr. MORSE. I further understand that such an authorization is necessary in order to avoid the possible raising of a point of order that, in the absence of an authorization, any funds now being spent by an agency of Government, such as the Forest Service, are being spent without without any legal sanction. Is that correct?

Mr. AIKEN. That is my understanding.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I think that is correct.

Mr. MORSE. The proof of the pudding is the fact that in connection with some of the other projects provided for in appropriation bills now before the House of Representatives, that very point of order has been raised by some Members of the House who are so false-economy-minded that today they have taken such steps, and the House of Representatives has not appropriated the funds necessary for carrying out a sound conservation program.

Mr. AIKEN. I think that point of order has been raised with respect to certain matters, this year; and I believe it is likely to be raised at any time in respect to other matters, including the one we are now considering.

Mr. MORSE. I wish to say to the Senator from Vermont that I think enactment of the bill is of the utmost importance. I desire to endorse everything the Senator from New Mexico has said. I think enactment of the bill is essential to a sound conservation program; because, as I said earlier this year, after all, even from the standpoint of national defense, we cannot permit the wasting of the great timber resources of our Nation.

If the Members of the Senate would visit the great western section of the United States and learn at first hand of the great loss that all our people are suffering today because we are not carrying on a sound conservation program, they would understand how true it is when I argue that the type of appropriation bill action taken by the House of Representatives thus far in regard to our conservation program cannot be justified on the ground of sound economy. Such a program is one of false economy, and I think it is most unfortunate.

I hope the Senate, at least, will proceed to rectify the great damage which is being done to a true conservation program. It seems to me that this bill permits of a necessary authorization, so that in respect to at least this segment of the program the Congress can legally appropriate the funds necessary to prevent the destruction of the forests by insects.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill (S. 597) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to protect and preserve forest resources of the United States from ravages of bark beetles, defoliators, blights, wilts, and other destructive forest insect pests and diseases, and thereby enhance the growth and maintenance of forests, promote the stability of forest-using industries and employment associated therewith, aid in fire control by reducing the menace created by dying and dead trees injured or killed by insects or disease, conserve forest cover on watersheds, and protect recreational and other values of forests, it shall be the policy of the Government of the United States independently and through cooperation with the government of States, Territories, and possessions, and private timber owners to prevent, retard, control, suppress, or eradicate incipient, potential, or emergency outbreaks of destructive insects and diseases on, or threatening, all forest lands irrespective of ownership.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized either directly or in cooperation with other departments of the Federal Government, with any State, Territory, or possession, organization, person, or public agency, subject to such conditions as he may deem necessary and using such funds as have been, or may hereafter be, made available for these purposes, to conduct surveys on any forest lands to detect and appraise infestations of forest insect pests and tree diseases, to determine the measures which should be applied on such lands, in order to prevent, retard, control, suppress, or eradicate incipient, threatening, potential, or emergency outbreaks of such insect or disease pests, and to plan, organize, direct, and carry out such measures as he may deem necessary to accomplish the objectives and purposes of this act: Provided, That any operations planned to prevent, retard, control, or suppress insects or disease on forest lands owned, controlled, or managed by other agencies of the Federal Government shall be conducted with the consent of the agency having jurisdiction over such land.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion and out of any money made available pursuant to this act, make allocations to Federal agencies having jurisdiction over lands held or owned by the United States in such amounts as he may deem necessary to retard, control, suppress, or eradicate injurious insect pests or plant diseases affecting forests on said lands.

SEC. 4. No money appropriated to carry out the purposes of this act shall be expended to prevent, retard, control, or suppress insect or disease pests on forest lands owned by persons, associations, corporations, States, Territories, possessions, or subdivisions thereof until such contributions toward the work as the Secretary may require have been made or agreed upon in the form of funds, services, materials, or otherwise.

SEC. 5. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of this act such sums as the Congress may from time to time determine to be necessary. Any sums so appropriated shall be available for necessary expenses, including the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, printing and binding, and the purchase, maintenance, operation, and exchange of passenger-carrying vehicles; but such sums shall not be used to pay the cost or value of any property injured or destroyed. Materials and equipment necessary to control, suppress, or eradicate infestations of forest insects or tree diseases may be procured without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5) under such procedures as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, when deemed necessary in the public interest.

SEC. 6. The provisions of this act are intended to supplement, and shall not be construed as limiting or repealing, existing legislation.

SEC. 7. This act may be cited as the "Forest Pest Control Act."

RECESS

Mr. WHITE. I move that the Senate now stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, May 23, 1947, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, MAY 22, 1947

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who sitteth at the right hand of the Father, full of grace and truth, harken unto the voice of our supplication. We praise Thee that Thou art the root and ground of unchangeable truth. When Thou art near there is a rift in the cloud; faith grasps a new courage; and we repossess our souls.

We praise Thee that through Thy impartial love our eyes are open to Thy providence. However numerous our contests, however aggressive they may be, O bless us with a multiplied sense of fairness, wisdom, and understanding. Let our belief in the ultimate triumph of right and justice be so strong that it cannot be shattered. As the gift of the Christ is the golden background against which our weakness stands out in pathetic failure, deepen our sense of obligation. Arm us against temptation, lest we fall like a reed before the wind, and to understand that character is a sublime height to which we must climb on the golden rounds of choice and purpose.

In Jesus' name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MRS. BARBARA GILGENBACH ELCHINGER

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Speaker, up in the northwest corner of Ohio, where I come from, the people are self-reliant, brave, and strong.

I want to nominate as the grandmother of 1947 Mrs. Barbara Gilgenbach Elchinger, Holgate, Ohio, who will be 93 years old on May 25. She has 11 children, 9 of whom are living. She has 66 grandchildren, 87 great-grandchildren, 8 great-great-grandchildren, and 7 great-great-great-grandchildren.

Up in that part of the country we have not one Communist in a carload. It is not a salubrious part of the country for communism to exist. I salute this gallant lady upon her reaching her ninety-fourth year; what grand life it is.

As part of my remarks I include an article, as follows:

GRANDMA HAS 177 LIVING DESCENDANTS

A mere matter of 177 descendants are preparing to honor the donna of the family, Mrs. Barbara Gilgenbach Elchinger, who will be 93 years old May 25. Incredible as it may seem, she has 177 living descendants, which must be a record of some sort or other.

Mrs. Elchinger now is living with her son Philip Gilgenbach and family on his farm south of Holgate.

Mrs. Elchinger had 11 children, 9 of whom are living. She has 66 grandchildren, 87 great-grandchildren, 8 great-great-grandchildren, and 7 great-great-great-grandchildren, as the census was taken at the hour of loping to press.

Grandma Elchinger is most remarkable in retaining her faculties. About a year ago when she was living with Mr. and Mrs. John Gilgenbaugh, the missus and ye editor spent an entire Sunday afternoon talking to her. She was alert to a degree that made one marvel.

Be not deceived by the difference in the spelling of the names of the two sons mentioned. The family name was Gilgenbach, which Philip never had changed by the probate court. But John got into the livestock business and checks began to come "Gilgenbaugh" so he changed his cognomen. They are brothers, regardless of the spelling.

The children are planning quite a celebration for grandma's birthday on May 25.

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLEVENGER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. RAMEY. I would like to add the name of Ina Duley Ogden, approximately the same age, who is the author of well-known hymns, one being Brighten the Corner Where You Are, another being Carry Your Cross With a Smile, and others. She lives in her home known as the Old House.

(Mr. CLEVENGER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include a newspaper article.)

THE TRUMAN FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. BUFFETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUFFETT. Mr. Speaker, the so-called Truman doctrine is characterized by proponents as probably the most far-reaching change in American foreign policy in 100 years.

Many of its opponents contend it starts us on the road of militarism and imperialism.

Whatever its consequences are, I rise to propound a solemn question.

How, in the existing political framework of this Nation, can the people of America, if they so desire, effectively oppose this policy?

The policy is sponsored by the Democratic Party and collaborated in by the Republican leadership.

If the people disapprove of this adventure, as many polls indicate, what recourse is left them when neither party provides the vehicle for effective opposition?

When the Republican leadership, without consulting the people, does a "me too" on decisive issues, what method do the people then have to effectively influence governmental policies?

Under this situation it would appear that the people are losing the all-important right to approve or reject decisive policies at the ballot box. For, as matters now stand, neither party affords the people the opportunity to effectively oppose this global program.

I respectfully urge the Republican leaders responsible for this collaboration to explain this situation fairly and forthrightly to the American people. The people are entitled to a full explanation of a political performance which apparently deprives the people of an effective voice in determining America's future.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LECOMPTE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a resolution adopted by the American Legion, fifth region, Fourth Congressional District of Iowa.

Mr. LEMKE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Carleton Beals.

Mr. McGREGOR asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

HOME RULE FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 195, Rept. No. 418), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized and directed to conduct a full and complete investigation and study of reorganization and home rule for the District of Columbia.

The committee shall report to the House (or to the Clerk of the House if the House is not in session) as soon as practicable during the present Congress the results of its investigation and study, together with such recommendations as it deems advisable.

For the purpose of carrying out this resolution, the committee or subcommittee is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, and to require, by subpena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memoranda, papers, and documents, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or any member of the committee designated by him and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member.

NONFAT MILK POWDER

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, our country has a splendid opportunity at this time to carry out an important two-way program of aid to the American farmer and to the hunger-ridden countries of Europe—at very little expense to our citizens and taxpayers.

Congress, in cooperation with the Department of Agriculture and the State Department, should act swiftly on a set of unusual conditions which will make possible:

First. The expedient and immediate delivery of relief food which we now have in surplus to Europe to meet urgent foreign food needs, and Second. Put into effect a simple and effective automatic stabilization of dairy prices for the American farmer, without the necessity of invoking complicated parity percentages, or other red-tape procedure at this time.

America needs only one-half of its present production of nonfat milk powder. This powder is the product resulting from the drying of milk from which the butterfat has been removed.

We are now turning out this powder at the highest rate in our history, and we do not need more than half of it for our own present total uses in this country.

War-stimulated production, which boosted the United States total output from 300,000,000 pounds a year to over 600,000,000 pounds a year, is now actually increased again. This means more surplus—at least 300,000,000 pounds this year that can be spared to feed other peoples.

This surplus has already caused a natural price recession from 15 cents a pound to the present 10 cents a pound.

The Department of Agriculture has purchased 83,000,000 pounds since January 1 this year and could easily obtain triple that amount through the present pasture feeding season, from production now being turned out daily.

Expenditure of twenty-five to thirty million dollars of relief funds for this product will represent prudent and effective service to our farmers, and at the same time assist in the important task of feeding Europe's starving millions.

HENRY WALLACE OUTBURST

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania

There was no objection.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I read in the daily paper that the other day in Hollywood, Calif., that Mr. Henry Wallace, a former Vice President of the United States, and for 4 years ex officio Member of the United States Congress, said this:

> I mean the group of bigots first known as the Dies committee, then the Rankin committee, now the Thomas committee—three names for Fascists the world over to roll on their tongues with pride.

Mr. Speaker, nobody knows better than the former Vice President that membership on a committee of either the House or the other body is by election of the Members and by selection of the various committees for that purpose. No groups of any kind, whether bigots or otherwise, form themselves into a committee of the Congress. No person knows this any better than the former Vice President.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, Mr. Henry Wallace, regardless of those things that he says or where he says them, in this instance is an ignorant, vicious, unpatriotic liar.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDOWELL. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. It has been suggested to me that what Mr. Wallace needs is a mental examination.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KLEIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the New York Post.

Mr. GORDON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article from a Scottish newspaper.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD and include excerpts from a speech made by her in Washington on last Saturday.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. HAND asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a speech made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY].

Mr. RAMEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Mr. Nutt, of the Packard Engineering Co.

Mr. BEALL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Baltimore Sun.

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances, and to include in one an article that appeared in the Lynn Telegram-News and in the other an address of Sumner Welles at a dinner of the American Jewish Congress at Boston on May 19.

Mr. WHITTINGTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include resolutions adopted by the thirty-seventh annual convention of the National Rivers and Harbors Conference.

THE TRUMAN DOCTRINE

Mr. KERSTEN of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KERSTEN of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Nebraska a few moments ago commented upon whether or not the American people have had an opportunity to decide what their position is with regard to the so-called Truman doctrine. My contention with regard to that question is this: Mr. Truman is now following the policy formulated by the Republicans during the last number of years in opposing communism. It has been the platform of the Republican Party for a number of years past to oppose the progress of communistic Soviet Russia across the world. In following that policy Mr. Truman is merely following the policy of the Republican Party. In answer to that query, I say that the Republican leadership, or those Republicans that are supporting that policy, are being consistent with the policy they have followed and fought for during the last several years.

REFUTATION OF VIEWS OF GENTLEMAN FROM MISSISSIPPI, MR. RANKIN, ON ZIONISM

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, yesterday an attack on the floor of the House was made upon Zionism and for that purpose there was quoted a passage from the memoirs of Henry Morgenthau. There is always some quotation to suit every purpose the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] whose lack of confirmation on Zionism is readily discernible might well know that the son of Henry Morgenthau, Sr., takes quite a different view and he might also know that every President of the United States beginning with Wilson to Truman supported the aims and aspirations of the Jews in Palestine. Certainly, the support of Zionism given by 39 Governors of the respective States of our Union, and by 33 of the State legislatures, and by the platforms of the two great parties carries more authority and weight than a statement by the deceased Mr. Morgenthau or assertions of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] likewise inserts an ad which appeared in a New York paper. That was not an ad sponsored or supported by general Zionism. It was the ad of an insurgent group which opposes the central authority of the Jewish Agency of Palestine, the entity established by the mandate for Palestine. In the interest of fairness, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] might have acquainted himself with these facts before he spoke.

HENRY MORGENTHAU, SR., ON ZIONISM

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I might say in the beginning that I know of no man who in my opinion has done the Jews of this country more harm than the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER]. I was amused, as well as amazed, at his statement a moment ago.

As for Henry Morgenthau, Sr., he was the brains of the family. In fact he was one of the great Jews of this country; and the intelligent Jews, I am sure, will not agree with the statements made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] concerning him.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman's remarks be taken down. He made certain statements which reflect upon my service in this House when he said he thinks there is nobody who has rendered more disservice to the Jews than I.

Mr. RANKIN. I said, had done them more harm by your continuously agitating a policy that gets them into trouble, and which as Henry Morgenthau, Sr., so forcefully denounced.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the words objected to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I might say in the beginning that I know of no man who in my opinion has done the Jews of this country more harm than the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think these words reflect upon the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER]. They are merely an expression of the opinion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] and, of course, it does not necessarily mean that that opinion is shared by anyone else. The Chair does not believe the words reflect in an unparliamentary manner upon the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

The gentleman from Mississippi will resume in order.

Mr. RANKIN. One of the very things that Henry Morgenthau, Sr., was warning his Jewish brethren about, that is Henry Morgenthau, Sr., the father of the ex-Secretary of the Treasury, was just such unwise tactics as the attacks they are now making on Great Britain, advocating, as I read yesterday, the blowing up of British trains, robbing British banks, blowing up British arsenals, and murdering British subjects who have stood by them when other countries would not even admit them into their jurisdictions.

Here is the exact language taken from the page advertisement these Zionists published in the New York Times a few days ago:

Every time you blow up a British arsenal, or wreck a British jail, or send a British railroad train sky high, or rob a British bank or let go with your guns and bombs at the British betrayers and invaders of your homeland, the Jews of America make a little holiday in their hearts.

As I pointed out on yesterday, that vicious statement does not represent the views of the decent, high-classed, law-abiding Jews of America, nor does it represent the views of the rest of the American people.

The quotation from the autobiography of Henry Morgenthau, Sr., to which the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] objects, and which I inserted in the RECORD on yesterday, reads as follows:

Zionism is the most stupendous fallacy in Jewish history. I assert that it is wrong in principle and impossible of realization; that it is unsound in its economics, fantastical in its politics, and sterile in its spiritual ideals. Where it is not pathetically visionary, it is a cruel playing with the hopes of a people blindly seeking their way out of age-long miseries. These are bold and sweeping assertions, but in this chapter I shall undertake to make them good.

The very fervor of my feeling for the oppressed of every race and every land, especially for the Jews, those of my own blood and faith, to whom I am bound by every tender tie, impels me to fight with all the greater force against this scheme, which my intelligence tells me can only lead them deeper into the mire of the past, while it professes to be leading them to the heights.

Zionism is a surrender, not a solution. It is retrogression into the blackest error, and not progress toward the light. I will go further, and say that it is a betrayal; it is an eastern European proposal, fathered in this country by American Jews, which, if it were to succeed, would cost the Jews of America most that they have gained of liberty, equality, and fraternity.

I have no apology for inserting those remarks of Henry Morgenthau, Sr., in the RECORD. I believe they express the sentiments of conservative Jews, as well as thinking gentiles, all over the world.

As between him and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], I will take Henry Morgenthau, Sr., and I feel sure that 90 percent of the American people would do likewise, if they knew the facts.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

EMANUEL CELLER

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] needs any defense from me or from any other Jew in this country or in the House of Representatives. I believe the House knows, and I want to say to the Members, if there is anybody who can talk about doing harm to the Jews of this country or any other minority groups, the gentleman from Mississippi is well qualified. He is certainly an expert on that subject.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PRICE of Illinois asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. VAN ZANDT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article from the New York Times concerning court-martial systems.

Mr. McCORMACK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter from Governor Wallgren, of Washington, to the editor of the Washington Post of today.

Mr. BRADLEY of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a short article concerning the port of Long Beach, Calif.

Mr. KEATING asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a bill introduced by him.

COACHELLA DIVISION OF THE ALL-AMERICAN CANAL IRRIGATION PROJECT

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 3348) to declare the policy of the United States with respect to the allocation of costs of construction of the Coachella Division of the All-American Canal irrigation project, California.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS]?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we would like to know what this is about.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, when the Department of Interior appropriation bill was before the House, I offered an amendment which would have made a technical change in the wording, which is now proposed by this legislative bill. The chairman of the subcommittee said he agreed with the objective that I had in mind, that he was favorable to what I was trying to do, but that in his opinion it represented legislation on an appropriation bill. Therefore, I introduced this bill. It has passed the Subcommittee on Reclamation by a unanimous vote, and it has passed the Committee on Public Lands by a unanimous vote. It is a technical proposition, but in language which I think will interest the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]. It saves the United States Government $8,000,000, and the farmers of the district agree to increase their payments from $13,000,000 to $26,000,000. The reason for the urgency today is that by getting it to the Senate at once the change can be made in the Interior Department appropriation bill while there, whereas the Consent Calendar will not be called for at least 2 weeks.

Mr. RICH. I may say to the gentleman that practically every bill that is brought up here required eight or ten or fifteen million dollars more, but if you are saving $8,000,000 I am for you.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the bill H. R. 3348 was carefully considered by a subcommittee and the full Committee on Public Lands and received a unanimous favorable report. The bill also has a favorable report from the Department of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the language in the appropriation act of July 1, 1946, of the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947 (Public Law 478, 79th Cong.), for the Bureau of Reclamation under the caption:

"Boulder Canyon project (All-American Canal): For continuation of construction of a diversion dam, and main canal (and appurtenant structures, including distribution and drainage systems) located entirely within the United States connecting the diversion dam with the Imperial and Coachella Valleys in California;"; is hereby revised to read:

"Boulder Canyon project (All-American Canal): For continuation of construction of a diversion dam, and main canal (and appurtenant structures) located entirely within the United States connecting the diversion dam with the Imperial and Coachella Valleys in California, and distribution and drainage systems;"; and this revision shall apply with equal force to all prior appropriation acts for the Department of the Interior and to the act for the fiscal year 1948 in which this same language appears for the Bureau of Reclamation.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1947

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 3245) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3245) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 9, 10, 11, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, and 28, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum of "$70,000" named in said amendment insert "$60,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"FEDERAL WORKS AGENCY

"BUREAU OF COMMUNITY FACILITIES

"Veterans' educational facilities: For an additional amount for the completion of construction and installation of veterans' educational facilities, fiscal year 1947, $3,000,000, to be available until expended, but not to be available for new projects after September 30, 1947, of which amount not to exceed $100,000 shall be available for administrative expenses: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the relocation of any building at a cost greater than $3 per square foot."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

"Maintenance and operation of air navigation facilities: For an additional amount, fiscal year 1947, for 'Maintenance and operation of air navigation facilities', $20,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 7, 12, and 13.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3245) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, submit the following report in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

Amendments Nos. 1 to 4, inclusive, relate to the Senate and appropriate $50,000 for salaries, officers and employees, $100,000 for special investigations, and $200,000 for miscellaneous items, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 5 appropriates $12,500 to the widow of a deceased Representative, as proposed by the Senate.

INDEPENDENT AGENCIES

Amendment No 6 increases the amount for travel expenses, Office of Defense Transportation, to $60,000 instead of $70,000, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 7 is reported in disagreement.

Amendment No. 8 appropriates $3,000,000 for veterans' educational facilities instead of $20,000,000, as proposed by the Senate, and provides that no part of the fund shall be used on any project where the cost is in excess of $3 per square foot.

Amendment No. 9 provides, by transfer, an additional amount of $2,500 for penalty mail costs, Interstate Commerce Commission, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 10 appropriates $5,103,000 for the Office of Selective Service Records, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 11 appropriates $4,500 for The Tax Court of the United States, as proposed by the Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Amendment No. 12 is reported in disagreement.

Amendment No. 13 appropriates $5,000,000 for the farm labor supply program instead of $6,000,000, as proposed by the Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

Amendment No. 14 strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, an appropriation of $600,000 for establishment of air-navigation facilities, proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 15 appropriates $20,000 for maintenance and operation of air-navigation facilities instead of $160,000, as proposed by the House.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Amendment No. 16 appropriates $75,000 for rural-delivery service, 1946, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 17 provides $10,000,000 for clerks, first- and second-class post offices, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 18 appropriates $28,800,000, as proposed by the Senate, for city delivery carriers, instead of $28,018,800, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 19 provides, by transfer, $152,000 additional for star route service, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 20 provides, by transfer, $2,500,000 additional for railroad transportation and mail messenger service, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 21 provides, by transfer, $3,090,000 additional for railway mail service, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 22 provides, by transfer, $3,273,000 additional for foreign mail transportation, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 23 provides, by transfer, $13,000 additional for railway mail service, travel expenses, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 24 increases the limitation on amount available for salaries at field headquarters, domestic air mail service, to $124,000, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 25 appropriates $441,000, as proposed by the Senate, for unpaid money orders more than 1 year old instead of $127,000, as proposed by the House.

Amendments Nos. 26 and 27 provide $3,536,700 for vehicle service, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $2,996,700, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 28 appropriates $450,000 for sanitation, Panama Canal Zone, as proposed by the Senate.

AMENDMENTS IN DISAGREEMENT

The following motions have been authorized to be offered by the managers on the part of the House with respect to amendments in disagreement:

Amendment No. 7: To recede from disagreement and concur with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Such sums as may be determined by the Bureau of the Budget to be necessary are hereby appropriated for making for the first quarter of the fiscal year 1948 (1) grants to States for assistance to aged needy individuals, needy dependent children, and needy individuals who are blind, as authorized in titles I, IV, and X, respectively, of the Social Security Act approved August 14, 1935, as amended, and (2) grants to States for unemployment compensation administration: Provided, That the obligations incurred and expenditures made for each of such purposes under the authority of this appropriation shall be charged to the appropriations therefor in the Labor-Federal Security Appropriation Act, 1948."

The foregoing is necessary in order that funds will be available to make payments to the States in June for old-age pensions, etc., to prevent delayed payments to recipients of amounts due the 1st of July.

Amendment No. 12: To recede from disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment, which directs the Secretary of the Treasury to cancel the notes of the Commodity Credit Corporation in the amount of $641,832,080.64.

Amendment No. 13: To recede from disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"Farm Labor Supply Program

"Supply and distribution of farm labor: The funds provided by the Farm Labor Supply Appropriation Act, 1944, as amended and supplemented, are hereby continued available through January 30, 1948, for carrying out the purposes of said Act, as amended, and the Act of April 28, 1947 (Public Law 40, Eightieth Congress), an Act providing for a six months' extension and final liquidation of the farm labor supply program; and, in addition to the amount continued available, there is hereby appropriated for such purposes the sum of $5,000,000 to be merged with the funds hereby continued available. Not less than $2,000,000 of such additional funds shall be apportioned among the several States in the manner and for the purposes specified in section 2 of the Farm Labor Supply Appropriation Act, 1944. In addition to the amounts heretofore made available for administrative expenses pursuant to section 3 of such Act, there is hereby made available out of said funds the sum of $250,000 for such purposes: Provided, That not to exceed $258,500 of the total funds remaining as of January 30 1948, shall be available until June 30, 1948, for administrative and other expenses, including personal services in the District of Columbia, incident to the settlement of growers' and workers' contracts and accounts, the collection of reimbursements due the Government, the payment of transportation and other obligations outstanding, and the handling of other necessary fiscal and administrative work in the final liquidation and disposition of Government assets and liabilities under the program: Provided further, That not to exceed $500,000 of the receipts derived from sales of labor supply centers, labor homes, labor camps, and facilities under the provisions of section 2 (d) of the Act of August 14, 1946 (Public Law 731), as amended, shall be available for the payment of costs of the liquidation of such labor supply centers, labor homes, labor camps, and facilities, including personal services in the District of Columbia, and any appropriations or other funds from which such costs have been advanced may be reimbursed therefor from any such receipts, the net proceeds of such sales to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States."

JOHN TABER,
RICHARD B. WIGGLESWORTH,
ALBERT ENGEL,
KARL STEFAN,
FRANCIS CASE,
FRANK B. KEEFE,
CLARENCE CANNON,
JOHN H. KERR,
GEORGE MAHON,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this is a unanimous report.

There are included about $16,000,000 of items for the Post Office Department which went to the Senate after the bill was disposed of here in the House; in other words, the House had had no opportunity to consider those items before the bill passed here.

Three million dollars is also provided to proceed with the program of classroom buildings for colleges with the restriction that not more than $3 a foot be spent by the Federal Government. It is the intention that these buildings insofar as possible may be given to the colleges and that the colleges may go ahead to such extent as they please beyond that figure. The Federal Works Administration has power to give them the buildings. The cost of the rehabilitation and reconstruction of those buildings has been running way out of sight. It is the intention of the committee and of the language that has been used here that the colleges may have the privilege of going on and spending any amount they please in addition to the amount of $3 per foot to be expended by the Federal Works Administration through the Office of Community Facilities.

Mr. Speaker, at this point I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, this is a unanimous report, but the Members of the minority signed it reluctantly. We especially regret the provision limiting the amount available for veterans' facilities at colleges and reducing the total appropriation from $20,000,000 to $3,000,000, and including restrictions which make it inoperative. Under these restrictions I doubt whether a single college will be in position to avail itself of even the reduced amount provided.

There is not a college in the United States whose enrollment has not been swollen by veterans taking courses under the GI bill to a point far beyond its facilities, both for housing and instruction. They are housing great numbers of these boys in makeshift dormitories, in temporary barracks, and even in trailers. And even then, veterans are being turned away because the schools are without dormitories, laboratories, and classrooms.

The purpose of the $20,000,000 carried by the Senate amendment is to provide funds with which to move abandoned buildings from camps and other war centers to colleges where veterans are applying for admission under the GI bill. These buildings are temporary structures and are rapidly deteriorating and will serve no purpose in their present location. Transferred to the campus of a school they will make it possible to provide educational facilities for boys who otherwise cannot take advantage of the provisions of the GI bill. All schools are turning away veterans because of lack of space and this money will enable them to utilize buildings which otherwise will be sold as junk and to educate veterans who otherwise must go without educational opportunities.

The conference report reduces the $20,000,000 passed by the Senate to $3,000,000—an amount totally inadequate to meet the needs of the thousands of exservicemen who are applying for training.

Even if the entire $20,000,000 were included in the conference report it would be a futile gesture as the limitation of cost of construction to $3 per cubic foot is insufficient to pay the average cost of construction submitted to the committee.

So far as the intention of the House or the Senate or the conference is concerned—in applying the $3 limitation to Federal funds alone and not to college funds or to joint Federal and college funds—this is the first suggestion I have heard of such an interpretation.

No such suggestion was made or considered either in the House or Senate or in the conference between the managers on the part of the two Houses.

The limitation is explicit. Under the language of the limitation in the conference report the funds shall not be available if the cost is in excess of $3 per foot whether paid from Federal funds or other funds. No distinction is made as to whether that cost is paid by the school or the Federal Government or jointly. So the whole effect of this limitation upon the Senate amendment is to deny these colleges essential funds for the construction of classrooms for veterans.

Provision of the extra class rooms required for veterans is not the responsibility of the colleges. They have ample facilities for their normal requirements. But they do not have facilities for these unexpected and temporary demands on their capacity by these wards of the Federal Government. That is the responsibility of the Federal Government itself. The conference report before us deliberately ignores that responsibility. The colleges have already expanded their facilities, their laboratories and libraries, as well as their administration costs far beyond anything ever anticipated. Such funds as they have for expansion, are needed for permanent construction.

Mr. Speaker, this is a temporary need, an emergency precipitated by Federal legislation promising veterans educational training—and the Federal Government is bound both morally and legally to meet that emergency and provide that instruction.

Within a space of 5 years, at most, the emergency will be past; the obligation to the veterans will have been discharged; and the buildings will have been liquidated. No permanent benefits accrue to the schools and it is not incumbent upon the schools to furnish the temporary accommodations—even if they were financially able to do it—which they are not.

The question before us is whether the House will agree to the Senate amendment and make it possible to carry out the commitments of the GI bill of rights or whether it will insist on limitations which vitiate the law.

The minority members of the committee of conference cannot agree to any limitation on the fund proposed by the Senate for the transfer of this surplus and decaying housing to schools for veterans.

Never was instruction so badly needed. These boys were called from their home communities just at the formative period of their mental development. The universal testimony of every school is that they are taking advantage of the educational opportunities afforded them and that invariably they are leading their classes. But they are already advanced in years so far as college courses are concerned, and unless they can matriculate now there is less and less probability that they will ever be able to complete their school work.

It is evident on the face of it that denial of the means of moving these buildings amounts to denial to many veterans of the benefits of GI instruction promised them under the law.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the trouble with this thing is that it does not and will not provide any substantial facilities for the colleges. These people have wasted money in a very ridiculous way. They spent as high as $9 a foot to rebuild these buildings. But worst of all at the time of the hearings they only spent $5,000,000 out of the $80,000,000 that was given them for this purpose and they had contracted for about half of the total. They had lots of money and the only reason for allowing them anything in this was to provide school facilities for the veterans and to get settlement of the item with the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 7: Page 6, line 4, insert "Federal Works Agency."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TABER moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the said amendment insert the following:

"Such sums as may be determined by the Bureau of the Budget to be necessary are hereby appropriated for making for the first quarter of the fiscal year 1948 (1) grants to States for assistance to aged needy individuals, needy dependent children, and needy individuals who are blind, as authorized in titles I, IV, and X, respectively, of the Social Security Act approved August 14, 1935, as amended, and (2) grants to States for unemployment compensation administration: Provided, That the obligations incurred and expenditures made for each of such purposes under the authority of this appropriation shall be charged to the appropriations therefor in the Labor-Federal Security Appropriation Act, 1948."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 12: Page 7, line 21, insert the following:

"COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

"On the date of enactment of this act the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to discharge $641,832,080.64 of the indebtedness of the Commodity Credit Corporation to the Secretary of the Treasury by canceling notes in such amount issued by the Corporation to the Secretary of the Treasury pursuant to section 4 of the act of March 8, 1938, as amended (15 U. S. C. 713a-4)."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CANNON. I wonder if the gentleman would give us a brief explanation of this provision.

Mr. TABER. This is an item of $641,000,000 to clean up the liabilities of the Commodity Credit Corporation to the Treasury on account of funds that have previously been expended for subsidy payments during the Price Control Act operations to meet the deficits that the Corporation had at the time they made their report to the Congress.

Mr. CANNON. The intention then is to continue the Commodity Credit Corporation in all of its powers and functions, and this provision proposes to bring the capital structure up to par.

Mr. TABER. Of course, we have no authority in our committee to bring in any legislation which would continue the Corporation, but this is intended to bring the books of the Corporation in balance and to restore their capital as of June 30, last. That is the usual practice, and the one that has been followed ever since the Corporation was organized whenever they reported that its capital was impaired.

Mr. CANNON. With this replenishment of capital, the Corporation is then in a position to continue to function in the future as heretofore?

Mr. TABER. Yes. Of course, I do not know what its condition presently is. We do not now have a report, but we will get one as of June 30, next. But it is in a position to continue until we have a further opportunity to act upon future operations.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 13: Page 8, line 5, insert the following:

"FARM LABOR SUPPLY PROGRAM

"Supply and distribution of farm labor: The funds provided by the Farm Labor Supply Appropriation Act, 1944, as amended and supplemented, are hereby continued available through January 30, 1948, for carrying out the purposes of said act, as amended, and the act of April 28, 1947 (Public Law 40, 80th Cong.), an act providing for a 6 months' extension and final liquidation of the farm labor supply program; and, in addition to the amount continued available, there is hereby appropriated for such purposes the sum of $6,000,000 to be merged with the funds hereby continued available. Not less than $2,400,000 of such additional funds shall be apportioned among the several States in the manner and for the purposes specified in section 2 of the Farm Labor Supply Appropriation Act, 1944. In addition to the amounts heretofore made available for administrative expenses pursuant to section 3 of such act, there is hereby made available out of said funds the sum of $300,000 for such purposes: Provided, That not to exceed $310,000 of the total funds remaining as of January 30, 1948, shall be available until June 30, 1948, for administrative and other expenses, including personal services in the District of Columbia, incident to the settlement of growers' and workers' contracts and accounts, the collection of reimbursements due the Government, the payment of transportation and other obligations outstanding, and the handling of other necessary fiscal and administrative work in the final liquidation and disposition of Government assets and liabilities under the program: Provided further, That not to exceed $500,000 of the receipts derived from sales of labor supply centers, labor homes, labor camps, and facilities under the provisions of section 2 (d) of the act of August 14, 1946 (Public Law 731), as amended, shall be available for the payment of costs of the liquidation of such labor supply centers, labor homes, labor camps, and facilities, including personal services in the District of Columbia, and any appropriations or other funds from which such costs have been advanced may be reimbursed therefor from any such receipts, the net proceeds of such sales to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TABER moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the said amendment insert the following:

"FARM LABOR SUPPLY PROGRAM

"Supply and distribution of farm labor: The funds provided by the Farm Labor Supply Appropriation Act, 1944, as amended and supplemented, are hereby continued available through January 30, 1948, for carrying out the purposes of said act, as amended, and the act of April 28, 1947 (Public, No. 40, 80th Cong.), an act providing for a 6 months' extension and final liquidation of the farm labor supply program; and, in addition to the amount continued available, there is hereby appropriated for such purposes the sum of $5,000,000 to be merged with the funds hereby continued available. Not less than $2,000,000 of such additional funds shall be apportioned among the several States in the manner and for the purposes specified in section 2 of the Farm Labor Supply Appropriation Act, 1944. In addition to the amounts heretofore made available for administrative expenses pursuant to section 3 of such act, there is hereby made available out of said funds the sum of $250,000 for such purposes: Provided, That not to exceed $258,500 of the total funds remaining as of January 30, 1948, shall be available until June 30, 1948, for administrative and other expenses, including personal services in the District of Columbia, incident to the settlement of growers' and workers' contracts and accounts, the collection of reimbursements due the Government, the payment of transportation and other obligations outstanding, and the handling of other necessary fiscal and administrative work in the final liquidation and disposition of Government assets and liabilities under the program: Provided further, That not to exceed $500,000 of the receipts derived from sales of labor supply centers, labor homes, labor camps, and facilities under the provisions of section 2 (d) of the act of August 14, 1946 (Public, No. 731), as amended, shall be available for the payment of costs of the liquidation of such labor supply centers, labor homes, labor camps, and facilities, including personal services in the District of Columbia, and any appropriations or other funds from which such costs have been advanced may be reimbursed therefor from any such receipts, the net proceeds of such sales to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the votes by which action was taken on the several motions was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MACKINNON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include a newspaper article and a letter.

Mr. WOODRUFF asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Mr. O'Donnell.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

PROVIDING SUPPORT FOR WOOL

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 214 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for consideration of the bill (S. 814) to provide support for wool, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 3 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider without the intervention of any point of order the amendments recommended by the Committee on Agriculture now printed in the bill; and it shall also be in order to consider without the intervention of any point of order as a substitute for the committee amendment beginning in line 14, page 3, and ending on page 6, line 11, the language appearing in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page A2379. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes at this time and also yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. Speaker, the adoption of this resolution will make in order the immediate consideration of S. 814, a bill to provide support for wool.

The House Committee on Agriculture has amended all but two sections of the Senate bill and it is the Senate bill which we will consider upon the adoption of the rule. In addition to these amendments already printed in the bill, as reported by the House Committee on Agriculture, a substitute amendment will be offered from the floor to section 4 of the bill.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and thirty-four Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 62]

Allen, Ill.	Goff	Morrison
Bender	Grant, Ala.	Norrell
Bennett, Mich.	Gwinn, N. Y.	Patman

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 350 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN asked and was given permission to include in his remarks a clipping from yesterday's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

PROVIDING SUPPORT FOR WOOL

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, the adoption of this resolution will make in order the immediate consideration of the bill S. 814, which has been labeled a bill to provide support for wool.

The House Committee on Agriculture has amended all but two sections of the Senate bill. In addition to these amendments, which are already printed in the bill as reported by the House Committee on Agriculture, a substitute amendment will be offered from the floor to section 4 of the bill. This substitute amendment, which has been proposed and agreed to by the House Committee on Agriculture, will bring wool within the purview of section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. This amendment appears at page A2379 of the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

In view of the many changes which have been made in the bill there is, of course, an obvious necessity for waiving points of order not only on the remaining sections of the bill but on the amendments made by the House Committee on Agriculture now in the bill and also the substitute amendment for section 4, which will be offered from the floor by the Committee on Agriculture. The rule provides for 3 hours of general debate, with the usual opportunity for the Members to offer amendments to the bill under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. Speaker, as the Members of the House know, there have been a lot of changes in connection with this proposed legislation. I am bold enough to make the statement here and now, based upon the testimony that came to the Committee on Rules from the members of the Committee on Agriculture, that unless this legislation or some similar legislation is passed you might just as well write off once and for all the sheep industry of this country.

There just is not any question about that. In other words, you are going to determine today whether or not this great sheep industry that we have had in this country since the beginning of time is to be another casualty and that from now on the sheep industry and the wool industry will be relegated to some of our foreign neighbors.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIZLEY. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. As a matter of fact, is it not true that wool certainly is one of the strategic materials and is necessary for this country? Hence, to stand by and see the sheep and wool industry destroyed in this country is absolutely unthinkable.

Mr. RIZLEY. Absolutely. The gentleman is correct and has very clearly stated the situation.

It may be that for the present at least we are safe in depending entirely on imports of wool from foreign countries, but there may come a time when wool will be just as strategic a material as any of these other materials that we needed during the war.

As one Member of Congress I just cannot bring myself to the point of saying that we are going to permit this great industry to be liquidated.

Here are some of the basic facts in connection with the sheep and wool industry today. The Department of Agriculture reports show that the stock sheep population of this country has dropped from 49,807,000 in 1942 to 32,542,000 head today. This represents a reduction of 35 percent.

Our sheep population is the lowest today in the United States since 1897. That is 50 years ago. The Department of Agriculture reports that the production of wool has dropped from 459,073,000 pounds in 1942 to 300,000,000 pounds today. That is a reduction of 35 percent.

The main reason for the decline in the sheep population is lack of profit. A report by the United States Tariff Commission after an extended study of the sheep industry shows that the wool growers of this country lost 9½ cents on every pound of wool produced in 1946. That is from the Tariff Commission, which made the study and this report.

To repeat, the wool growers in this country lost 9½ cents on every pound of wool produced in 1946 and a somewhat higher figure in the two preceding years. The report from the Tariff Commission further shows that the wool growers sustained a loss of $1.19 per head on sheep in 1946 and a somewhat higher amount in the two preceding years.

Here is what happened. The day after Pearl Harbor the United States froze the price of domestic wool at the OPA ceiling price. That price has remained the same during the war and up to the present time, and there will be no increase under this bill. While the price of domestic wool has remained fixed from Pearl Harbor to date, it is true from September 15, 1941, to Pearl Harbor wool has increased 13.2 percent. Accordingly, since September 15, 1941, to September 15, 1946, wool prices have increased 13.2 percent, but 24 other agricultural commodities have increased an average of 91 percent during the same period. It has been contended that wool is selling at an all-time high, but the facts show that the 1946 Boston price of fine combing wool was 34 percent less than the 1920 price, 18 percent less than the price in 1923 and 1924, and 8 percent less than the average price from 1922 to 1928, inclusive. Most of the western wools are fine combing wool.

Great Britain and her dominions produce most of the world's supply of wool, and at the war's end, faced with a tremendous stock pile of wool, they formed a joint organization in order to protect their wool industry by orderly liquidation of their stock pile of over 2,000,000,000 pounds. This joint organization controls 85 percent of the world's apparel wool supply and it has the power to lower prices at will. During 1946 over 1,000,000,000 pounds of wool was consumed in this country, and more than 80 percent of that was foreign wool. Last year 819,253,000 pounds of the 1,000,000,000 pounds of wool used in this country was imported into this country.

So I say it is a fair statement to say that we are either going to do something in this bill or some other bill to protect the sheep and wool industry of this country or else we write it off once and for all. Some people say we should do that. Some people say we should have a policy of eliminating the sheep and wool industry; that we cannot, under our American system, compete with other countries in labor and the other things that are necessarily included in the cost of producing wool in this country, and that we should consider this industry as a casualty and write it off once and for all. I cannot subscribe to that thinking and that philosophy.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. RIZLEY] has again expired.

Mr. RIZLEY. I yield myself two additional minutes.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIZLEY. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman has made a statement with reference to the necessity for the enactment of some sort of legislation to protect the sheep and wool industry. I will ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that that necessity was precipitated by action of the Department of Agriculture in terminating the program on April 15 last.

Mr. RIZLEY. I was just about to come to that. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. HALLECK. I would like to inquire further. Assuming the necessity for the protection of the sheep and wool industry of this country, having regard to the competition of imports from foreign countries, does the gentleman know of any way to afford that protection except, first, a subsidy by the Federal Treasury or, second, adequate tariff protection for the domestic wool produced?

Mr. RIZLEY. The gentleman has stated the case correctly. We will either subsidize the industry, as the gentleman mentioned, or else we will try to do as we are doing in this bill, amend section 22 of the Agriculture Adjustment Act, so as to attempt to protect it in that manner and thus get away from subsidies.

Mr. HALLECK. Do I understand correctly that section 22 is in existing law, passed some time ago, applicable to other commodities?

Mr. RIZLEY. The gentleman is correct. Cotton and wheat, two other products in this country, are being protected under section 22 at the present time. In this bill it is proposed to bring wool within the purview of section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

Mr. HALLECK. Is it true that the use of section 22, applying it to wool, is in an effort to avoid subsidies out of the Federal Treasury?

Mr. RIZLEY. Yes, sir; to the tune of probably fifty or one hundred million dollars a year.

To summarize, Mr. Speaker, the bill as now proposed by the committee provides:

First. That the Commodity Credit Corporation will continue its purchase program until December 31, 1948, at the 1946 price, which, as I have indicated, has not changed since Pearl Harbor. That price is less than parity.

Second. It authorizes the Commodity Credit Corporation to sell its wool at competitive prices with foreign wool. This will enable the United States to dispose of its stock pile.

Third. Amend existing law by adding wool to other commodities under section 22 of the AAA Act and thus provide that, if imports of foreign wool tend to materially interfere with the wool program, the President may require the Tariff Commission to make a study, and after a hearing, if the President finds such to be the fact, he is required to impose such fees on imports as may be necessary to correct the situation.

I am convinced that the provisions of the wool bill are sound and necessary to provide for the sale of the Government stock pile and in order to protect the American sheep industry from further liquidation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has again expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Oklahoma has explained the rule. I therefore will not take up the time of the House discussing it. He has also tried to explain the underlying reason for this legislation on the theory that if not enacted the sheep growers and wool growers will be driven out of business. I shall devote my remarks for a few minutes to this aspect of the legislation.

I do not want to be guilty of driving any industry out of business. My aim at all times is to aid industry. I am afraid however that the figures cited by the gentleman from Oklahoma a few minutes ago do not correspond with the actual figures on profits made by sheep and wool growers—but I do not blame him for the discrepancy.

FIGURES SHOW PRICES DOUBLED

I have some figures here myself, Mr. Speaker, which show how prices on sheep have more than doubled since 1940, prices on lamb chops have exactly doubled, and prices on wool and yarn have greatly increased in the same period.

First, I give you figures on sheep:

All sheep, including stock and feeder sheep

FARM VALUE

Year:	Per head
1940	$6.30
1941	6.73
1942	8.60
1943	9.68
1944	8.72
1945	8.58
1946	9.69
1947	12.63

Next I insert the prices per 100 pounds received by farmers for lambs in those years:

Lamb prices

Average annual price per 100 pounds received by farmers:
1940	$8.10
1941	9.58
1942	11.74
1943	12.96
1944	12.50
1945	13.00
1946	[1] 15.40
1947	[1] 19.47
1940	10.36
1941	12.24
1942	16.42
1943	15.35
1944	15.55
1945	14.71
1946	[1] 19.70
1947	[2] 22.87

[1] May to November 1946.
[2] December to April 1947.

Now I give you the retail price of lamb loin chops; these are the average prices you, as consumers, have paid and are now paying:

Retail price, lamb loin chops

	Per pound
1940	$0.405
1941	.43
1942	.555
1943	.565
1944	.585
1945	.60
1946	.735
1947 (April)	.81

And now, finally, Mr. Speaker, as to wool prices, in 1940 the wholesale price of wool on the Boston market was around 95 cents. At the present time it is $1.15 and above parity. Wool yarn that in 1940 brought $1.34 wholesale now brings $1.95 a pound, as shown in the following table:

Wool prices

	Cents
Average price per pound received by farmers:
1940	28.3
1941	35.5
1942	40.1
1943	41.6
1944	42.4
1945	41.9
1946	42.3
1947 [1]	40.5
Wholesale wool prices per pound, Boston:
1940	$0.963
1941	1.08
1942	1.19
1943	1.178
1944	1.19
1945	1.17
1946	1.26
1947 [1]	1.15
Wholesale wool yarn price per pound, Boston:
1940	1.34
1941	1.64
1942	1.80
1943	1.80
1944	1.85
1945	1.90
1946	1.90
1947 [1]	1.95

[1] First 3 months 1947.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Briefly.

Mr. BARRETT. I contacted the Department of Agriculture on this subject and they told me that wool is now below parity. Parity is 42.3, and the purchase program is 41.5.

MANUFACTURERS' PROFITS UP IN CLOUDS

Mr. SABATH. They ask us to consider the poor manufacturers, the unfortunate, hard-pressed manufacturers. The American Woolen Co. in 1940 made $3,000,000. In 1946 their profit was $20,000,000.

The Pacific Mills Co. lost $348,000 in 1940, but in 1946 they had a profit of $9,502,000.

The Botany Worsted Mills, at Passaic, N. J., had a profit of $527,000 in 1940, but last year had a profit of $3,802,000.

The Cleveland Worsted Mills, which had a profit of $585,000 in 1940, now has a profit of $3,457,000.

FIGURES PROVE RISE IN PROFITS

Here are some actual figures showing how the profits of the manufacturers have grown from year to year since 1940:

Profits, woolen manufacturers

American Woolen Co., New York City:
1940	$3,154,464
1941	6,943,886

SHEEP AND WOOL INDUSTRY NOT DESTROYED

The same ratios would apply to other manufacturers. In the face of these figures on the increased prices of sheep and lambs, of wool, and of wool products, and of the constantly rising profits of processors, I do not see how it can be said that either the sheep industry or the woolen industry is being driven out of the market or out of business.

I understand, of course, the underlying reason of this bill, and I do not blame some of the "woolen" people for trying to come in under the act that has been so kind to wheat, corn, cotton, and other commodities; they want to come in under price support and be guaranteed, safeguarded, and protected. The trouble is—and I have pointed this out before—that because of the tremendously high prices in this country we are losing foreign markets.

BRITISH UNDERSELL AMERICANS

The gentleman from Oklahoma said, and it is true, that from 75 to 80 percent of the consumption of wool comes from wool imported from the British combine because they have been underselling us by two or three dollars.

If we do not continue to support the price and it is way above the price of foreign wool, how will we get rid of our surplus? We have on hand all of 460,000,000 pounds of wool. Why? Because the manufacturers—these patriotic gentlemen who have increased their profits by millions—would not buy American wool. They would buy foreign wool because they could buy it much cheaper but outside of that I think the legislation is unfortunate due to the fact it will affect our international position that has stood us so well. I believe we should do nothing that might destroy our reciprocal trade-agreement set-up or that will hamper our efforts to safeguard our exports. Of course, at this time our exports are 10 times as great as imports. But how long will that continue?

Let us look to the future. Let us be wise and take into consideration what may develop.

In that connection, Mr. Speaker, I fully appreciate there are some gentlemen who are extremely sincere and honest, like my colleague from Utah [Mr. GRANGER], who feels it is necessary that this legislation pass. Well, he represents certain interests in his district. He has always done it and with his ability, determination and courage, he has of course succeeded in serving his people well. I think, however, there is such a thing as asking for more than our country can well stand.

CONSUMERS SHOULD BE CONSIDERED

I feel that we should take into consideration not only the sheep growers who have made a lot of money, the wool growers, the wool manufacturers and these people who deal in wool, but we should consider the consumers of our own country. We should determine what it costs and what it will cost us in the future if we do the same thing that we have done for wheat and these other commodities. The poor consumer who is obliged to foot these bills is entitled to some consideration because today, in my opinion, the prices charged consumers for woolen articles are so high most people cannot afford to buy and this will restrict their buying further.

Consideration should be given, before the vote is taken, on the amendment and the substitute that have been agreed upon by the steering committee of the Republican Party, the amendments which the chairman of the Rules Committee came in and stated have been agreed on. There was no meeting of the committee; nevertheless, I presume he is acting for the committee and the committee, of course, will not question his action. Nor have I any proof it was the steering committee. It might have been the advisory committee or some other committee that prepared the substitute for the amendment that he finally suggested will be offered on the floor of the House.

AMENDMENT PUTS POWER IN PRESIDENT'S HANDS

Now, that amendment eliminates the arbitrary power given in the original bill to the Secretary of Agriculture, and it provides that the matter should be submitted to the Tariff Commission for investigation, and when the Tariff Commission reports, that the President has jurisdiction then to act in accordance with the recommendations of the Tariff Commission.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield for a question, please.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. What part of the bill does the gentleman object to? Does he object to giving the President power to control the situation so far as wool is concerned that he already has on these other commodities?

Mr. SABATH. No; I do not object to that provision at all.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Then, what provision does the gentleman object to?

Mr. SABATH. There are several other provisions in there that will be explained later on more fully than I can by those gentlemen who have the facts. They have heard the evidence. I have not. All I have heard was the evidence of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and perhaps one or two other Members, and they did not have the chance to get all the information that I felt I was entitled to. But, I believe the House will get that information from those who favor the bill as well as from those who are opposed to it.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, the gentleman would not like to leave the impression with the Members of this House that he would be in favor of putting embargoes on tobacco-seed exports, an embargo on cotton imports, and an embargo on wheat imports, and then stand up here and tell us that it is sinful to provide some machinery to protect the wool growers of this country, does he?

Mr. SABATH. I want the wool growers to get the same treatment as every other person, but not at the expense of the country and at the expense of the future of our country.

In that connection, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed out of order now for 5 minutes.

STOCK EXCHANGE MANIPULATION

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, it is conceded by all that the country is prosperous; that manufacturers and the people are making more money; that business is better and more people are employed than ever before. It is also known to all that profits are greater than ever before. Within the last few days it has been said by certain gentlemen that retail business is sloughing off. I have competent figures showing that retail business was from 4 up to 14 percent higher throughout the country in the first quarter of this year than it was in the palmy days of 1945 and 1946. So, every indication points to a prosperous year and years to come.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I cannot yield now. If the gentleman will listen to me he will agree with me that something must be done that I will call attention to.

Mr. BARRETT. I think the gentleman would agree with me if he would yield.

GAMBLERS HAMMERING SECURITIES

Mr. SABATH. Notwithstanding these prosperous conditions and good business, and increased profits and dividends being paid, a certain few professional gamblers have started out to hammer the price of stocks and bonds down until today the prices of some outstanding issues of corporations have been driven down more than 50 percent, far below the actual value—not that I am encouraging any one to buy, but I want to call your attention to that fact because it is a matter that I have studied for a good many years.

In 1929 I called attention to the fact that if we did not stop the manipulators, the short sellers, and the gamblers on the New York Stock Exchange and other exchanges we were likely to have a crash in this country.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think the gentleman's statement that there has been a 50-percent reduction in the value of stocks is very tolerant. I think the gentleman will find that between election day of last year and now the decrease of market values of many stocks has been nearer 75 percent, when everybody expected that after the election the stock market would go up. We now have a most unusual situation, in which many stocks have gone off nearly 75 percent. It must certainly bring an awful lot of disappointment to hundreds of thousands of owners of stocks in various companies in the country to have seen the value of their stocks wiped out anywhere from 60 to 75 percent.

Mr. SABATH. I thank the gentleman, who is always so well-informed, for his observation.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BUSBEY. With reference to the increase of 14 percent in the value of the retail business of this country——

Mr. SABATH. From 5 to 14 percent.

Mr. BUSBEY. Is that in volume of merchandise or based on the inflated Roosevelt dollar?

Mr. SABATH. Again the gentleman is trying to bring in a little politics. It is not an inflated dollar.

Mr. BUSBEY. I take it that the gentleman from Massachusetts did not bring in any politics.

FEARS REPETITION OF 1929

Mr. SABATH. When he does he brings out facts and figures. He corrected my statement. I was too low, and I deliberately was low because I did not wish to magnify the losses.

Mr. BUSBEY. I was just trying to bring out the fact——

Mr. SABATH. I cannot yield further.

Mr. Speaker, I am fearful that the same thing that took place in 1929, '30, '31, and '32 will occur again unless we put a stop to the activities of these few outrageous men, these few who gamble with the prosperity and the future of our Nation.

The SPEAKER. The period for which the gentleman was given permission to proceed out of order has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for five additional minutes.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, we have legislation to consider here this afternoon, but if the gentleman is going to make a political speech we ought to give him a lot of time to do that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. If I did not honestly and sincerely believe that it is of great importance, I would not have asked to speak out of order.

BROUGHT UP QUESTION LAST SEPTEMBER

Mr. Speaker, last September, a month after adjournment when the market was strongly attacked by bear interests and stocks fell off sharply without any good reason, I asked the Securities and Exchange Commission to look into the situation, and I ask unanimous consent at this time to insert letters exchanged with officials of the Securities and Exchange Commission then and also in the last week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. Speaker, I first sent the following telegram, just as I was leaving Washington:

SEPTEMBER 4, 1946.

Hon. JAMES J. CAFFREY,
Chairman, Securities and Exchange Commission, Philadelphia, Pa.:

In the light of current developments I feel you should ascertain immediately, so that the country may be informed, the names of all those who are selling stocks short and if officers of corporations are thus disposing of their stock in those firms.

A. J. SABATH,
Member of Congress.

Mr. Caffrey replied at once as follows:

SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION,
Philadelphia, Pa., September 4, 1946.

Hon. A. J. SABATH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN SABATH: This is to acknowledge receipt of your telegram of September 4 relating to current developments in the stock market. You suggest that the Commission ascertain the names of all those who are selling stocks short and whether officers of corporations are thus disposing of the securities of the firms by which they are employed.

Please be advised that as a matter of routine the Commission gathers a great deal of information about the stock market. Of necessity there is a short time lag between actual occurrences in the market and the time when the Commission has possession of an adequate amount of information in order to perform its duties under the statutes which it administers. Although in the course of gathering this information we will not obtain the names of all of the persons who have sold stocks short during the recent decline, we will in certain selected key stocks obtain the names of significant short sellers. Whether publicity will be given to such information will depend upon its nature. If we discover that violations of law have occurred, the Commission will take appropriate action, which may include the institution of criminal proceedings. In this event, of course, publicity would be given to the names of the persons involved.

As you are undoubtedly aware, the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 provides that all officers, directors, and 10-percent stockholders of registered companies must report to the Commission all purchases and sales made by them of the equity securities of such companies. These reports are made public and their contents are widely disseminated through the daily press. Moreover, section 16 (c) of that statute provides that it is unlawful for any such persons to sell short the stocks of the corporations which they so serve. On the basis of experience with past declines in the stock market, it is extremely unlikely that there has been any short selling by persons in the categories enumerated above. Certainly if such short sales have taken place, they will be few in number and not in sufficient volume to account for the sharp break in yesterday's market.

Please be assured that the Commission is at all times cognizant of its responsibilities to American investors, and for that reason it continually informs itself concerning the character of trading in securities. Such activity has enabled the Commission in the past not only to prosecute persons who have been guilty of manipulating the market for individual stocks, but has also led to the adoption of rules regulating the conduct of persons generally. Thus, on the basis of information obtained, the Commission in the past has promulgated rules covering such matters as short selling; and has influenced the stock exchanges to adopt rules of their own limiting the activities of specialists, floor traders and others.

Permit me to recall to you that the Commission's short-selling rule prohibits anyone from selling a registered security short except at a price which is above the last different sale price for the particular security. The effect of this rule is to impose numerous restrictions upon short sellers when our markets are rising, but to restrict severely their short sales during periods of decline. I feel sure that this rule in operation has greatly tempered market declines such as that which occurred yesterday and that short selling played no significant part therein.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES J. CAFFREY,
Chairman.

Then on September 12, 1946, Mr. Speaker, I addressed the following lengthy letter to Mr. Caffrey, which I most respectfully ask all gentlemen here to read:

MY DEAR MR. CAFFREY: Thank you for your prompt answer on September 4 to my telegram of the same date.

I appreciate the points you make.

Nevertheless, I remain unconvinced on several major possibilities in the sustained break in the securities markets of recent weeks: I suspect that political motivations and implications are a factor; but I believe that short selling pressure is a major factor. I do not believe that any simple and superficial theory can explain the continued hammering of leading industrials largely exempt from the easy reasoning of many apologists for Wall Street.

Speculative trading in securities is a sterile economic process. No wealth is produced. No substantial contribution is made to the general economic welfare. Under the wise legislation adopted by Democratic administrations which created the Federal Reserve System and the Securities and Exchange Commission, supervision and controls of trading, banking, and credit facilities have, I believe, provided a cushion against the shock of wild market fluctuations against the national economy. Even so, the shock remains and can be felt.

The repeated assaults on the securities of sound, flourishing, well-managed companies, at a time when every economic barometer suggests a long and sustained period of high production, high earnings, high employment, and high return on legitimate investments, cannot be rationalized away in simple terms of emotion.

Since my telegram to you, and your answer, I have been deluged with letters, telegrams, and telephone calls, most of them sustaining my position.

I trust that the routine studies of the Securities and Exchange Commission will take full cognizance of all the pertinent factors; in the absence of some assurance from you of comprehensive studies of stock movements in the last two months I shall feel impelled to urge the necessity of a complete investigation by the House Banking and Currency Committee as soon as the Congress convenes.

Without pretending to offer a comprehensive list of all those factors, I should like to draw to your attention certain fields which would seem to justify special study:

1. The extent to which a deliberate desire to effect the outcome of the November elections by artifically disturbing the national economy played a part in the heavy selling climaxed by the present slump; and, as a corollary, whether this was part of a campaign to remove margin limitations.

2. Careful examination to determine if any violation of law or of regulation occurred through short selling in prohibited categories.

3. Careful examination to determine if any violations of Federal Reserve margin rules through prohibited bank loans for speculative stock purchases on margin occurred, with consequent unsettling of the market by forced liquidation of margin accounts.

4. The extent, if any, to which operations from foreign accounts, particularly from areas where gold differentials favor speculative activity in the American market, adversely affected the market here, and whether it is wise or feasible to devise legislative or regulatory safeguards in this field.

5. The extent to which odd-lot trading, not reportable as short selling under present rules, adversely affected the market, with a detailed study of practices in this field, and whether or not it is wise or feasible to devise legislation, or regulations under existing law, for additional safeguards.

I should like to amplify this last paragraph. The borrowing of stock by odd-lot dealers to fulfill commitments, the substantial profits accruing from such practices both to odd-lot and round-lot houses (but not to the customer, who gains nothing and may lose substantially), and the constant danger to a stabilized market from the speculative nature of odd-lot transactions, make these practices a matter of practical concern to the American public and clothe them with public interest. A completely stable market is, of course, no market, where profits depend principally on speculative buying and selling, and as long as stock exchanges exist I am not proposing that they be so regulated and regimented that no business can be done.

I am suggesting that existing regulations and the organic law under which they are promulgated constitute a fairly effective hedge against the wild speculative fluctuations characteristic of the boom-and-bust philosophy of the Republican Party insofar as round-lot sales are concerned; but those very regulations have encouraged the growth of volume of odd-lot transactions because in that field there is wider freedom and less publicity.

In the nature of their operations, odd-lot traders must be long or short of the market. Their profits depend, not on commissions alone, but on actual trading with other peoples' shares. I am not overlooking the large capital required for odd-lot operations; the capital required is so large, in fact, that there is a virtual monopoly in the field which might well be examined by the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

It would seem that the practice of borrowing shares of stock and the payment of premiums for its use, without the personal knowledge of the bona fide owner of the stock, would justify the most careful scrutiny of the SEC with a view to possible regulation or prohibition; at the same time, a very heavy volume of odd-lot trading, in proportion to total transaction—sometimes amounting to 40 percent or more in an active day—and the relatively invisible nature of such trading, which is inherently short of the market, make it imperative that the whole system of old-lot brokerage should be carefully examined.

It seems to me a virtual certainty that urgent selling by odd-lot traders in order to cover short-sale commitments was a major factor in the sharp decline of exchange prices, and the timing makes it equally probable that the whole system of odd-lot brokerage should be carefully examined.

Because I believe that the American people deserve to be fully informed, I am making this letter public. I shall look forward with anticipation to your reply.

Sincerely yours,

A. J. SABATH.

In the meantime I had received scores of letters, most of them applauding my position, although a few were very abusive. Then under date of September 18, 1946, I received the following letter from Mr. Caffrey:

SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION,
Philadelphia, Pa., September 18, 1946.

The Honorable A. J. SABATH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SABATH: This is to acknowledge receipt of your letters dated September 12, 1946.

As you are aware, the general averages in securities prices have been going lower since the end of last May. Pursuant to our statutory duty and our established practice, since that time the Commission has continued to make comprehensive studies or market movements and has been assembling the pertinent facts relating to the market, and has made detailed examinations into the trading in numerous individual securities.

At all times we keep informed concerning the various factors which may influence our securities markets. Our staff constantly studies general business and economic conditions and regularly gathers information relating to the activity of various groups in the markets and the identity of the persons who by their trading may have an important influence on prices. The detail with which this information is gathered and assembled varies with the current activity of the markets.

As soon as the recent sharp declines occurred following Labor Day, we extend our studies and surveys. Since then we have received communications from many persons throughout the country, including yourself, making suggestions concerning various matters into which we should inquire. Please be assured that we will give all the suggestions received our most careful consideration.

I appreciate your interest in sending me your own suggestions and those made to you in the enclosures accompanying your letter, which I herewith return to you as requested.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES J. CAFFREY,
Chairman.

RENEWED REQUEST TO SEC LAST WEEK

It has been my hope, Mr. Speaker, that this House, even with the present majority, would feel moved to direct a study by an appropriate committee, and I have been prepared to turn over to any such committee any or all of my files if requested. That hope has not, of course, been realized, and meanwhile the stock market has continued in a steady downward trend at a time when there appears to be no sound reason.

I had already become concerned, and telephoned the Securities and Exchange Commission in Philadelphia last Friday asking for information on the volume and effect of short sales on the stock market at the present time. The reply, which I insert at this point, was extremely interesting and to some extent reassuring:

UNITED STATES SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION,
Philadelphia, Pa., May 19, 1947.

Hon. ADOLPH J. SABATH,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN SABATH: Concerning your inquiry in regard to short selling, I enclose a tabulation showing the total New York Stock Exchange short position, monthly, since January 1944, excluding short positions of odd-lot dealers. I have included the number of issues involved. You will also find enclosed a tabulation of round-lot stock transactions on the New York Stock Exchange for each week of 1947 through the week ended May 3, which is the last week for which we have received a report. This tabulation gives short sales as well as total sales in several member categories and also for nonmembers.

As you are aware, section 10 (a) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 makes it unlawful for any person to effect short sales using the facilities of a national securities exchange in contravention of rules and regulations of this Commission. I am sending you a copy of our general rules and regulations, and refer you specifically to rule X-10A-1. In general, this rule requires that short sales take place only at a price above the next preceding different price. The Commission's rule does not specifically cover short sales of odd lots and it has been our experience that the volume of short selling by such means is so nominal that it has not appeared to us that a rule dealing with odd lots has been necessary. Moreover, by the rules of the New York Stock Exchange, all members of the exchange are forbidden to sell short in odd lots except at a price higher than the next preceding different price, so that the same prohibitions governing short sales in round lots are in effect as to members whenever they deal in odd lots.

I am very much interested in your belief that there is a sizeable quantity of short selling over the counter in odd lots in listed stocks. It would be greatly appreciated if you would give me copies of any reports you may have in this matter. This Commission's inspections of over-the-counter dealers indicate that such dealers at times have temporary short positions. However, I have no reason to believe that the aggregate of such short sales over the counter is very large.

Please call upon me promptly if I can supply any further facts or figures.

Very truly yours,

JAMES A. TREANOR, Jr.,
Director.

ASKS STOP TO SHORT SALES

Meanwhile, Mr. Speaker, before having received this reply from Mr. Treanor to my telephone request, I had become more and more concerned by the declines, and I addressed the following communications to Mr. James J. Caffrey, chairman of SEC, and Mr. Emil Schram, president of the New York Stock Exchange:

MAY 19, 1947.

Hon. JAMES J. CAFFREY,
Chairman, Securities and Exchange Commission,
Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR MR. CAFFREY: Why has the stock exchange been permitted to repeat the vicious practices that brought about the crash and ruin of the Nation in 1929, when the income of the country last year was the greatest in history, reaching $165,000,000,000 and when the country is generally prosperous and production, employment, crops, and profits are at their highest peak?

The stock exchange in 1929 failed to act upon my plea to stop short selling and brought about the stock market collapse and enactment of the Securities and Exchange Act to restrict dishonest and destructive manipulations in stock transactions. Today it appears that a small group of operators is again permitted to sell stocks short that they do not own to force prices down and to repurchase the stocks later at greatly reduced prices to the detriment and loss to millions of investors and endangerment of the country's prosperity. That this is done by a few professional short sellers, brokers and inside men is beyond question, because, on the other hand, the professionals in the grain market, despite the greatest crop in history, have boosted the price of grains to nearly $1 a bushel and on wheat, corn, barley, and rye from $1.50 to $2 a bushel. Quite frequently, in one week, more grain is sold than is grown in an entire year.

I respectfully ask that the Commission check the transactions of all big short sellers for the past 60 days, the stocks they sold short and the number of shares they are now short on all issues; also the transactions of floor traders, specialists, over-the-counter and odd-lot traders. I also desire to be informed as to the number of foreign short sellers, and the number of shares bought and sold for them during the past 60 days. I will also appreciate your advices as to whether any steps have been taken by the Commission to stop these manipulative activities.

For your information I enclose a copy of a telegram which I addressed today to Mr. Emil Schram, president of the New York Stock Exchange. If it is not known to you, you should ascertain how your regulations are being evaded by the methods of private loansharks on loans on listed stocks.

Sincerely yours,

A. J. SABATH,
Member of Congress.

MAY 19, 1947.

Mr. EMIL SCHRAM,
President, New York Stock Exchange,
New York City:

Nearly all corporations show increase in their business and profits above the banner years of 1945 and 1946 and country's income last year was one hundred and sixty-five billion and estimated one hundred and seventy-five billion for 1947, which will be four and one-half times greater than in 1932. Country is generally prosperous and production, employment, crops, and profits are at highest peak and, notwithstanding publicity given out by professional and short-selling groups and a few publicists that business is sluffing off, the record shows that retail sales for the first quarter of 1947 have increased from 5 percent to 14 percent throughout the country. Consequently, in view of all these favorable indications, the public cannot understand why the prices of many stocks have been hammered down almost one-half since November while nearly all companies are showing greater profits and paying higher dividends than ever before. I feel that the board should immediately stop all wash transactions, broker stock loans, and short selling, and if that cannot be done then the immediate raising of margins to 100 percent should be effectuated.

A. J. SABATH,
Member of Congress.

EVEN SMALL VOLUME OF SHORT SALES ADVERSELY AFFECTS MARKET

However, in spite of assurances that the total volume of short sales is relatively small and cannot materially affect the market, I remain unconvinced.

The contention by defenders of short sales that the short sale of a few thousand shares of stock cannot have much influence on the market when there are over a billion shares outstanding simply does not stand up to analysis or experience, because it is obvious that the repeated sales of a few thousands of shares in even a limited number of firms has a cumulative effect much greater than the transactions of a single day.

A careful reading of my communications of September 12, 1946, to the SEC and of May 19 to SEC and the stock exchange must convince any fair-minded person that short selling by speculators, insiders, and professional traders, whether in round lots or odd lots, is detrimental and destructive, and that we should for all time put an end to letting people sell something they do not own.

This matter is of such importance and of so great moment, I repeat, that it should be stopped, or at least most severely restricted; otherwise we may experience the same tragic experience into which we were pushed by speculators in 1929—an experience of which I do not wish to remind you, and from which it took 4 years for the country to become strong enough even to begin the slow climb back to prosperity.

GAMBLERS PRODUCE NOTHING

Were it not for the fact that the President is absent from Washington due to the illness of his wonderful mother, I should have taken this matter up with him, for I feel that the safety and security of our country is now at stake. I have, meanwhile, communicated with the Attorney General, and have called his attention to the dangerous condition which is developing, in which a small coterie of avaricious and irresponsible manipulators, who can sell thousands and thousands of shares of stocks they do not own. might easily precipitate another disastrous decline. These are ice-blooded stock gamblers who produce nothing, but are experts at destruction. Please remember that the panics of 1893, 1907, 1921, and 1929 were brought about by the same influences now operating again.

SHORT SALES INCREASING

I have risen now to warn Members of this danger because in yesterday's Wall Street Journal there is an article indicating that the short interest in the market is rising steadily, rapidly, and dangerously. Short sales increased by almost 300,000 shares in the last 30 days. Please understand that I claim no credit for the publicity given this increased short selling, nor to the fact that short sales have been to some extent checked and that stocks rose up to 3 points following my appeal to the exchange and the Securities and Exchange Commission. That all may read I insert here the article from the Wall Street Journal of Wednesday, May 21, to which I have referred:

SHORT INTEREST RISES ON STOCK EXCHANGE IN MONTH TO MAY 15—POSITION AT 1,314,391 SHARES, AN INCREASE OF 295,760 OVER APRIL 15

The short interest on the New York Stock Exchange at the close of business on the May 15, 1947, settlement date was 1,314,391 shares. This was an increase of 295,760 shares over the 1,018,631 shares on April 15, 1947. The totals exclude short positions carried in the odd-lot accounts of all odd-lot dealers. As of the May 15, 1947, settlement date, the total short interest in all odd-lot dealers' accounts was 64,007 shares, compared with 53,866 shares on April 15, 1947.

Of the 1,351 individual stock issues listed on the exchange on May 15, 1947, there were 79 issues in which a short interest of 5,000 or more shares existed, or in which a change in the short position of 2,000 or more shares occurred during the month. These totals, which exclude all odd-lot dealers' short positions, were:

SAME GAMBLING IN GRAINS

I may say that the same type of gambling activities are carried on in the commodity exchanges where a small combine of traders, none of whom ever raised a bushel of grain or a bale of cotton, and in spite of restrictive rules designed to keep artificial fluctuations to a minimum, may sell in the course of a day or a few days more wheat, corn, rye, and cotton than is grown in a whole year. Last year they took advantage of the legislative situation and of the vast needs for export grains to feed the starving to boost grain prices far above parity. They pushed the price of rye 50 cents or 75 cents higher than that of corn and wheat, which are inherently more valuable. In past years they sold short, but now instead of being bears they have turned bulls, and they are bulling the market and the American people. It is the American people who pay for this gambling, not only in higher prices but also in taxes for international relief.

AN OUTRAGE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SABATH. I yield for a question.

Mr. RICH. Is not Mr. Schram president of the stock exchange?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; he is. I also took this up with Mr. Simons, the president of the exchange in 1929, and with Mr. Whitney, who was at that time the vice president. In my last communication to Mr. Whitney I asked him if not for the country's sake then for your own sake stop this outrageous crooked gambling that is going on. He did not heed my advice. As you all know, he was finally sent to the penitentiary. I do not care whether it is Schram or whether it might be my own brother or son or anyone else. I say it is an outrage; it is a shame; it is a conspiracy on the part of a few who never produce anything to try and destroy the values of property in the United States. They may now bring about the same result as in 1929. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if that should be permitted, and no attention paid to the approaching reenactment of the tragic manipulations of 1929?

APPEALED TO PRESIDENT HOOVER IN 1929

At that time I not only spoke on this very floor, warning of what we were heading for, and contacted Mr. Simons and Mr. Whitney, but I also appealed to President Hoover, to Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, the Attorney General, the Federal Reserve Board, and other officials who, I thought, should be made aware of the impending dangers.

At a later date, Mr. Speaker, I shall include in the RECORD the speech I made on December 9, 1929, in which I urged the prohibition of short selling at that time; perhaps, had there been those with ears to listen to my warning instead of to the jangling of the tickers, the crash might have been averted, or at least softened.

I believe that now we still have time, if we have the will, and the courage, and the intelligence, to stop this unfair, dishonest manipulation of the markets by a handful of selfish men. If we do not stop it, we shall be making a great mistake.

It is for that reason that I have taken the floor today and have deviated from the regular order of business, which is, of course, consideration of the rule on the wool bill. I believe I am warning the country of a danger more important than any legislation pending before the House today.

WILL OFFER BILLS TO STOP SHORT SELLING

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I have prepared two bills designed to aid in stabilizing the Nation's stock exchanges, which I propose to introduce tomorrow. One of these will impose a tax of 5 percent on all short sales. The other will prohibit the transmission of false information regarding securities. I hope they will have the approval of the House and thus put an end to this crooked manipulation on Wall Street.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Where is your Securities and Exchange Commission that has been established to see that these things do not happen?

Mr. SABATH. I have gone after them, too—do not be a bit alarmed. I ask the gentleman earnestly to read the letters I am inserting.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in addition to the letters which I have been given unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD I may also include a few other articles.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, you should put in the RECORD about Mr. Schram being one of the New Dealers and how he is supposed to regulate all this.

Mr. SABATH. In my opinion, he is not a New Dealer. New Dealers have the interest of the people at heart. He seems to have at heart only the interest of the stockbrokers and the members of the stock exchanges.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER].

Mr. HERTER. Mr. Speaker, I hope very much that the rule on this bill will be adopted. In this very controversial wool situation, there are one or two things I think everyone can agree on.

In the first place, everyone will agree that the Commodity Credit Corporation today holds over 400,000,000 pounds of domestic wool which it is unable to dispose of because the existing law does not permit it to dispose of the wool below parity price. Everyone who has studied this legislation has agreed that the Commodity Credit Corporation should be allowed to sell the wool which it now holds even though it must take a loss in doing so at a price competitive with the world price which is controlling the American market today. That is provided for in the bill which is made in order by this rule.

In the second place, I think every fair-minded person feels that the wool growers of this country are entitled, in face of the necessity for liquidating this stock pile, and in face of the great influx of foreign wools, to some support during this interim period, a support similar to that which was given to other agricultural commodities. Unless we pass some such legislation as is before us, neither of these two objectives can be achieved.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERTER. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. What do you mean by "support"? Do you mean subsidy?

Mr. HERTER. Either a subsidy or tariff support. At the present time the wool growers have a tariff of 34 cents. In a moment I shall come back to that, because there is great confusion in the discussion of figures relating to wool because of the fact that one set of figures is always quoted as wool in the grease, and the other set of figures as cleaned or scoured wool. The tariff is based on the cleaned or scoured wool.

I personally take issue with this bill on one matter. That is the price at which support is to be given to the wool grower. I take issue with that price for this reason: The wool trade for over 115 years has centered in the city of Boston. For that period of time, until this war, the wool trade performed an extraordinarily useful function in going to the grower all over the country, in sampling his type of wool—and there are hundreds and hundreds of different types of wool; in fact, the Australians at one time had 1,500 different classifications—and he had to be an expert to determine what type of wool was grown by a particular grower on a particular ranch. He purchased that wool, brought it east, scoured it, cleaned it, combed it, and sold it to the trade. He was not allowed to continue to perform the function of purchasing and selling when the war came on. This came about because of a peculiar situation whereby, in order to protect the very necessary wool supply in this country required for the war, a tremendous amount of Australian wool was brought in and held in bond. A great deal was brought in for our current use. During that period of time, in order to protect the American wool grower, the Commodity Credit Corporation purchased the entire clip of the American wool grower. It put the American wool dealer out of business entirely, insofar as the handling of wool was concerned. It put the clip completely in the hands of the Government.

As a result of the operations of the Government, which I could criticize at considerable length if I wanted to, but which is not pertinent to the issue at this time, we have this large stock pile on hand which the Government cannot get rid of.

The price provided for in this bill as a support price to the grower will mean that the Government continues in business for a period of 2 years more, buying the entire domestic clip and selling it at a loss. It will not have to sell it at a loss if the tariffs are raised. But that brings up another question. In any case the Government will buy at a price so far above the world price that the American dealer, who was put out of the domestic market during the World War, will be kept out of the domestic market and we will have the Government continuing in the business.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER] has expired.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. HERTER. In order to be perfectly clear as to what we are doing and what we are talking about, may I give you some figures? There is a great deal of controversy about these figures, but these have been checked within the last half hour with the Department of Agriculture. While there are no figures stated in the bill for a support price of wool, that figure is the 1946 support price, and that is 42.3 cents, as just given me. Parity for wool, as computed by the Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Agricultural Economics, as of April 15, is 42.1 cents. In other words, the support price asked for in this bill is a little over 100 percent of the parity price.

I filed a bill which went before the Committee on Agriculture asking for a support price of 90 percent. I did that because 90 percent was similar to the support price of other basic agricultural commodities except that the law there reads "Not less than 90 percent." Ninety percent would put the support price of wool today just under the world price. That means that the entire domestic clip could be purchased and sold without having the Government enter into the picture in any way whatsoever and would avoid all the expenses of subsidies and otherwise. Not all wool would be handled at the world price, but there would be a guarantee to the wool grower that in any event he would have that support.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERTER. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. The gentleman is assuming, of course, that the world price does not go lower in the meantime.

Mr. HERTER. Yes, that it does not go lower. If the gentleman has any reason to believe or if he thinks we are going into a recession and that there is going to be a general falling off of prices he should support my amendment.

I object to having a fixed price of 42.6 cents which has no relation to parity or any variable price relating to other commodities. I think it is unfair to maintain one commodity at a fixed price where others receive their support on a flexible price dependent on the price of other goods.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERTER. I yield.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Under that plan would it not naturally follow that these foreign wool growers would reduce the price in order to have the Government take up the domestic supply and keep it out of circulation?

Mr. HERTER. There is no way in which we can keep them from lowering the price except for the one thing; namely, that the foreign grower is very anxious to maintain a high price. Obviously, he wants to get the best price he can.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Massachusetts one additional minute.

Mr. HERTER. I am very glad to have this additional minute in order to answer that one question with regard to foreign imports of wool.

Unless one has a complete prohibition against the importation of wool the foreign producers are going to continue to send wool into this country. As a matter of fact, this country will have to import wool, for we cannot possibly produce what is required in this country. At the present time the domestic clip this year is estimated at around 300,000,000 pounds. It is estimated that our domestic consumption will be around seven hundred and fifty to eight hundred million pounds. In other words, even if we liquidated everything the Commodity Credit Corporation now holds in a period of 1 year, and added the domestic clip, we could probably not meet our domestic requirements.

We have to import wool. Obviously, the fellow who has got to sell it to us is going to try to get as high a price as he can. Naturally the hope is that we can produce with the protection of a 34-cent tariff a good quality of wool which will bring a price that makes it economical for our manufacturers to buy the domestic clip first.

The amendment which I shall offer reads as follows: "On page 2, line 3, strike out the words 'the price it supported wool in 1946,' and insert in place thereof the following: 'at 90 percent of the parity price as determined by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics'."

This amendment would put the support price at 37.9 cents, a price about 12 cents higher than the market price for wool during the 20 years from 1921 to 1940. However, as the present world price plus our tariff is now approximately 39 cents or more, the support price I am now proposing would allow our domestic clip to be sold at a higher level than the support price and hence would cost us nothing, unless a severe falling off in the market occurred. Should this occur, support to our growers would certainly be justified.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr McCORMACK].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 7 minutes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, this bill has a rather interesting history. It passed the Senate very rapidly. When it came up for consideration in the House Committee on Agriculture apparently some of the proponents of the bill felt that it went through the Senate so easily that instead of a support price at the 1946 level as provided in the Senate bill they went further and put in the 50-percent import fee. That is where the bill really first encountered its difficulty.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. The bill we have before us calls for exactly the same price-support level that was contained in the Senate bill. We have not changed that one iota.

Mr. McCORMACK. I understand that.

Mr. HOPE. There is no difference in the two bills in that respect.

Mr. McCORMACK. But I did say this amendment was put in for a 50-percent import fee.

Mr. HOPE. Not to exceed 50 percent.

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; not to exceed 50 percent. I will not haggle over that.

After the bill was reported it commenced to encounter difficulties. We now have a rule with points of order waived because the committee amendment, in my opinion, and I think in the opinion of other parliamentarians, would be subject to a point of order, which would mean that the Senate bill or substantially the Senate bill would be before the House. A new proposal was conceived because there was recognition that serious opposition was developing to what is called section 4 of the bill providing for the import fee. We now have a new proposition that, while not so drastic, I concede, is just as objectionable.

If the proponents of this legislation were to forget section 4, which apparently they have, and also forget trying to bring it under section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, the opposition to this bill probably would be negligible. While I would vote for the Herter amendment, if it were not adopted I could see that there would not be much difficulty to the House passing this bill along the lines it passed the Senate.

There is, however, serious opposition to the proposed amendment. The original amendment of the committee is out, but there is another proposal to bring wool under section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act and then to please certain elements of the industry to remove import restrictions being placed upon it in the future so far as wool is concerned. Of course, we know that section 22 means that if the President in his judgment finds that certain conditions are interfering with the carrying out of this program he shall call it to the attention of the Tariff Commission and while some think the President has a discretion, it is my frank opinion that the President does not have any discretion. If I were President and there was a law that stated if certain conditions existed I shall do so-and-so, even if I personally did not want to take the action, I would feel constrained to take it, carrying out the intent of the Congress and living up to the law. So for all practical purposes the adoption of the amendment is mandatory, only it takes a little longer for the import fee or the import duty, whatever you want to call it, to be imposed.

In connection with that, may I say that I hold in my hand copy of a letter from Will Clayton, Under Secretary of State. The letter will be read in full, I presume, during general debate. I am not opposing the adoption of the rule, although I am opposed to the amendment that will be offered and I shall support the Herter amendment. This letter is dated May 22 and, as I stated, is from Will Clayton, Under Secretary of State, who is charged with serious responsibilities. He states in part:

> The bill in the form in which it was reported was not under consideration by the Committee on Agriculture when representatives of the Department testified before that body. We have not had a formal opportunity to present our views on the legislation, as it has been reported.

Further on he says:

> I understand from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that it is proposed to modify this import fee amendment by directing the President rather than the Secretary of Agriculture, to impose the fees after investigation by the Tariff Commission. This does not remove the fundamental objections to the provision.

A little further he says:

> If at this time when we are actually negotiating with other countries at Geneva for the lowering of trade barriers we raise new barriers as this bill proposes, we stand convicted of insincerity.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Pardon me if I proceed. I have only a few questions.

Mr. RICH. I would like to ask one question.

Mr. McCORMACK. Go ahead.

Mr. RICH. If we are going to concede to the State Department and eliminate practically all tariffs, then we have got to subsidize every commodity that we make from this wool which contributes to the high standard of living that we have in this country for both the manufacturer and labor.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman overlooks the fact that we are considering an important piece of legislation. The gentleman and I disagree in some respects.

Mr. RICH. You bet we do.

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes, we do, and I am glad I disagree with the gentleman.

Mr. RICH. So am I.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am very glad I disagree with the gentleman on the great social reforms that mean so much to a great people. I think of the under fellow. I think of the under dog. I am thinking of the average person. I am not legislating for the big fellow at all.

Mr. RICH. How are you going to maintain the standard of living in this country and then have no tariff?

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman's wise remarks will get a rejoinder from me.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman has spoken of section 22 of the so-called Triple-A Act.

Mr. McCORMACK. The one point I wanted to drive home I have not come to yet.

Mr. HALLECK. What I wanted to inquire about was whether it is true that section 22 was written by the Democratic Congress some years back, applicable to certain agricultural commodities, and the suggestion is to make that very provision applicable to wool.

Mr. McCORMACK. It was written by a Democratic administration, and the basic commodities, if you will note, relate to those with an exportable surplus. But none of them have this "except wool," and this further limitation that no import restrictions can be imposed on all the other basic commodities of exportable surpluses produced here.

One thought I want to leave with the proponents of the legislation. If you really want to help the wool growers—and I have no objection to that; I have said I will vote for the Herter amendment if it is offered or take the bill along the line offered by the Senate—if you want to help the wool growers and the proponents are sincere—and I cannot see and I make no prediction, because I have no knowledge—but in view of the contents of that letter written by the Under Secretary of State, that the bill with the proposed amendment will constitute insincerity, it is difficult for me to see how, with section 22 in, that the bill can do other than face a veto. If someone wants to engage in double talk, that is all right, if they can get away with it; but if there is sincerity of purpose—and I assume there is—behind this bill, then the best way of insuring the wool growers being helped is to pass this bill either in the form as proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts or in the form as it was when it passed the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CHENOWETH].

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, after listening to the speech just made by the Democratic whip, the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, I am not sure just where he does stand on this wool legislation. He did not tell us whether he was for or against the pending bill, but I inferred from his argument that he is opposed to the bill because Mr. Clayton, Under Secretary of State, has written a letter expressing opposition to certain provisions. He proposes that you and I, as Members of Congress, should accept the judgment of Mr. Clayton instead of the recommendations of the House Committee on Agriculture. In other words, we should follow the State Department, instead of our own committee. I disagree with the gentleman and believe this is a decision that should be made by Congress, and not the State Department.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure everyone recognizes the importance of this bill and the necessity for wool legislation. It is a question of whether or not we are going to continue the sheep and wool industry in the United States. It is true, as my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER] stated, that we do not produce all of the wool that we consume in this country. The proponents of this bill do not pretend that that is the case. However, I submit it is highly important to maintain the wool industry of this country so that we can continue to produce large amounts of wool for our requirements. Otherwise we will be at the mercy of the foreign producers of wool and will have to pay whatever price they ask.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Since the British cartel controls about 80 percent of the world's wool, would the gentleman like to venture a guess as to what would happen to prices in the event the wool industry in the United States were liquidated?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I think the gentleman is absolutely right. No one could predict what the price of wool would be. We would be at the absolute mercy of the foreign producers of wool. Of course, they would get all the tariff would bear.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. The only reason Mr. Clayton is here, having just come over from Geneva, is that he has run up against the opposition of Great Britain in regard to the wool situation. She wants to unload the wool from New Zealand and Australia on this country, regardless of the fact that we have a surplus here now, and simply drive the price down and put all of our sheep men out of business.

Mr. CHENOWETH. I think that is correct. I thank the gentleman for his observation.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOPE. If that is the position of the British Government, does not the gentleman think it is a little inconsistent, considering the fact they increased the tariff on American tobacco 50 percent just this last month?

Mr. CHENOWETH. Of course, the gentleman is right. The British Government intends to protect its people and at the same time expand its world trade.

Mr. Speaker, surely the time has come when the Congress of the United States ought to have more consideration for our own domestic producers of essential and critical materials and supplies, instead of devoting most of our time and attention to assisting some foreign country to produce these articles in competition with our own industries. I do not object to helping other nations of the world who are in distress and need assistance, but I do protest against building up the industries of other nations in competition with our own. Let us, protect and promote our own industries. The sheep and wool industry must have our support. Therefore, I urge the adoption of the rule and the passage of the bill, with the amendment to be offered by the distinguished chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. We have just heard again the suggestion about the possibility of a veto. It might not be amiss to recall here that when the Constitution was drafted and provision was made for the veto it certainly was never intended that the veto power should be an implement for the usurpation of legislative authority and responsibility. To my mind, for the Congress on any occasion to say to the Executive, be he of any party, "We will write just what you want and nothing else," would represent an abdication of legislative responsibility and authority to which I will never subscribe. Our job is to write good, decent, fair, defensible, and equitable legislation. If we do that, it is the responsibility of the Executive to sign that legislation.

Mr. CHENOWETH. I appreciate the contribution of our distinguished majority leader. I want to commend the gentleman for his fine leadership, and for his insistence that we maintain our status as an independent legislative body. I think we have come to a sad spectacle in this House if we are going to be guided by the possibility or the threat of a veto in determining what legislation we will pass.

Mr. Speaker, the question before us today is very simple. It is whether or not we are going to permit the wool industry of this country to continue. We realized during the war that the time is here when we must produce more of the raw materials we consume. Sugar is a good example of what I mean. Had it not been for our domestic sugar beet industry we would have had very little sugar during certain periods. The same picture applies to wool. We must maintain our domestic wool industry. We must provide an incentive for the wool growers to remain in business. The legislation before us today is absolutely essential if those engaged in the wool industry are to survive. I therefore urge the adoption of the rule and the passage of the bill. This legislation has been delayed too long and should have been on the floor several weeks ago. It is essential that we act now.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of the time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, the adoption of this rule will permit you to discuss this question of trying to help the wool farmers in this country. Certainly we cannot get along without the wool farmers. We must have wool if we want woolen clothing, wool blankets, and so forth.

I want to call your attention now to the fact that if we pass this legislation we would compel the President to put a tariff of 8 or 10 cents a pound on wool and thus save this country from going down and subsidizing all the things we are trying to produce. That is as it should be.

Remember that it is going to cost eight to one hundred and fifty million dollars for these subsidies, where if we put a tariff of 10 cents a pound in addition to what we now have on wool, we can save the Government all these subsidies.

That is the kind of legislation we should have. I want to tell you I am for the tariff to protect the American farmer, American labor, and the American businessman. This business of talking about Assistant Secretary Clayton going over to Europe and then when he gets over there he says he wants to reduce the tariff and the minority leader now saying that he is for the little man makes me ask: How is he going to help the little man if American labor is going to be competing with all the foreign labor all over the world who are getting 10, 15, and 20 percent of the amount that American labor is getting for this work? If you want to help American labor and if the minority leader wants to help America, let us have a tariff and let us bring Clayton back and thus take care of America and let the foreign countries look after themselves in their own industry in the way they want to run their affairs. But do not wreck America for any country in the world.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. BARRETT. Do you contend that if a fee is imposed by the President so as to bring the price of foreign wool up to the price of domestic wool that there will be any loss to the Treasury?

Mr. RICH. No. I think we ought to have a fee. I do not care whether you call it a fee or tariff. I am of the old school that believes in calling a thing exactly what it is. It is a tariff. It is protection for America and if you call it anything else you are only putting a little sugar-coating on it.

But let us have this fee or tariff. That is what we stand for. The Republican Party has always stood for a tariff. I am for it today and I want to get back to the good old days such as made America strong. The tariff helped build up America giving us the greatest country on the face of the earth. Let us make America strong, and if we let America be torn down that would not be right, and if we permitted it we are not fit to be here legislating for our people. The foreign countries should be on their own responsibility and we have enough to do to attend to our own business, and I am going to look after America and our people.

Mr. BARRETT. I agree with the gentleman 100 percent.

Mr. RICH. Let us go out and do the thing that ought to be done in order to keep our country safe, keep our standard of living high, and protect all of our people, especially the laboring man.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to my colleague from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GAVIN. The distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts states that Under Secretary Clayton takes exception to the fact that he had not had an opportunity to review this legislation. I would like to ask him how he thinks we feel as Representatives of the Congress when we do not have an opportunity to review the reciprocal-trade treaties that they are now entering into which affect the economic life of our communities. Why does he not give us a chance to review those agreements before taking any definite action to determine what effect it will have on our industries and welfare of our people.

Mr. RICH. That is what I say also. I believe what we ought to do is to bring Assistant Secretary Clayton back here, keep him at home, and let him go to farming, and let him try to raise some of these commodities. He will get a different viewpoint and will not want to give everything away at the expense of the American people. We do not want to have a lot of potatoes and hold the price of potatoes up and then put kerosene on them, thus wasting the kerosene and burning the potatoes. I want the American people to get wool. I want the American people to have potatoes, and I want the American people to have all those commodities at a fair price that they can afford to pay. I want the people of America to be fed. I want America to be a land of plenty. Why kill the pigs, burn the wheat, plow down the cotton. Kick the New Deal out the window before it is too late, before we have bankruptcy.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JENNINGS. The gentleman talks about bringing Mr. Clayton back here and putting him to raising potatoes and producing lamb chops and wool.

Mr. RICH. In that case he would have to work the same as anybody else, and he would not raise enough to be worth the trouble.

Mr. JENNINGS. I just wanted to say that if we had to depend on him to produce wool and lamb chops and grow potatoes, we would freeze and starve to death.

Mr. RICH. We certainly would. I do not believe he knows how to keep the American standard of living high. I think he would wreck America for foreign countries.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from Pennsylvania said he would like to get back to the good old days. Does he mean the good old days of the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act?

Mr. RICH. Yes; if you want to call it that. Let us get right back here so that we can help America, by protection that keeps our standard of living high, that gets the American wage earner a good salary, that helps create jobs for the American wage earner. Let us help the common man. I believe in America for Americans. You New Dealers have put us in debt $259,000,000,000 and you have got us almost wrecked. Now it is about time for us to pull out. We cannot pull you out by subsidizing everything that everybody raises. We have got to save the Treasury of the United States and try to protect this country from bankruptcy. I am against the Government in business, I am against subsidies, I believe in American policies, a good tariff for American protection for labor, agriculture, and industry. Save America by saving our tariff against the State Department that was set up under the New Deal to hand us over to foreign countries, lock, stock, and barrel. Let us get rid of the New Deal in its entirety.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] has expired.

All time has expired.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 814) to provide support for wool, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 814, with Mr. HARNESS of Indiana in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] is recognized for one hour and a half. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY] will be recognized for one hour and a half.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this bill (S. 814) to provide for extending the present stabilization program on wool until December 31, 1948, has been exhaustively considered by the House Committee on Agriculture.

The problem is one of the most difficult which the committee has had before it for many years. Many conflicting interests are involved. The committee feels that this bill, if amended by an amendment which I will offer later in the day on behalf of the committee, is the best legislative solution of the matter which can be worked out.

Wool is a war casualty and the difficult situation in which domestic wool producers find themselves at the present time is a direct result of the war and the world-wide dislocation of wool production and marketing which took place during the war and since.

Since 1943 the Department of Agriculture, through the Commodity Credit Corporation, has carried on a support price program for wool. Since the beginning of that program, practically the entire domestic wool clip has been handled by the Commodity Credit Corporation. The evidence at the hearings disclosed that the Commodity Credit Corporation has on hand 460,000,000 pounds of wool. It is unable to dispose of that wool because of the statute which prevents the sale of wool and other commodities at less than parity because, due to heavy imports, the going market price has been and still is below parity.

During the early years of the war the United States Government purchased and stock-piled over 300,000,000 pounds of Australian wool in order to assure an adequate supply for military needs. Later, under a cooperative arrangement worked out with the United Kingdom, large quantities of British Empire wool were stock-piled in this country. During the war all the normal channels of world trade in wool were dislocated and large stocks of wool accumulated in all the wool-producing countries.

Although mill consumption of wool in this country has been at the highest level in peacetime history, the total United States stocks of domestic and foreign wool as of December 28, 1946, were 895,000,000 pounds, grease basis. These stocks are more than three times as large as the 1935–39 average of 275,000,000 pounds for the corresponding date.

Foreign stocks of wool are even larger. The British Empire wool is held in a pool known as the JO—joint organization—which operates as the sole buyer and seller of Empire wool. Even after large shipments into this country during the war that organization has a present stock pile of approximately 2,000,000,000 pounds of wool. Argentina and Uruguay also have large stocks of wool, although not all South American wool is competitive with our domestic production.

The importation of foreign wool has been constantly increasing and in 1946 was the greatest in peacetime history totaling 819,253,000 pounds. This was over 80 percent of our extremely large consumption in 1946 and is approximately six times greater than average annual importations during the period from 1936 to 1940, inclusive. This great increase in importations is due to the fact that the price at which foreign wools are being offered, including a duty of 34 cents per pound, clean basis, is below the price of domestic wool.

The price support program inaugurated by the Secretary of Agriculture in 1943 is based upon the ceiling price of wool in December 1941. Early this year, the Secretary of Agriculture announced that this price support program would be discontinued on April 15 unless action was taken by Congress to continue. Wool is not a Steagall commodity, although production was encouraged during the war, and hence it is necessary for Congress to act if support prices are going to be continued until the end of 1948, as is being done in the case of most of the other important commodities.

The present bill provides for a continuation of price support at the level of 1946 which, as already stated, is the OPA ceiling price as of December 9, 1941. The price paid to farmers varies according to the grades of wool and the amount of shrink, but the first 3 months of 1947 the price averaged 40.4 cents. This is approximately 95 percent of present parity.

Wool growers have not been satisfied with the existing support prices and legislation introduced on their behalf early in this session, as well as in the last Congress, asked a support price at 90 percent of the comparable price. This price, according to the latest figures, is about 52 cents per pound, so that a support price of 90 percent of comparable would be approximately 47 cents.

There was also before the committee a bill supported by the wool trade calling for price supports at 90 percent of parity. This would be a little less than 38 cents per pound on the basis of present parity.

Much evidence was submitted to the committee to the effect that the present support price is not adequate and that even a support price of 90 percent of comparable was not sufficient to enable wool growers to break even. Figures were submitted covering an investigation conducted by the Tariff Commission showing that for the year 1946, wool producers during the last 4 years have been producing at a loss ranging from 2.9 cents per pound in 1943 to 12 cents per pound in 1945. The loss per pound for 1946 was 9.5 cents.

Along with these losses, there has occurred a tremendous shrink in the number of stock sheep. From a high of 49,346,000 head of January 1, 1942, stock sheep numbers declined to 32,542,000 on January 1, 1947, a decline of 34 percent and the smallest number of sheep in the United States since 1867.

The Committee on Agriculture, after hearing all of the evidence by growers, producers, dealers, cooperatives, and farm organizations, reported House Joint Resolution 158 which provided that the Secretary of Agriculture, through the Commodity Credit Corporation, should support the price of wool at the 1946 level until December 31, 1948, and authorized the Secretary to sell existing stocks owned by the Commodity Credit Corporation without regard to the existing law prohibiting sales below parity. Shortly thereafter the Senate passed S. 814, which included the provisions in the House bill and some others.

In the meantime considerable opposition had developed to the House bill on the ground that it would require large appropriations to make up for the losses sustained under the program. The House committee had previously given some consideration to the matter of import quotas and fees, and when S. 814 was referred to the House committee it was amended by the insertion of a provision authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to impose import fees if he found that the importation of wool was interfering with the price support program.

There was considerable opposition to this amendment, particularly on the ground that it granted extreme and unusual powers to a Cabinet officer and that the authority given was to be exercised without the necessity of following any established procedure.

To meet these objections, the Committee on Agriculture has authorized the chairman to offer an amendment at the proper time in the consideration of this bill which will strike out section 4, which is the provision which I have just been discussing and inserting a new section 4. The new section would simply add wool as one of the commodities in section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act with the further proviso that if the President should find that wool imports were interfering with the price-support program set up under this bill, he would not be authorized to impose quantitative limitations upon imports, thus limiting any action taken under section 22 to the imposition of import fees on wool or any other articles which interfered with the wool support price program. Under the provisions of section 22, the authority to impose import fees would, of course, include not only wool in any stage of manufacture, but products made therefrom, including top, yarn, and fabric.

Section 22 has been on the statute books ever since 1935, and its purpose is to prevent domestic price-support programs on agricultural commodities from being materially interfered with or rendered in effective by reason of imports.

The provisions of the act have been used by the President on wheat and cotton, on both of which commodities import quotas have been imposed. The original proclamations establishing these quotas have been reconsidered and modified on several occasions. The latest such occasion was in February 1947, when the cotton proclamation was modified by the imposition of a new quota limit on harsh cotton. Thus, section 22 has been recognized for the last 12 years as a necessary provision in connection with price support programs and its provisions have been invoked on every occasion when imports threatened to render those programs ineffective.

Certainly the wool producers of this country are just as much entitled to the protection of section 22 as are the producers of wheat or cotton and all other agricultural commodities which are eligible for consideration under section 22 provisions.

Such a program has been the policy of this administration and has been invoked when needed. It is still the policy, as indicated by the fact that on February 1947, there was transmitted to the Speaker of the House a request from the Secretary of Agriculture for legislation extending the provisions of section 22 to the commodities upon which price supports were in effect or on which price supports might go in effect in the future.

The Secretary, with that letter, included a draft of legislation which I introduced as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and which is now the bill H. R. 1825.

The message accompanying the letter indicated that the legislation had cleared the Bureau of the Budget, which, as I understand it, means that it has the administration approval in every way, including approval by the State Department.

What we are attempting to do in this bill is to amend it so as to include wool, which is clearly within the scope of H. R. 1825. In other words, if the bill were already a law, the President would have authority to issue a proclamation with regard to wool. In view of the fact that the consideration of that legislation might take considerable time, the committee felt that provisions putting wool under section 22 should be included in the present bill.

I know that many Members of Congress have received letters, telegrams, and other communications in opposition to the bill S. 814. I call attention, however, to the fact that in every case, that opposition was expressed to the bill as reported by the House committee, not to the bill as it will be amended by striking out section 4 and inserting a provision putting wool in section 22. I know that groups and individuals which opposed S. 814 as reported by the committee are in agreement with the bill if it is amended in the manner suggested.

Section 22 was enacted originally because it was realized that no price-support program could be maintained domestically in the face of unlimited imports at a price level lower than the support price. The same principle, of course, applies whether the surplus is created by imports or domestic production. In other words, it is impossible to support prices for any period of time above the market level without some control over production or marketing or both. That idea has been recognized in all the price-support programs which were put into effect before the war.

The present situation with regard to wool indicates that if we are to continue to have unlimited imports of foreign wool at a price less than the support price, the cost to the Federal Treasury will be very great. Therefore, all we are asking to do in the case of wool is to invoke the same principle that has been set up in our price-support programs in the past as to the control of domestic production and marketing, and as to control of imports in the case of section 22. There is nothing new about the principle and nothing new about its applications as provided in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. HILL. In 1932 there were 13,231,361 pounds, in round numbers, of apparel wool imported into this country; in 1938, 18,442,673; and in 1946, 819,253,000 pounds of wool imported into this country. Now, I will ask this question: How under the sun can the Federal Treasury support a subsidy price on corn products of any kind under section 22 or any other section and at the same time permit increases such as that of foreign products to come into this country and be absorbed by our domestic market?

Mr. HOPE. The gentleman is exactly correct, of course, in saying that that cannot be done without bankrupting the Treasury. We have recognized that principle, of course, in all of our price-support programs previous to the Steagall amendment, because we provided in the price-support programs on the basic commodities that there should be acreage allotments and marketing quotas, because everyone knows that you cannot support prices at anything like parity or near the parity level unless you have some control over production and marketing, or both. That, of course, is just as true whether the surplus of the commodity is produced in this country or produced in some foreign country and comes in here in the way of imports. That, of course, is what we are trying to do in this legislation. That is what the Democratic administration was trying to do in 1935 when this legislation was first proposed, and that is what it was trying to do on the 4th day of February when the Secretary of Agriculture sent the letter to the Speaker of the House suggesting the introduction of a bill which would make it possible to put into effect import fees and quotas upon those commodities of which we were likely to import increased quantities.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CLEVENGER. A minute ago the minority whip spoke of the return to the old Smoot-Hawley days. May I ask the chairman if the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill has ever been repealed?

Mr. HOPE. No; and no one in Congress has ever suggested repealing it, as I recall.

Mr. CLEVENGER. A former Speaker, Mr. Rainey, once said, "The Republicans will not repeal it and we do not dare to," speaking of the majority of those days. May I ask the chairman if it is not possible under the present tariff, if they cared to do it, to raise the duty on grease wool by as much as 16 percent, 34 percent on a clean basis, or about 16 percent on the grease?

Mr. HOPE. It could be increased 50 percent under the flexible tariff provisions of the Smoot-Hawley bill.

Mr. CLEVENGER. It could be increased more than twice, probably as much as three times as much as is necessary to save this industry.

Mr. HOPE. That is correct.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Having this tool in the President's hands, and the Tariff Commission having already made the necessary finding of fact as it relates to the industry—and if it is dying, it is probably down 35 percent—if we give him a second tool in this, and if he does nothing about it, at least the guilt, the responsibility for wrecking this industry, will not rest on the head of the majority party.

Mr. HOPE. That is true.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. In support of the statement the gentleman made justifying the present price, I call your attention to the official report of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, which shows that in 1935–39 the average farm wage per month in the State of Washington was $34.36 and in Wyoming $34.08. At the time they froze their wool prices, labor in Washington had gone to $112 and in Wyoming to $79.60. In 1946, in the State of Washington the wage had gone up to $142, and $109 per month in Wyoming.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has again expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. This shows that there is three times the labor charge there was in the years before the war, and it is over a third more than it was at the time the price of wool was frozen in 1943.

Mr. HOPE. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. BUSBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BUSBEY. During the debate on the rule the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] made a plea for an 8- or 10-cent-a-pound tariff on imported wool. Will the gentleman explain why the amendment that has been brought in here to this bill is better than the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]?

Mr. HOPE. Of course we have no opportunity at the present time to adopt the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. That would take an amendment to the Tariff Act. We have nothing before us on that point, and as far as I know there is no possibility that we will have any opportunity to vote for ar increase in the tariff. But we do have this legislation before us which authorizes the President, if the Tariff Commission makes the necessary findings, to impose an import fee in an amount necessary to bring the price of foreign wool to the support price proposed in this bill. That is all the wool producers of this country are asking for to save them from utter ruin.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. BARRETT. Is it not a fact that to bring the price of foreign wool up to the price of domestic wool would amount to 5 cents a pound on a clean basis at the present time?

Mr. HOPE. Those are the last figures I have seen, and I am sure they are approximately correct.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. There is one phase of this situation of competition abroad that a great many people seem to overlook. Many people seem to think that we should buy in the market where we can buy the cheapest. That is the most fallacious doctrine in the world, because the minute they drive us out of the business of raising sheep in this country they can put the wool up at any price they want to.

Mr. HOPE. Yes; that is one of the things to which we naturally look forward with apprehension.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. HILL. May I ask my chairman this question? After listening to all of the testimony given before our committee, is he in a position to hazard a guess as to how much the price of wool would increase and how much difference it would make in the value of wool that goes into a suit of clothes if this bill is passed.

Mr. HOPE. The figures that I would have to give the gentleman would be approximate, of course. I do not know how many pounds of wool there are in a suit of clothes. But there cannot be more than 5 or 6 pounds. As the gentleman from Wyoming said, this bill if put into effect on the basis of present prices would result in an increase of about 5 cents per pound of wool on a clean basis. You can figure it out yourself. It would be 5 cents a pound times the number of pounds of wool that go into a suit, whether it is 4, 5, or 6 pounds, or whatever it may be.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JENNINGS. This proposal to save the wool-growing industry in this country from destruction not only involves our ability to produce the wool to make our clothes, but also affects the food supply of the country. If you lose the sheep for the production of wool, you are going to lose them for the production of food.

Mr. HOPE. That is certainly true. I have already called the attention of the committee to the fact that the number of sheep in this country has declined from forty-nine million and some odd in 1942 to 32,000,000 in 1946. There are in this country today a smaller number of sheep than we have ever had since 1867 80 years ago. It is, of course, not remarkable when wool producers are losing from 9 to 10 cents a pound on the wool they produce. Of course, they are going out of business.

Mr. HAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. HAND. Would you not agree that we could eliminate this proposed support program if we had a tariff on the importation of wool?

Mr. HOPE. A higher tariff would have the same effect. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The last two clips of wool produced in the United States in the last 2 years are still in the United States in Government warehouses and they are the property of the Government. It has not been used. Practically all of the wool that we have used in the United States comes from other places. I think that is an appalling situation that the number of sheep in this country today does not exceed the number of sheep that we had here 40 or 50 or 60 years ago. If we do not do something we are going to lose the finest agricultural industry we have got, that is the raising of sheep.

Mr. HOPE. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. From reports I have heard, Mr. Nichols of the State Department appeared before your committee and expressed the opinion that we probably should liquidate those home industries that could not compete with foreign producers. That leads me to make this inquiry: Did the Committee on Agriculture give considerable consideration or emphasis to the importance of wool raising to our national defense as one of our own items of strategic and critical national defense materials?

Mr. HOPE. Yes. The committee certainly took that into consideration, being well aware of the fact that the War Department has declared wool to be a strategic and critical material.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Is it not true that sheep is the only animal, or perhaps sheep and goats, that can produce any return on millions of acres of unclaimed land, by reclaiming that land by eating the roughage?

Mr. HOPE. Yes; that is very true.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. JENNINGS. Coming to the suggestion just made by my distinguished friend the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN] that some people say that where we cannot profitably compete with other countries we ought to liquidate the industry that is affected by their industries to my mind, the liquidation of any such industry as that of growing sheep in this country is idiotic, and the man who expressed it ought to be bored for the simples.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] has expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself three additional minutes.

Something has been said this afternoon about the fact that this legislation was causing repercussions at Geneva. I do not know whether that is true or not, but I do know that shortly before Mr. Clayton went to Geneva the Department of Agriculture sent this legislation to the Speaker of the House, suggesting its introduction. It was introduced at that time as H. R. 1825, and I know that the bill had been cleared at the White House and the State Department. With that approval, I assume it represents the policy of this country to put import quotas or import fees upon those commodities which are interfering with our domestic price support program. Certainly there is nothing in this legislation which could in the remotest degree interfere with negotiations at Geneva unless it is the purpose of this country to lower duties on wool.

As has already been pointed out, with the wool producers of this country losing 9½ cents a pound on their production under existing conditions, how could we hope to retain the industry in this country if we lower the tariff still more? If that is the purpose at Geneva, then it seems to me it is time that this Congress express itself on that subject. It has an opportunity to do that in the legislation that is before us today.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman stated that the effect of the pending legislation was to place wool under section 22. Is it not a fact that section 22 became necessary solely because of the AAA programs which we had in effect in this country; in many of which programs we actually curtailed the production in this country, and placed acreage quotas on the farmers themselves? Are you not now, by putting wool under section 22, putting a commodity in there which never heretofore has been placed in that category?

Mr. HOPE. That is true, but we are doing it entirely in harmony with the request of the Secretary of Agriculture in his letter of February 4, in which he requested an amendment of existing law so that all commodities upon which there were price-support programs could be brought in under section 22.

Mr. COOLEY. In other words, you have not solely support-price program commodities in section 22? Now in addition——

Mr. HOPE. The Secretary of Agriculture in his letter of February 4 has asked us to include other commodities which were in the same category.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas has consumed 31 minutes.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. GRANGER].

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Chairman, S. 814 is a bill having for its purpose the support of the domestic sheep and wool industry. Indeed, it may be said that this legislation is necessary to save this industry, which is so essential to clothe the people of our country. It may be said that the wool industry, in and of itself, is not large in comparison with some other enterprises; yet, in my opinion, it is of utmost importance to the well-being and security of our country.

At the outset I want to make it clear that, personally, I have no direct or indirect interest in the sheep business, and I say this for the reason that sometimes Members of Congress are criticized when they sponsor legislation that might further their own special interests. The only interest I have is the interest of a great number of people whom I have the honor to represent, who do have a special interest in it, as well as the general interest of the rank and file of the people of the Nation.

The wool industry at the present time is a sick industry. Contrary to the general belief, the sheep industry has never been a flourishing business. Many operators for many years have been operating in a twilight zone of uncertainty. There are many reasons for this. I think one of the chief reasons is the fact that it has been subjected to too much politics. It has been kicked around through periods of tariff protection, free trade, and Government intervention to the extent that it has never had a long-time period of uninterrupted political tinkering.

This industry is especially important to the so-called range States of the West because of the fact that this semiarid region, the deserts and mountains, produce a forage crop that would be lost to the wealth of the Nation if it were not harvested by sheep. It is a truth and not a fiction that millions of acres of grazing lands are adaptable to the raising of sheep which are not adaptable to the production of any other kind of livestock. This industry has played a tremendous part in the building of the West. Many of the small towns and communities and schools are very much dependent upon this industry. Many communities could not carry on their normal functions, such as schools, if they were denied the taxes that are received from this source.

This legislation proposes to do these specific things:

Section 2: (a) This section directs the Commodity Credit Corporation to continue to support the price of wool to producers in the continental United States and Territories until December 31, 1948. The support price is the price at which the Commodity Credit Corporation supported wool in 1946—approximately 42 cents per pound, grease basis.

(b) This section authorizes adjustments in support prices to take care of various grades and qualities of wool.

Section 3: Under this section, certain provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 are made applicable to wool-support operations. These sections have no substantial bearing on the support program as such. In substance, they are as follows:

First. Section 385 makes the facts with respect to any loan as determined by the Commodity Credit Corporation final and not reviewable by any other governmental agency.

Second. Section 386 makes inapplicable certain sections of the Criminal Code, making it unlawful for Members of Congress to participate in public payments or contracts.

Third. Section 388 relates to the utilization of State, county, and local committees, extension services and other approved agencies, and to the recognition of cooperative associations in connection with the administration of the act.

Section 4: With respect to section 4 of the present bill, the chairman of the Agricultural Committee the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] will offer an amendment that will strike section 4 in its entirety and insert in lieu of this section, section 22, subsections A and B of the Agricultural Adjustment Act as amended, which will become section 4, with an amendment which includes wool among other commodities specified under the act. This section gives the authority to the President whenever he has reason to believe that any one or more articles are being, or are practically certain to be, imported into the United States under such conditions and in sufficient quantities as to render or tend to render ineffective or materially interfere with any program or operation undertaken, or to reduce substantially the amount of any product processed in the United States for any commodity subject to and with respect to which any program is in operation under this title.

In other words, if the President so finds, after an investigation and recommendation of the Tariff Commission, that the importation of any agricultural commodity would tend to make the support program ineffective, he may, if he so desires, impose import fees in such amounts as he deems advisable. This section is further amended by denying the President authority to impose quotas. There was opposition to this provision because of the difficulties in administration, and so it was thought advisable to make quotas not applicable to wool under this amendment. This provision simply has the effect of adding wool to section 22 with the limitation to which I have just referred.

Section 5: This section authorizes the Commodity Credit Corporation until December 31, 1948, to dispose of wool owned by it without regard to any restriction imposed upon it by law. This provision is designed to free the Commodity Credit Corporation from the prohibition of law which now prevents it from selling its wool below the parity price.

Now why is this legislation necessary? First, for the reason that when the enemy struck at Pearl Harbor and it looked as if he might overrun the whole Pacific, thereby cutting off the supply of wool from Australia, the Government realized the danger and immediately began to purchase and ship into this country great quantities of Australian wool. I do not think any of us doubted the wisdom of that policy. The fact remains that millions of pounds of Australian wool were brought here and stored in our warehouses in amounts far in excess of our immediate requirements. This was the beginning of wool stockpiling. Not only was a stockpile of wool created, but immediately wool became the first commodity to be brought under price control. The price ceiling was so rigidly held that the price of wool never had an opportunity to rise to the extent that other agricultural commodities have risen. The situation became so acute that there was no market whatsoever for our domestic wool, and it became necessary for the Government, through the Commodity Credit Corporation, in 1943, to support the price through purchase of all our domestic wools. Therefore, wool became the first war casualty and is still a war casualty, just as much as a plant built and used for war purposes, and so far as I know, there is no likelihood of rescuing it, unless the pending legislation is passed and passed immediately.

The Secretary of Agriculture advised the producers of wool that the purchase program was to end on April 15, unless he, the Secretary, was given authority to continue the present program. In the main, that is what this legislation proposes to do.

Since the purchase program began in 1943, the Government has purchased more than 1,250,000,000 pounds of wool. Of this amount, considerably more than 400,000,000 pounds are still in the hands of the Commodity Credit Corporation, and remain unsold. This raises the question of why it is not sold. From the beginning of this program in 1943, the domestic wool purchased was resold at ceiling prices for domestic wool. Selling prices were reduced in November 1945, February 1946, and August 1946, to increase the use of domestic wool by the mills. However, since under existing law, Fifty-ninth Statutes, page 50, 1945, the Commodity Credit Corporation could not sell wool at less than parity, it almost brought to a complete stop the sale of the Government's wool. What happened was that the Government continued to purchase wool, making its stock pile higher and higher, because of the fact that it could not sell at below parity or in competition with foreign wool.

This is the situation in which we find ourselves today, and the legislation we are considering provides first to support the price of wool until December 31, 1948, at its present price, which price, in my opinion, is still too low to rehabilitate to a desirable degree the wool-producing industry.

This legislation provides, further, the authorization of the CCC to sell domestic wool in competition with foreign or other wool. It provides for the imposition of import fees on foreign wool, if the President finds that it is necessary, to allow domestic wool to flow into the normal channels of trade. This provision, I think, is sound and equitable in that it only applies to commodities and products that are presently being supported by the Treasury of the United States.

If this bill becomes law, in my judgment, it will in no wise increase the cost of clothing, but on the other hand, may actually be the means of affording to the American textile industry a larger selection of wools at perhaps a cheaper price.

Even without the imposition of a fee, it was astounding to me to know that wool duties for the last 6 years have averaged $112,700,000, and that this represents 28.7 percent of all duties collected. It was also unbelievable to me that $33,700,000 annually from wool duties goes into section 32 funds. The disposition of section 32 funds is enlightening indeed. It is not only surprising, but unbelievable, that in the year 1946 $16,800,000 of section 32 funds were spent on the development of cotton exportation and that $3,255,000 was spent on diversion of cotton markets or development of additional uses for cotton. Of course, the wool producers fully realize the benefits they have had because of tariff protection.

Four million six hundred ninety-two thousand three hundred and fifty-eight dollars of section 32 funds was spent in 1946 in developing new uses for Irish potatoes. Three million two hundred thirteen thousand eight hundred and sixty-five dollars was used for development of exports of wheat flour, and $1,200,000 was used for exports of Irish potatoes, and $80,000,000 went to the school lunch program.

Not one cent was spent for wool, wool promotion, wool subsidy, or research. In 1946 a total of $20,055,000 was spent on cotton from section 32 funds.

I think these figures are very illuminating and I refer to them only to offset some of the propaganda now being disseminated by the wool trade with respect to the terrific drain on the Treasury that would be created by the legislation now pending. Wool tariffs have enriched the United States Treasury by $121,300,000 annually, and the consuming public has benefited by the lower cost of raw material. It would require only a very small percentage of this $121,000,000 annually to place the CCC stock pile on a competitive basis with foreign wool. In fact, it would probably require less than 50 percent of the amount of money supplied to section 32 from wool duty funds to have done the job. It seems to me that the whole wool policy has been quite a favorable financial investment so far as the Treasury is concerned.

I desire to call to the attention of the distinguished and able Members of the House from New England the fact that the range country of the West and the great textile industry of New England have a common interest in this problem. Let us see what happens. The sheep that produce the wool graze on our pasture lands year after year, depleting the soil, in some cases causing alarming soil erosion, gradually but surely making it less productive. That is the reason why we must come to Congress occasionally and ask for a pittance in the way of appropriations to be used in reseeding and conserving the soils so that we might continue to shear the wool from the sheep. We load the wool on railroad cars, ship it back to Boston and other great textile centers, where somebody is hired to wash and scour it. Yes, sir, the Boston wool speculators tell us that we cannot even wash it. We must pay the freight on 100 pounds of wool and dirt, which, when the scouring boys get through with, weighs only 40 pounds. This process, I assume, furnishes a good deal of employment to workers in New England.

The wool speculator gets his toll. The wool is finally processed, made into cloth, thence into clothing of all kinds, and sold to the American public. There is not more than 5 pounds of wool in a suit of clothes. The growers of the wool receive somewhere between $3 and $6 for their contribution to a suit of clothes that now costs $100. Are there any here who would say that the producer of this wool is not entitled to a miserly $5 as his cut out of a $100 suit of clothes?

Before I close, I want to emphasize again to you Members who represent farming communities—and there are a lot of you—that the money received from tariff on wool has gone into so-called section 32 funds where it has been used in every conceivable way to find more uses, and new markets for other farm products, yet, at the same time, wool has never benefited a single dime, so far as these funds are concerned, in the field of research.

I think it is high time that something be done for this great industry and I trust that the Members here will recognize the justice of the present emergency legislation, as well as recognizing that immediate permanent legislation is needed and should be enacted to make possible a profitable industry and stimulate the further economic production of a farm product that is so essential to the lives and well-being of the American people.

This bill, as it now stands, will in no wise, so far as I can see, interfere with or abrogate any of our reciprocal trade agreements. Section 22, if adopted, will simply put into effect legislation to cover wool as has already been in effect, and the President, under the authority given him, has imposed quotas on other farm commodities.

This legislation is not what the wool people want. It is not what I would like to see them get. It is a compromise, and perhaps the best we can get at this time.

Mr. Chairman, I wish the minority leader and the minority whip were in the Chamber; I would feel better about it, because there are people out in the halls who are getting some misinformation on this legislation.

It seems to me this legislation that we we are discussing is very simple, and it is a very practical problem. It is this simple: the Government of the United States, or the Commodity Credit Corporation, has in its possession nearly 500,000,000 pounds of wool which it cannot sell. That is the reason we are discussing this legislation; that is the only reason this bill is here. The question of tariff and other matters are beside the point.

I have been studying this question along with the Committee on Agriculture for the last 2 years endeavoring to find ways and means whereby we could dispose of this wool. I think it would be a fair question to ask how the Government got the wool and why it cannot sell it. I think those questions have been discussed.

We started to get this large stock pile of wool when the Japs struck at Pearl Harbor. Our Government, and I think properly so, imported all the wool they could purchase from Australia and brought it into the United States for military reasons. That was the thing that started the great stock pile of wool. That, of course, immediately closed the market to the local producers of wool. There was no place they could sell it, so it was the Government which went to their rescue and bought their wool at a price that was fixed by the Office of Price Administration, and that price has been held under strict control until price control went out of existence. The price of wool has never risen as the price of other commodities has; it has been held. That is how we got the wool in the first place.

Why can we not sell it? We did sell some of this wool, or the Commodity Credit Corporation sold some of it as long as it could be sold at the world price. Then 2 years ago when the parity price on domestic wool rose until it got above the world market price, the Government was prohibited from selling it. That is the situation we are in today and the only reason this legislation is here. There are two or three other things I wish to say about the wool situation.

What should the Congress do? We all concede the stock pile should be sold at some price to somebody. What should be the policy of the Congress in the disposition of this wool? Should it be sold at some price below parity and have the Federal Government assume the whole burden of the sale which might run, I am told by the Department of Agriculture, in the neighborhood of $50,000,000? Or should some restraint be placed upon the importation of wool until this stock pile is disposed of? That is not a difficult question to understand. What should be done about it? Should we allow wool to keep piling up in our country and try to sell this wool we have in competition with foreign wool or would it be good business to simply impose a fee to raise the price of the imported wool to a point where our wool can be sold? I am constrained to believe that the imposition of a fee is the sound, practical thing to do in this emergency, because this is emergency legislation. It will only run until the commodities under the Steagall amendment go out of existence on December 31, 1948.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word about an amendment that will be offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HERTER]. The Herter amendment, of course, is the crux of this whole business. The so-called Herter amendment would simply mean, if the House should adopt it, that the price of wool in the grease would drop anywhere from 5 to 6 cents a pound. This House does not want to do that I am sure. You would not think of doing that to any other farm commodity and I do not think you are going to do it in connection with this wool program. I challenge any one on the floor to question the statement that if the Herter amendment is adopted the price of wool would drop at least 4 or 5 cents per pound immediately. As a matter of fact, since the Secretary of Agriculture has ceased to buy wool there are buyers all over the country buying this wool for around 28 and 26 cents a pound because there is not a support program. If the House wants to follow that reasoning and do this great injustice to the wool industry it will have that opportunity today.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRANGER. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JENNINGS. The distinguished gentleman has made a very fine statement of fact in respect to the development of what brought about this present condition with respect to wool. It seems to me he has developed with great emphasis and force the fact we cannot afford to let the loss that might be entailed by the adoption of such an amendment as just discussed by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts come about because that loss would fall upon the owners of the lambs and sheep, many of whom depend upon the growth of those animals for a living, selling the wool on the wool market and the lamb crop for food that our people all over this country use.

Mr. GRANGER. The gentleman is absolutely right.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRANGER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I am particularly interested in the protection or the preservation of American production of strategic and critical materials of which wool is one. I would like the gentleman's opinion as to what the effect would be upon American production if that reduction in price were permitted or forced upon the wool growers of America?

Mr. GRANGER. Well, if I understand the gentleman's question correctly, it would break the wool growers and, further than that, it would do violence to the program the gentleman is trying to and has advocated with respect to the stock piling of minerals and other materials. It would destroy the whole program, in my judgment.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRANGER. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. BARRETT. Under the present price which has prevailed ever since Pearl Harbor the Tariff Commission has reported that the wool growers lost 9½ cents a pound, during 1946, and more for the two preceding years, and that if the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER] is adopted, it will result in an additional loss of 4 or 4½ cents a pound, which will most certainly accelerate the reduction in the sheep herds of this country.

Mr. GRANGER. The gentleman is absolutely right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Utah has expired.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FOGARTY].

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Chairman, during the past couple of weeks this Congress has gone on record, after a lot of skirmishes and, at times, bitter denunciations of other countries, as being in favor of this country's cooperation with other nations of the world in the promotion of a permanent peace.

Whether we like it or not, we are committed to a policy of international cooperation.

This bill flies directly in the face of that declared policy of cooperation. It harks back to the days of high tariff walls and is formal notice to other nations to keep out of here with their products, and it will serve no good purpose.

For several years we have had the reciprocal trade agreements aimed at fostering cooperation among nations and intended to break down artificial trade barriers.

These trade agreements have been praised, and they have been damned. I don't think this is the place to attack or defend that program, but I do want to say that if this bill is enacted, then every other industry will be asleep on its feet if it does not come in here and demand more and more tariff protection.

This is a back-handed slap at the reciprocal-trade-agreements policy, and, if enacted, it will be tantamount to encouraging other Nations to erect similar trade barriers of their own.

This bill, if it becomes law, will be a positive declaration that we are insincere when we talk about our desire to cooperate in the development of international trade. It will be added ammunition for those who claim we are imperialists—that we are interested in world affairs only for what we can get out of it.

It is particularly unfortunate that this issue should arise in the case of wool. Domestic wool accounts for less than one-tenth of one percent of our national income. But, it makes up more than 95 percent of the dutiable imports into the United States from Australia. Forty percent of our imports from New Zealand and 37 percent from South Africa are wool. These Commonwealths have been interested in the British trade preferences. We have been trying to break down that system and we have made progress. If we repudiate our noble declarations in this manner, then we might as well kiss good-bye to our hopes of breaking up these Empire preferences.

There is another, and highly important, consideration. In my district woolen mills are closed. Many talk about the possibilities of a depression. It is already squeezing the woolen industry. Prices are too high and people cannot afford to purchase the products of the woolen mills. The president pleads for price reductions and all of us know we face mighty serious times unless prices do come down.

Yet, here is a plan to guarantee the present high prices—and if possible, to force woolen prices still higher. What prospects are there for the woolen manufacturer? He is above the market now. Why should he risk everything in the face of these possibilities?

Men and women—employees of woolen mills—are walking the streets. And this bill proposes a proclamation of death for the woolen industry in the United States.

At the same time it will effectively prevent the consumer—already sorely tried by high prices—from purchasing badly needed woolen articles.

This legislation is bad business. I can find no justification for it. For many reasons—but particularly the importance of domestic well-being and international honesty—it should be soundly defeated.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FORAND].

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Chairman, there are so many reasons for my opposition to this bill, S. 814, that I find it very difficult in the limited time at my disposal to bring out all its defects. Seldom has legislation been considered by this House with greater possibilities of far-reaching repercussions, both domestically and internationally. Let us consider the latter for a moment.

Last April 10 Under Secretary of State Clayton went to Geneva to try to work out with 17 other nations a sound economic foundation for peace. As a part of this program the other nations were asked to join us in reducing barriers to trade. As the President advised the American public in his speech on March 6, 1947, at Baylor University:

At this particular time, the whole world is concentrating much of its thought and energy on attaining the objectives of peace and freedom. These objectives are bound up completely with a third objective—reestablishment of world trade. In fact the three—peace, freedom and world trade—are inseparable. The grave lessons of the past have proved it.

Mr. Chairman, among these 17 nations at Geneva are Australia, New Zealand, and the Union of South Africa. These nations and the others among the 17 nations had the assurance that Mr. Clayton and his representatives were free to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements dealing with wool. I understand that less than one-half of 1 percent of our farm income comes from wool, but wool is extremely important in the world trade of Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa, and provides by far the most important source of dollar exchange with which to buy American exports. Consequently, if we impose new barriers—barriers above the existing tariff of 34 cents a pound—we cannot escape the condemnation of economic isolationism that is sure to be cast upon this country.

Even without these overwhelming international ramifications, Mr. Chairman, this bill is a blow to the American economy as a whole.

Why should the woolen and worsted industries of Rhode Island bear the brunt of a support program for wool nearly double the average price of 22 cents per pound paid in 1939, the year before the war. Prices on other farm commodities are supported at only 90 percent of parity. The wool manufacturers of my State cannot possibly buy wool at 42 cents a pound and sell it to cloth makers in a competitive market with other types of cloth. If the demand for woolen cloth declines the workers in these mills, the mill owners, wool buyers and traders all along the line, and ultimately the growers of wool will suffer. And at the bottom of the heap let us not forget the consumers of woolens who would be required to pay the artificially inflated prices until they find an available substitute.

Mr. Chairman, I insert in the RECORD at this point an article which appeared in the Providence (R. I.) Journal of April 22, 1947, which indicates the disastrous effects enactment of this bill would have upon the Rhode Island wool trade:

FEDERAL MEASURE THREATENS JOBS IN RHODE ISLAND WOOL TRADE—MILL OWNERS, TRADERS, AND BUYERS THINK GOVERNMENT MAY WALK IN ON HEAVY-EMPLOYING INDUSTRY UNDER TERMS OF BILL ADOPTED BY SENATE COMMITTEE

(By Donald I. Rogers)

The Government may walk in on Rhode Island's important, heavy-employing woolen and worsted industry.

Mill owners, wool buyers, and traders—who collectively provide tens of thousands of jobs in this State and pay some of the top wages in textiles—see this threat in proposed legislation which is scheduled for action in Congress sometime this week.

Men who buy wool and sell it to the textile industry fear they are heading for the ranks of the unemployed. Succeeding them in business, they say, will be the United States Government.

This pending legislation, which is sending chills through the industry and is causing widescale girding for battle, goes under the name of the Robertson bill.

It has already been approved by the Senate Committee on Agriculture and will receive the support of the agriculture bloc when it comes to a vote.

It would:

Place all control over the price of wool, both domestic and foreign, in the hands of one man, the Secretary of Agriculture;

Require the Government to support the price of domestic wool at not less than its support price of 1946, which was about 42 cents a pound—highest in history;

Provide for floor taxes on existing mill inventories of wool up to 50 percent of value;

ADDITIONAL IMPORT FEES

Levy additional import fees on foreign wools on top of the present tariff of 34 cents a pound; and

Provide for fines up to $10,000 or a year in jail to American businessmen who do not comply with these provisions.

Local wool men say it would do more than that, that it would upset the wool trading business as it has never been upset before. If this is true, it would be an economic catastrophe which would hit hard at Rhode Island and all New England

Government monopoly of the wool market was a wartime expedient which wool men say has outworn its usefulness. But that section of the Federal Government which has its ear attuned to the strong voice of the agricultural interests from the West and Southwest want continued Federal control of wool.

Four years ago the Government, in the middle of the war, started buying all domestically produced wool. It has continued this practice ever since.

"SOMEONE MOVED IN"

Private merchants who buy and sell wool turned to the huge imports of foreign wool which have been flooding the country since 1940.

Now the boom is past. The imports are tapering off. Merchants some time ago started looking back toward their homes to resume their war-neglected domestic business. But someone moved in during their absence, someone who acts as though he's going to stay—Uncle Sam.

The Robertson bill gives Uncle Sam the lease to this property. Government support of the wool at the 1946 price (wool men call it a "super-price") of 42 cents a pound will mean simply that the Government will take over United States production, declare the worried wool merchants.

The woolen branch of the textile industry has been hard hit by over-production. The worsted section now geared to full-tilt capacity to meet extremely high demands, must eventually face drastic cutbacks.

The wool merchants lament that they cannot possibly buy wool at 42 cents a pound and sell it to cloth makers who must produce for a competitive market, without being inundated with red ink.

Prices on other United States commodities are supported at 90 percent of parity. Wool was one of these favored commodities until the war came along.

New England wool men who must after all do business with the sheep ranchers, sympathize with the growers' demands for protection from cheap, foreign wool.

But they think 90 percent of parity would be ample. They revolt at the proposed guaranty of 42 cents for 2 years.

Parity gives growers prices representing 1909–14 buying power.

PREWAR PRICES

In 1939, the year before the war, the average price paid for wool was a little over 22 cents a pound.

Between the two World Wars the average price was 26 cents.

Parity prices change from month to month; they fall when the prices of manufactured items fall, rise when they rise.

It's a whole lot different, say the wool merchants, when you support a price at a fixed level, "come hell or high water."

While other commodities are supported at 90 percent of parity, the present parity price for wool is somewhat under the 42-cent support price guaranteed by the Government. The 42 cents is actually more than 100 percent of parity. A year ago the parity price was 32.9 cents.

If the prices of manufactured items should drop to last year's level (and in a declining market, this is held likely) the 42-cent wool would be 127 percent of parity.

This would prevail while other commodities were pegged at 90 percent of parity on the declining market.

Why, ask the dealers, must wool be so favored when other commodities are not?

Parity is a bottom guaranteed by the Government. It is not a pegged top price.

PRICES COMPARED

Without the questionable benefit of Government monopoly the wool merchants paid fair prices for their wool, they contend. They have figures which show that the sheep ranchers, between the two wars, got on an average more than 96 percent of parity for their wool. For 7 years the price was over 115 percent of parity.

What happened meantime to the other basic commodities?

The average price from 1921 to 1940 was only 77 percent of parity for the six basic commodities—cotton, corn, wheat, tobacco, rice, and peanuts.

In view of this, demand the angry wool merchants, why must wool be singled out for financial boondogling.

Here in Rhode Island, a wool dealer must either make his way in a competitive market or go out of business. If a textile mill doesn't operate successfully, it must close down.

Now the Government, charge local dealers, proposes to insure the incomes of wool growers at unwarranted high levels at the expense of the wool merchants and the wool and worsted cloth makers.

FOREIGN COMPETITION

Yet the Government is on the record as being against protection. The State Department is now meeting with United Nations members at the International Trade Organization in Geneva trying to lower protective tariffs.

Among tariffs to be reduced are those which protect the textile industry from low-priced foreign goods.

Apparently, said one indignant local wool man, the Government is against protection only when it applies to an industry, not when it applies to a commodity.

The need for piling up huge wool surpluses?

During this recent 4-year buying spree, the Government grabbed every ounce of wool it could lay its hands on. At the beginning of this year the mountain of fleece totaled 480,000,000 pounds—nearly a full year's needs at the prewar consumption rate.

While the Government held onto this mountain of fleece and sought more, textile mills did business as usual through the wool merchants of Massachusetts and Rhode Island, who were buying from abroad.

As a result, they used 3 pounds of foreign wool to every pound of domestic wool.

In prewar years, before the Government took over this middleman's job of buying wool, the opposite was true. Consumption was at the rate of 3 pounds of domestic to 1 pound of foreign wool.

WORLD WOOL SURPLUS

Prices on other commodities are high—well above the farm bloc's former ideal parity level. That's because there is a world shortage of most commodities.

Not so with wool. There's a huge world surplus.

The Robertson bill attempts to increase prices while surpluses pile up.

Inserted in the measure is a supplementary provision allowing the Commodity Credit Corporation to sell wool from the 480,000,000-pound stock pile at prices competitive with the foreign wool.

When the average citizen goes to buy a suit or other wool or worsted item, this should please him.

But he'll feel it on March 15—income-tax day.

For the CCC would continue to buy domestic clip at the 42-cent level and sell it at the prevailing world price.

The loss is to be passed along to the United States Treasury; from the Treasury it'll be passed along to every United States citizen.

In conclusion, it is my opinion that not only the practicable idealism of expanding world trade on a reciprocal basis is an essential framework for peace, but also that hard-headed business consideration within our own country, and particularly my own State of Rhode Island, require the defeat of this bill.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER].

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, I believe that everyone concedes that the provision in this bill for the imposition of an import fee or duty on wool would actually wreck the Conference that has been carried on and is now temporarily suspended at Geneva. The passage of this bill would certainly justify criticism by delegates of other countries to that Conference, and they would have every right to question the good faith of the United States Government.

If you want further proof of that, think of the fact that Under Secretary of State Clayton returned home from Geneva solely because this bill was introduced and the committee had reported it favorably. The head of the Australian delegation to the Conference at Geneva went back to Australia to get special instruction from that country with regard to his conduct and his suggestions and his trading powers at Geneva because this bill was introduced and reported favorably by the committee.

The question before the House today, Mr. Chairman, is whether we should pass this bill after only 3 hours of general debate without any study by the Committee on Ways and Means of this House, the committee that really has jurisdiction over import duties, import fees and tariffs, and the reciprocal-trade agreements program. We have been holding hearings on this and related subjects for 2 months, and here the Committee on Agriculture, which is not expected to know too much about import duties and tariffs, generally, does not even have a hearing on this subject of the import duty provided in this bill. The amendments to the bill, as I understand, were not known to the State Department.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I decline to yield at this time. When I have finished my statement I shall be glad to yield.

The passage of this sort of legislation after 3 hours of general debate is quite a contrast with the time spent on the bills with respect to aid to Greece and Turkey and other countries in Europe. A few days ago the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Commerce issued statements with respect to the week of May 18 to 24, which is known as World Trade Week. Is it not ironical that this House might this very week pass this legislation which will wreck any possibility of increasing world trade and good will? Everybody knows that the United States cannot be prosperous if we are shut out of world markets, and this is one of the types of legislation which will cause reaction from practically every country in the world, because they will have no faith in the international trade policy of the United States. They will rightly be fearful that any time some industry in this country is suffering from perhaps some temporary maladjustment it will come to the Congress of the United States and get relief through tariff barriers or some other form of special restriction on imports.

One of the gentlemen on the Republican side mentioned that he would like to go back to the good old Smoot-Hawley tariff days. That system never worked. The people of the country do not want to go back to that system. As I said before, Mr. Chairman, we must have international trade and we must have international good will in order for America to be prosperous.

This is a more serious matter than many of the Members of the House realize. I know some Members are seriously concerned about it, but they somehow just feel that they are not able to take an active part in defeating it. I think we ought here to consider the seriousness of this proposal. I think we Members ought all to join in bipartisan support of the policy of this administration for expanded international trade, the same as we have bipartisan support of the foreign political policy of the Government. One is joined to the other. You cannot separate them. If this measure passes and becomes law it will have a tremendous effect in enclosing the United States in a fence so that our products cannot be exported profitably to other countries of the world. It will cause business recession, it will cause unemployment, because we know that for the United States of America to be prosperous we have to export at least 10 percent of our production. If we start throwing up barriers of this sort other countries will do exactly what they did after we passed the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill. That is something I am sure the country does not want again.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield two additional minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOPE. I simply wanted to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Committee on Agriculture did hold hearings on this question and we had before us for almost 2 days of the hearings a representative from the State Department, because we had before us two bills, one by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. BARRETT] and one by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. HILL], which imposed import quotas. The committee did go into that question during the hearings.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I do not want to make a misstatement, but I understand, although I may be wrong, that the Under Secretary of State said that the amendments proposed to the bill as now reported out were not considered by the State Department and that they thought the situation was therefore different from what it was at the time that the representative of the State Department testified.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. This particular amendment was not included in the bill that we considered, but exactly the same principle of an import quota was in the bill and is dealt with in the amendment to section 22. Therefore, that question was considered directly.

Mr. EBERHARTER. There evidently is a difference of opinion between the Under Secretary of State and the gentleman from Kansas on that particular point as to the principle involved.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. GRANGER].

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Chairman, many of the Members of Congress appreciate what the gentleman has said on this matter of wool which we are now discussing. It is a fact, is it not, that there was almost an embargo placed upon our own domestic wool and that Great Britain had free access to our market while our boys were out fighting to help win the war and Great Britain took over the whole market of the United States. That is a fact.

Mr. EBERHARTER. So far as the particular facts on the wool situation are concerned, I have sympathy with the wool growers of this country, but I say this is not the way to take care of it. I am certain that at Geneva some arrangement can be made so that the wool growers of this country would be protected. The fact that the Government has all of this wool on hand, I think, should be charged to the cost of the war. The United States should bear the loss because we brought wool in as a military necessity. The farmers should not lose by it. But I say the principle of expanding international trade should not be wrecked to save the wool growers of this country. It could be handled in some other way.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I would like to bring to the gentleman's attention the testimony of the gentleman from the State Department before our committee on this very thing. Listen to what he says:

The point of view of the administration with respect to wool is contained in a letter from the President to a Special Committee To Investigate the Production, Transportation, and Marketing of Wool, dated March 11, 1946. This letter, and the accompanying memorandum, point out that a program which would best serve the long-run welfare of the wool producers, protect the interests of merchants and the general public, and encourage beneficial trade relationships with foreign countries would contain the following features: (1) Support for wool equivalent to that granted other important agricultural commodities; (2) sale of domestic wool at prices competitve with the duty paid import price of foreign wools.

That is the statement of the representative of the State Department before our committee not 6 weeks ago.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Why, certainly. The matter could be worked out. But the indisputable fact is that the State Department is opposed to this bill in its present form, and for the very good reason that the bill now is in such shape that it will wreck the international trade conference going on in Geneva at the present time.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. May I ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the Senate version of this bill takes care of the producers?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I understand the Senate version of the bill is not nearly so disastrous to international trade and that it would take care of the farmers and wool growers.

Mr. COOLEY. The Senate version of the bill is acceptable to the State Department. The gentleman from Colorado, I am quite sure, is leaving an erroneous impression with the membership of the House when he states that the testimony which he read contemplated import fees such as we are now considering.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I thank the gentleman for helping me out on that particular phase of the problem because I am not a member of that committee and have not had access to all the information.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] has expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. HILL].

Mr. JOHNSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. JOHNSON of Illinois. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] offered a criticism a few moments ago that we were only devoting 3 hours today to this bill, while we gave plenty of time, a few days, to the bill providing for the Turkish-Greek loan. I want to say there is a reason for it, because that bill was for foreign countries, and 3 hours is plenty of time to consider America.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I asked the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] to yield in order to call his attention to the fact that he underestimates Mr. Clayton. If Mr. Clayton can go to Geneva and can make those delegates from 18 countries believe that our present administration has put an embargo on tobacco seed going out of this country, and can pay an export subsidy on cotton and can erect two embargoes on cotton coming into this country, and can put an embargo on wheat coming into this country, I should think he would be in a position to convince the delegates of those 18 countries that what little we do with wool will not have much effect. They have been able to sell the American people and make them believe they are carrying on a reciprocal-trade program when as a matter of fact the Kindred Women's Club and the Woman Voters' League have been deceived into believing that. I think Mr. Clayton ought to be able to pull the wool over their eyes over there a little.

Mr. HILL. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Now, Mr. Chairman, to close out the statement from the State Department, the State Department sent a young man up there who knew just as much about wool as some of the folks our good friend from Wisconsin was talking about. What I read was the statement he made to our committee. I do not know what he meant by it, because I cannot interpret what is in some other man's mind. I have trouble enough with my own. So the State Department did support the provisions of this bill. Of course, they want to approach it now from another angle.

I agree with our distinguished chairman [Mr. HOPE], first, that this is emergency and critical legislation. I, for one, cannot see how this Congress can escape its responsibility in the passage of such legislation as is offered to you this afternoon by our Committee on Agriculture. I would like to say first, How did we get into this position? Was it overnight? Is it suddenly—something that has caved in upon us? It is not. This is a serious situation our country faces concerning wool. This stock pile of wool began even before the date of Pearl Harbor. As the gentleman from Utah [Mr. GRANGER] said, he and I served on a subcommittee of our Committee on Agriculture and we checked into the beginning of this wool stock pile in 1943. If I had time to take these records that we have, I could very definitely show this committee that the distinguished gentleman [Mr. GRANGER] and I, with other members of the Committee on Agriculture, knew at that time exactly what we were headed for, and we knew that we would meet this situation when the war closed and again we were faced with a postwar era in regard to surpluses in agricultural products. We knew when those great ships, loaded with wool from Australia, were headed for Britain and they could not go to Britain because of the sinking of so many hundreds of ships of supplies by the German submarines, where did those ships go? They were rerouted and came to America. The stock pile, the entire clip of Australia, was the beginning of our stock pile of wool. Now we face a situation where we have four hundred and fifty or four hundred and sixty million pounds of wool in stock pile, and the Commodity Credit Corporation is prevented from selling a single pound to anyone.

Now, I wish to read how we got into this particular situation regarding the price of wool. Listen to what this young man said who was at that time president of the National Wool Growers' Association back in 1944. I will read quickly:

The causes leading up to the present situation are briefly as follows: At the outbreak of the present war the British Government arranged to purchase all wools grown in its Dominions, comprising approximately two-thirds of the total world production, for the duration of the war and for 1 year thereafter. This agreement is now in effect and it is my understanding that negotiations are well under way to continue it for a period of 3 years after the war.

Immediately after Pearl Harbor the British Government established an issue price for wools sold in the American market which today is approximately $1.05 per pound on a scoured or clean-content basis. This comparatively low price was established primarily to insure Australasian wools the widest possible market in this country. For the first time, these wools were sold and continue to be sold in the United States below the price of domestic wools. Hitherto, because of greater uniformity in quality and more careful grading, Australasian wools have always sold in the United States at a price from 10 to 15 percent in excess of prices for comparable grades of domestic wool.

In other words, just the minute our market completely passes into the hands of foreign producers of wool the price of wool to the American consumers and manufacturers will immediately rise; and no one can stand on this floor and refute that statement. I have never heard one single sentence of testimony in our committee in the long period of time we have considered this subject where anyone could show that if we passed this legislation there would be any runaway price on wool or woolen clothing. Frankly, I do not believe there will be. The passage of this legislation will give the wool producers of this country not a guaranty but a feeling of security that they can go ahead now and take care of their farms and ranches and have some assurance that they can keep their business in a liquid form. I am sure not a Member of this House objects to that.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to read an article on the decline of the number of sheep. This was well taken care of by our chairman, but listen to this:

This constant and continuing liquidation of the domestic industry has many causes. One of the factors among those causes for liquidation is the uncertainty of the future. This uncertainty is caused by: (1) Lack of a long-term Government wool policy, (2) little increase in the price for domestic wool, (3) increased costs of production and lack of efficient labor.

I might add that I think the lack of efficient labor is just as much the cause of the increase of the cost of producing lambs on the range as any other factor. Inefficient help at the wrong time of the year means a great loss in the production of lambs. The right kind of help in the early season means many more lambs to go to market in the fall.

(4) Dumping of foreign wool on the American market. The only market for domestic wool in 1941, 1942, and 1943 was for defense purposes. Domestic wool was given preference over the use of foreign wool by the armed forces, particularly the Army. When the Army requirements decreased in 1944, 1945, and 1946 much less domestic wool was used.

And I might say here, and I will not repeat, that in 1946 when we were only producing—and I wish you would listen to these figures—only producing 30 percent of all the wool that was necessary in the domestic markets—that is all we could produce—we were only using 25 percent of the 30 percent that we did produce. All the rest was coming from foreign countries. Twenty-five percent of the total 30 percent of wool is all we used. It is important to keep those figures in mind and I hope you will remember them. In 1946 we probably had the greatest total consumption of wool that we ever had in any one year since we have been a nation—over 1,000,000,000 pounds. Eighty percent of it was imported foreign wool. In 1946 the Commodity Credit Corporation bought an amount of 450,000,000 pounds of wool, and, as I have stated already, they cannot sell a single pound of it because the law prohibits them from selling this wool below parity, a parity price so low that they cannot sell the wool and they will not be able to sell any of it unless you pass this legislation. What the stock pile might be at the end of 1947 is anybody's guess. Someone testified before our committee that it might be as high as a billion and a quarter pounds. Keep that figure in mind also.

Mr. Chairman, sheep raising in this Nation is one of the great industries of the West. We have over 800,000,000 acres of pasture land with 90 percent of it fit only for the grazing of livestock. That is important to those people out there and it is important to these people in the East, it is important to these gentlemen who are interested in the manufacture of wool on the east coast of these United States.

In the last 5 years you will find, according to the census taken on farms, that the sheep population has been reduced 35 percent. How long can we have a wool industry, I ask you, if you average a 35 percent reduction in 5 years? No one can dispute those figures because they are taken from reports of the Department of Agriculture.

I might call your attention also to the fact that should we get into another war as some are worried we might, wool is a critical material and is absolutely necessary when it comes to providing our men with warm clothing and since we are flying airplanes through the air in temperatures of from 40 to 100 degrees or more below zero it is more necessary than ever before that the men in our Army, Navy and Air Corps be properly clad with the proper type of wool clothing. It is important, therefore, that we have wool. If we are going to reduce our domestic wool production 35 percent in the number of sheep in 5 years, what would happen in 10 years? What will happen in 20 years? I dare not contemplate what the future of the sheep industry might be unless some type of protection is given this industry.

Are we going to permit ourselves to be left to the mercy of the foreign producers of wool should we have a war? Let us keep in mind that if we should be put at the mercy of attack, the first thing they will do after they have bombed our cities would be to take off our ships, take off the sea the production of foreign countries that might be coming into the great industrial production centers of the United States.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman regards the sheep producer as one of the casualties of the war, does he not?

Mr. HILL. Yes; I do.

Mr. COOLEY. If the sheep industry is a casualty of the war, what is the gentleman's objection to compensating the sheep producers in the manner provided in the Senate bill?

Mr. HILL. The gentleman knows as well as I do what the Senate bill contains. Of course, we considered the Senate bill, but after careful consideration of it we decided if we put wool in section 22, and I hope to come to that in a moment, there is no reason why the wool producer should not have the same benefit that the cotton producers have. Is there any reason why the wool producers should not have the protection that you give the tobacco growers? There is no reason under the sun why all farm products should not have the same protection. I am in favor, and I am sure the gentleman is, of putting wool under section 22.

If I had time I would like to read some of the information on how funds raised by tariff have been used, and how the money obtained from the importation of wool has been used.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. I do not think the gentleman has answered my question. If, during the war, we built up a tremendous stock pile of wool, and it is down to the extent of 400,000,000 pounds or more, hanging over the wool market, and if it is a casualty as a result of the war, why should we not provide the necessary money with which to save harmless the wool producers of America and protect them in that way rather than to go into the field of tariffs and trade barriers?

Mr. HILL. There is just an honest difference of opinion, I will say to my good friend.

Mr. COOLEY. Is not the result about the same?

Mr. HILL. If I thought you could get the same protection under the Senate bill, you would have no argument from me, but you must confess that wool has as much right—and I say "right" now because we are talking about production, the wool itself, not the wool producer—to be under section 22 as any other commodity.

Mr. COOLEY. I would like to interrupt the gentleman to just make this statement, that section 22 only became necessary because we had certain adjustment programs in regard to certain commodities. Many of them were exportable crops and we curtailed production.

Mr. HILL. If the gentleman will yield me some more time I will be glad to continue this dialog indefinitely. I feel I have the answer, and the answer is this, that the wool, in itself, has the same right that cotton has, that peanuts have, and that tobacco has. They should all be treated alike, and I am certain that the Senate bill did not do that.

Mr. COOLEY. Following the gentleman's argument, we might as well say that section 22 should be applicable to all agricultural commodities.

Mr. HILL. And I will support such an amendment.

Mr. COOLEY. I would not.

Mr. HILL. Because the gentleman has been receiving special treatment, and therefore he would not support it.

Mr. COOLEY. No; I am not.

Mr. HILL. Well, I am not one to argue with the gentleman.

To continue my talk, I would like to say one further thing. Notice the importation of wool. I wish I could read all the figures. I gave them to the chairman awhile ago but let me give you these figures of the amount of wool imported into this country in recent years.

In 1946, 819,253,000; 1945, 704,034,000; 1944, 582,168,000; 1943, 642,887,000; 1942, 782,647,000; 1941, 613,566,000; 1940, 197,783,768; 1939, 74,611,135; 1938, 18,442,673.

I have the importations of wool and apparel wool since 1941. That ought to go back far enough for any gentleman on my right hand, and I will include them in my remarks. Now who supports this legislation? That is interesting. I think every one of us should keep in mind just who the folks are that asked for this legislation. I know that we are going to be accused by saying this is special legislation for the wool growers. It is nothing of the sort. There never was a piece of legislation more necessary for the boys and the girls that need wool clothing and the men and women that need wool clothing. It is all bosh and folderol to stand up here and say we do not need this legislation. We need this legislation if you are going to protect this industry.

Let us see who supports it, and you will be surprised when I tell you. Here are some of the people that support this legislation, and I have a list of them in my hand. Let us see who they are. The first is the American Farm Bureau Federation, and I have a wire from them that I will file with the committee.

Then we have the National Grange, and I want to read what they say about this:

During the war farmers expanded total production by more than one-third at the urgent request of the Government to feed this Nation and our Allies. That expansion was made at considerable sacrifice in soil and human resources.

There is no reason why they should not support this program. That is the National Grange. In addition to the National Grange, I have the National Council of Farm Cooperatives, and all the wool growers associations, of Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, and the Texas Sheep and Goat Raisers' Association—we even got the goats in the territory of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FISHER]—the Utah Wool Growers, the Washington Wool Growers, and the Western South Dakota and the Wyoming Wool Growers. We are not in strange company and we are not alone in this great effort to try to save the sheep and the wool industry. Not only that, but I say to you with all the earnestness in my soul that this might be the example, this might be the diagram, this might be the way to solve the difficulties that are going to rise as we pass out of this war era into the postwar period in the production of agricultural products.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FISHER].

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Chairman, this bill should be enacted and section 22 of the AAA Act should, as recommended by the House Committee on Agriculture, be included. That will enable the President, if he finds that conditions warrant, to have the Tariff Commission to hold hearings and determine at any time whether the dumping of foreign wool on our markets is materially interfering with the Government's wool-support program. Then, upon that finding, the President may impose import fees on such imported wool in such amounts and for such period as in his judgment may be necessary.

What is wrong with including wool under that section, Mr. Chairman? It is claimed by some that to do so will interfere with international trade. It is claimed that Mr. Clayton who has been attending the Geneva Conference on trade agreements feels that to include wool under section 22 will hamper his negotiations. It is intimated that Great Britain and her Dominions object to wool being included in section 22. Has it come to pass that we must seek permission from a foreign country before we dare enact legislation dealing with a domestic issue? Surely that cannot be the views of the British. Only last month the British increased the tariff by 50 percent on American tobacco imported into that country. We were not consulted about whether we should like that or not. This is a domestic issue.

This bill should not be clouded by all this talk about a tariff issue being involved. That is not the case at all. It is proposed here to include wool under section 22 just as cotton is already included and just as wheat is already included, and just as many other farm products are already included. If placing wool under section 22 will interfere with international trade negotiations, then why is it that cotton and wheat and all the others do not have the same effect? If it is good business to apply section 22 to cotton and the others, as I am convinced it is, then why isn't it good business to apply it to wool, of which we have a considerable surplus at this time? The President invoked section 22 in protection of cotton from excessive imports only a few months ago and properly so.

I am sure the gentleman from North Carolina does not care to change that arrangement.

Mr. COOLEY. I certainly believe in section 22 and I realize and appreciate its importance. But certainly section 22 does not deal with any commodity other than a surplus commodity. We are taking wool, of which we have a deficit, and are putting it in with surplus commodities such as cotton, wheat, tobacco, and other crops, and further, the commodities that section 22 deals with are commodities on which we have an adjustment program.

Mr. FISHER. The gentleman might unwittingly mislead somebody by that statement because we are not doing any such thing. We are simply authorizing the President of the United States, if he sees that the conditions require it in order to protect a support program, to have a hearing by the United States Tariff Commission, following which then some such sort of protection may be devised and the provisions of that section invoked.

Mr. COOLEY. I still maintain that my statement is accurate, and I think the chairman of the committee will agree that this is the only commodity which is not a surplus commodity that will be under section 22 if this bill passes as is proposed.

Mr. FISHER. Does the gentleman understand that the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture of February 4 requested that wool be included in section 22?

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman read a letter a moment ago with reference to the placing of other commodities in section 22.

Mr. FISHER. That included wool, did it not?

Mr. COOLEY. That includes wool. That is because there is a support price on wool and not because there is an adjustment program on wool.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISHER. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. It is my understanding that the object of this bill is to give the same treatment to the wool growers as is given to the growers of wheat, tobacco, and cotton.

Mr. FISHER. The gentleman is exactly correct.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I am for it.

Mr. FISHER. I repeat for emphasis that on the 4th day of last February the Secretary of Agriculture, over his signature, the letter having cleared the Bureau of the Budget, there evidently having been no objection from the State Department or the White House, wrote to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture suggesting that wool be put under section 22. That is what is proposed in this bill. So what is wrong about it? Are you contesting the policy of the Secretary of Agriculture and the White House and the Bureau of the Budget?

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISHER. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. GRANGER. I hope the gentleman from North Carolina is not laboring under the assumption that there is not a surplus of wool. I thought we had a year's supply on hand that we could not sell.

Mr. FISHER. Yes; not only is there a stock pile of 450,000,000 pounds of wool at this time, but in the pipe lines and factories they have an equal amount, making a total of about 1,000,000,000 pounds in this country today.

Mr. GRANGER. In addition to that, there is a world surplus of wool.

Mr. FISHER. In addition to that, there is a total of 4,000,000,000 pounds of wool in the world, which is the highest at any time in the history of the world. The United States of America is the principal dumping ground today. They are looking for places where they can sell that wool. This old question of the tariff issue has no place in this debate, because the President of the United States determines whether the act should be invoked and not until it is necessary will that be done.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman must be in error on that. The Tariff Commission must make findings before that is done and based on those findings the President in good faith shall proceed to impose a fee.

Mr. FISHER. The gentleman, of course, knows that the Tariff Commission cannot do anything until the President makes a finding that it is necessary for the Tariff Commission to make an investigation and only at the request of the President of the United States can the Tariff Commission invoke its jurisdiction over this subject matter.

Mr. COOLEY. I think the President is going to exercise his judgment honestly and fairly and only if the necessity exists as found after a hearing conducted by the Tariff Commission.

Mr. FISHER. That is right, and then it is applied only when a condition of necessity actually exists.

WARTIME STOCK PILES DISRUPTED MARKETS

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is contended by some that this legislation is not necessary and that it is too favorable from the standpoint of the domestic wool grower. I deny that. Before the war there was no demand for relief. The consumption in this country by our mills was about 600,000,000 pounds per year. Our wool then moved at prices competitive with foreign wools, regardless of whether the domestic grower made money or not. The fact is that the home-grown wool was consumed and the market was kept uncluttered by stock piles. But today the picture has reversed itself. Eighty percent of apparel wool consumed by our mills last year came from abroad and only 20 percent was grown in this country. In 1945, the percentage of domestic wool consumed was only 26.3 percent. For several years immediately before the war our mills used American grown wool to the extent of 70 to 90 percent of total consumption.

This condition has come about, Mr. Chairman, as a result of conditions growing out of the war. The British wool monopoly came out of the war with three times the normal carry-over of wool on hand and with greatly reduced markets. The war reduced the markets in Europe and Japan. In this country a year before Pearl Harbor, arrangements were being made for stock piling of imported wools for security reasons. We held as high as 518,000,000 pounds of British wools on storage. We bought outright a total of 302,500,000 pounds of Australian wool and 34,700,000 pounds of Uruguayan wools. In addition the British in 1942 warehoused in this country for consumption in an emergency 122,000,000 pounds of South African Cape wool.

Practically all of this wool has been liquidated, but its disposal has burdened the domestic market and added to the accumulation of the present stock pile of about 450,000,000 pounds by the CCC, with a new spring clip now being shorn.

From this background, it is easy to see that the wool marketing situation is far from normal. And aside from the domestic supply there is the world stock pile. It comprises a total of around 4,000,000,000 pounds. It is estimated that it will take at least a decade to absorb it in an orderly way. An estimated two-thirds of the world accumulation is under the cartel control of a joint organization known as the British Wool Disposals, Ltd., a corporation jointly owned by the four Governments of the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand, and the Union of South Africa. Those countries normally produce some 85 percent of the world's supply. Throughout the war they have maintained stable prices for their growers. On at least two occasions the compensation to the producer has been increased. This has helped to prevent a decline in the number of sheep raised and amount of wool produced. To keep wool production as a thriving business, the British naturally look to the United States as their principal market, one of the very few financially stable markets in the world today. Foreign wool imports last year amounted to 819,253,000 grease pounds, or six times the average importation of that period from 1936 to 1940, inclusive. And yet we hear people talk of the wool tariff interfering with world trade.

DOMESTIC SHEEP INDUSTRY ON DECLINE

And our sheep industry was a war casualty from still another standpoint. Because of lack of stability of the domestic market, the uncertainty of the future, the increased cost of production, and the dumping of foreign wool on our domestic markets while our own stock pile has increased, the sheep population in the United States has dwindled appreciably during the past few years. This decline in numbers has been both constant and alarming. The drop has come from 49,807,000 in 1942 to 37,517,000 in 1946, according to figures compiled by the Department of Agriculture. The unofficial estimate for 1947 is that the decline will bring the number to around 32,542,000. The corresponding production of wool has declined from 459,478,000 pounds in 1942 to an estimated 300,000,000 in 1947. There you have an industry, Mr. Chairman, one that the Army and Navy Munitions Board declared to be a strategic and critical one from the standpoint of national security, declining by a third in only 5 years. And yet there are those who say the Government should keep its hands off and take no interest in the plight of the sheep grower in this country and the maintenance of a domestic wool industry.

REASONABLE PRICE IS ESSENTIAL

Mr. Chairman, I realize full well that that there are those who would like to see the domestic wool industry thrown to the wolves. There are those who say it is an uneconomic industry. Such shortsighted people would do well to consult with Army and Navy officials who are thinking in terms of the future security of this country. They would do well to talk with Maj. Gen. E. L. Corbin, Director of Procurement, Office of the Quartermaster General, who at one time during the war stated:

> There is no doubt that Old Man Winter and the lack of wool in Germany is causing as many casualties in the German Army as is powder and ammunition.

They would do well to think of that day when this country will be entirely dependent for its wool upon a foreign cartel. And when they do they will be thinking of that day when wool will probably sell for $1 a pound.

Now, it has been contended that the 1946 price of wool is too high. The facts simply do not support that conclusion. The price is not too high. When compared with general increases of other agricultural commodities in recent years, the price would appear to be too low. Let us look at just a few of them. Take rye, for example. It brought 57 cents a bushel in 1941, and in 1946 it sold for $1.91, an increase of 233.3 percent. Corn sold for 71 cents in 1941, and jumped to $1.73 last year, an increase of 144.4 percent. Flaxseed, which is highly subsidized by the Government and which is a competing fiber with wool and free of a depressed market caused by a Government stock pile, brought $1.85 per bushel in 1941 and the recent price was $3.77, an increase of 103.8 percent. Wheat increased by 86.8 percent. Cotton, whose price has been far too low for years, increased by 101 percent, and the price of peanuts jumped exactly 100 percent, a very proper increase. Lambs went up 60 percent and sheep prices were hiked by 43.6 percent. These are official Government figures.

NO INCREASE IN WOOL PRICES SINCE 1941

But what about wool? What has been the increase in the price of wool since 1941? Those of you who are not familiar with the facts will doubtless be surprised to know that there has been no increase whatever in the price of wool to the growers since the Japs struck at Pearl Harbor. There had been an increase from September 15 to December 9, 1941, of 13.2 percent. With the cost of feed and labor increasing from 100 to 200 percent during the war and with all other cost factors increasing, how can it be said that the 1946 price of wool is unreasonable?

The fact is, a very strong case can be made in favor of an increase. But we are not here asking for that. We are willing to go along through next year at the price that was frozen at the time of Pearl Harbor. President Truman has himself recognized the plight of the wool grower and has suggested that a more equitable price formula be devised. He has said the present price is too low. A year ago the President addressed a letter to the chairman of the Special Wool Committee of the Senate in which he stated:

> There is general agreement that this Government must protect the incomes of wool growers on a level comparable with that afforded producers of other agricultural products.

The President went on to say:

> Specifically, in view of the large-scale decline of sheep numbers in the United States during recent years, the large wool surpluses now hanging over foreign and domestic markets, and the present and prospective marketing problems confronting wool growers, it would seem desirable for Congress to enact special wool legislation. Such legislation should provide that—
> 1. The parity price of wool be revised or established at the so-called comparable level so that wool parity prices will be on a level equivalent to parity prices for other farm products.

Mr. Chairman, the President there took note of that which is generally recognized with respect to the parity formula for pricing wool. The parity base being the 1909–14 period, it is a well-known historical fact that as compared with other agricultural commodities, wool is placed at a disadvantage. That was an unfavorable period for wool because wool prices were depressed at that time, and also because of the fact that in 1913, there was an elimination of import duties on wool. That explains President Truman's recommendation that the parity on wool be revised "on a level equivalent to parity prices for other farm products."

Other farm products have been revised on a comparable basis. I refer to the revised or comparable prices established for dry field peas, peanuts for oil, and soybeans, all of which are subjects of Government support under the so-called Steagall amendment at this time.

If the comparable price formula were adopted and then if even 90 percent of comparable price were paid for wool, the average to the grower would amount to 3 cents per pound more than the 1946 wool price. But as I have said, the comparable price proposition is not before us. No fight, howsoever justified, is being made for it. The committee of the House, and the Senate itself, have already decreed that the price shall be the same as was paid in 1946, and we accede to that determination. Then, too, there is the matter of competitive prices on synthetics to be considered.

GROWER ENTITLED TO PROTECTION WHILE STOCK PILE IS BEING DISPOSED OF

Now, in conclusion, the simple facts are, as the Washington Post recently pointed out in an editorial favoring the imposition of import fees on wool, that the domestic wool industry is in a dilemma. This came about by no act of the grower. It came about as a result of the war. Vast Government stock piles for reasons of security and unprecedented imports served to disrupt the once stable domestic wool market. The grower is entitled to protection during the time that condition, brought about by no act of his, is being relieved. It is well known that cost of production of wool in some foreign countries is so low that they can produce it, ship it across the seas and pay the tariff and still sell at or below the cost of production in this country with its high standard of living. That is especially true when the world supply and its disposal is being manipulated by a State-controlled monopoly over some 85 percent of the world's wool supply.

This is a temporary measure. The cost will not be much. It must be remembered that customs receipts on imported wools to this country in 1946 amounted to about $156,000,000 for the United States Treasury. Only a comparatively small portion of that amount will offset any losses to the government by supporting the domestic wool prices as provided in this bill. This bill will help to stabilize the market and add encouragement to the survival of the domestic wool industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. BARRETT].

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague from Montana [Mr. D'EWART] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. D'EWART. Mr. Chairman, I can do little more than reiterate what my colleagues have said concerning this important measure. The gravity of the situation so far as the sheepmen of the West are concerned cannot be exaggerated. The fate of the wool industry in Montana, one of our most important agricultural pursuits in my State, will be decided by our action on this bill.

The uncertain future of the wool industry is reflected in the gradual reduction of numbers of stock sheep in Montana. During the past 50 years the total annual income from wool grown in Montana has varied from $13,500,000 to $3,000,000, while our production of wool has varied from a high of 38,500,000 pounds to the present low of less than 20,000,000 pounds. Our numbers of stock sheep have declined in recent years from a high of 5,500,000 to the present all-time low of an estimated 2,000,000. The gradual liquidation of this highly important segment of our economic picture is very serious in a State where 50,000,000 acres, or 53 percent of the total land area, is classified as range land and is useful only for grazing.

Operating under a price ceiling established at the time of the Pearl Harbor attack, our wool growers have received no benefit from the wartime increases in prices which increased the incomes of all other farmers. Instead, they have been placed in grave jeopardy by a Government import program which flooded this country with wool from competitor nations.

I need not remind you that wool is an essential strategic material, and that without a healthy wool industry our Nation in the event of attack would be at the mercy of anyone who could cut our supply lines to a source of wool.

This measure is the minimum essential program to preserve an important industry. We have worked long and diligently to prepare it. It is of vital importance to the Nation as a whole that it be enacted into law without further delay.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, the sheep industry of this country is in a mighty bad way. Everyone knows that in order to conduct a business in a reasonably prosperous manner a minimum volume must be maintained. As has been pointed out in the debate this afternoon, the sheep population of this country has dropped more than 35 percent since 1942. Most of the wool growers of the country has reduced their herds to the point where they cannot operate on a profitable basis. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] makes the statement that if we pass any legislation that will protect the sheep industry that it will interfere with the negotiations which were started at Geneva a month ago Now, the plain implication of that statement is that Britain and its dominions have demanded reductions in the existing wool tariffs. We have already reduced our production of wool by one-third, and I am sure that it is as evident to you as it is to me that a reduction in the tariff can result only in a further liquidation of the sheep industry, and I think it is fair to state that we have now reached the point where another blow to that great industry would mean its complete liquidation.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARRETT. I yield.

Mr. RICH. We not only want to protect the sheep industry in this country, but we want to protect every industry and every job in this country. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER], who wanted to aid and assist Mr. Clayton, is trying to hand everything over to some foreign country.

Mr. BARRETT. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we should do whatever may be necessary to protect the interests of our own great country. After all, every nation is impelled to act in its own self-interest. The Army and Navy Munitions Board stated less than a month ago that wool is a strategic and critical material, necessary for the security of this country. How in the name of common sense are you going to protect the interests of this country unless you produce and have available a source of supply of that strategic material. You certainly will have no such supply available if you liquidate the sheep industry of the United States.

The day before yesterday I read an editorial to the effect that if the sheepmen of this country could not compete with the world price of wool, the best thing for this country to do was to get out of the sheep business. What is that going to do to the economy of the West? We have 800,000,000 acres in 11 Western States. The main crop from that great area is grass. We harvest that crop by running sheep and cattle on the range. If we go out of the sheep business there is no other way to utilize that grass. We already have 10,000,000 excess cattle. So if we destroy our sheep industry as some suggest about half of our range would be wasted.

There are 220 counties in the West that depend on livestock operations for the maintenance of their economy. Anything that impairs or interferes with the livestock industry will make it difficult if not impossible for those 220 counties in the 11 Western States to maintain themselves.

Now, how did we get into this difficulty? When war was declared the United States said, "We are liable to be cut off from our supply of wool from Australia." England said, "We do not know that we will be able to get our wool from Australia to London." So the United States embarked on a program of importing terrific quantities of wool into this country. They brought in, at one time, 300,000,000 pounds of wool.

They gave assurances to the wool growers that it would not be sold in competition with our domestic wool. Later on the wool was sold in this country. Then Great Britain brought in an additional 500,000,000 pounds of wool. In order to encourage the growers of this country to expand their production of wool notwithstanding these great imports of wool, the Commodity Credit Corporation instituted its purchase program. The wool growers of this country were assured by officials of the Government that the program would be continued for the duration of the war and for 2 years thereafter.

Some people have intimated that we propose to increase the price of wool. The fact of the matter is that no increase is provided in this bill for domestic wool. It merely continues the same program until December 31, 1948, that has been in existence since Pearl Harbor and at the same price.

At the present time the difference between the price of imported wool coming into this country and the support price of the Commodity Credit Corporation is 5 cents a clean pound. To make a suit of clothes takes about 3 or 4 pounds of clean wool. That means that if you raise the price of the imported wool to the domestic price, the wool necessary to make a suit of clothes would cost less than 20 cents more.

If it is important, as I think it is, that we maintain the sheep industry in this country, then it seems to me it would be sound for the Congress to give the President of the United States authority to bring the cost of foreign wool up to the price paid to the domestic producers.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that any country on earth would object if we took such action. The fact of the matter is that the Government has a stock pile of wool in this country amounting to 460,000,000 pounds. We are going to produce 300,000,000 pounds of wool this year and 300,000,000 pounds of wool next year, so that the total amount of wool on hand and to be produced will amount to about a billion pounds. It is just common sense for us to provide some method whereby that wool will be sold without loss to the Treasury and on such basis that the wool growers of this country can operate and continue in business. I know the gentleman from Massachusetts has many wool dealers in his district. The effect of his amendment is to increase the loss the wool growers are taking of 9½ cents on every pound of wool they produce to 14 cents a pound. If you want to destroy the sheep industry then support the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, day before yesterday I had an opportunity to confer with Mr. Clayton who had just recently returned from Geneva. During our conversation we discussed the effect of this pending legislation and at my request he has written me a letter which expresses his views concerning this very important bill now being considered.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the clerk may read this letter to the Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 22, 1947.

The Honorable HAROLD D. COOLEY,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. COOLEY: I take pleasure in this opportunity to answer your inquiry of May 19 concerning the views of the Department of State with respect to proposed wool legislation. I refer to S. 814, a bill to provide support for wool and for other purposes, as passed by the Senate and reported favorably with amendments by the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives.

The bill in the form in which it was reported was not under consideration by the Committee on Agriculture when representatives of the Department testified before that body. We have not had a formal opportunity to present our views on the legislation, as it has been reported.

S. 814, as reported with amendments, is intended to achieve three main objectives. First, it directs the Commodity Credit Corporation to support a price to wool producers at the 1946 level until December 31, 1948. This provision is consistent with the proposed long-run program for wool submitted by the President in his memorandum to Senator O'MAHONEY, March 11, 1946. The Department of State believes this section of the bill accomplishes the essentials of the Administration's plan which recognizes that wool should receive support comparable to that granted to other agricultural commodities.

Secondly, S. 814 authorizes the Commodity Credit Corporation to sell its stocks of wool without regard to restrictions imposed upon it by law. This is necessary because Commodity Credit Corporation must be able to sell wool at the market if it is to dispose of its stocks. This is also consistent with the President's program in the opinion of the Department of State.

Thirdly, an amendment to section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act has been added to provide for the imposition of fees on any imported article by the Secretary of Agriculture if he finds that imports of said article interfere materially with the wool-support program. The accompanying report shows that the purpose of the fee is to increase the price of imported wool to equal the support level for domestic wool. The Department of State advises against the adoption of this amendment. I understand from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that it is proposed to modify this import-fee amendment by directing the President, rather than the Secretary of Agriculture, to impose the fees after investigation by the Tariff Commission. This does not remove the fundamental objections to the provision.

If import fees, which are actually increases in the tariff, are levied, they would be harmful to the interests of the United States in the following ways:

First, the cost to the public in increased prices for woolen manufactures would far exceed the increased returns to the wool growers. The President's memorandum, previously referred to, pointed out that "it will be more desirable from a national point of view and more dependable for growers to have the Government absorb losses on sales of domestic wool rather than to raise additional trade barriers against imports." The cost of supporting returns to wool growers must be borne by the public of the United States regardless of the form that support takes. The tariff itself is a subsidy which is collected, like a sales tax, from consumers through raised prices and conveyed to producers by the same means. To talk about avoiding cost to the Treasury is to evade the issue, for the public, and not the Treasury, pays the bill.

A fee will raise the cost of the raw material. This in turn cumulatively increases the cost of doing business at every stage of the production process. Therefore, the final cost to the public as a consumer is far greater under the fee than it would be if raw material prices were not increased by fees and the public, as a taxpayer, paid the subsidy.

In the second place, new import fees on wool would injure the interests of the United States through their effect on our foreign relations. We all recognize the responsibility of this country for leadership, both political and economic, in the postwar world. The United States has taken the initiative in promoting the adoption of principles of economic conduct among nations which would require each country to consider the impact of the economic measures it undertakes on world economic progress. If the proposed amendment providing new import barriers is adopted, the moral leadership of the United States in world affairs will suffer a serious blow.

If at this time, when we are actually negotiating with other countries at Geneva for the lowering of the trade barriers, we raise new barriers as this bill proposes, we stand convicted of insincerity.

Wool is a critical item in our current negotiations for an International Trade Organization for the expansion of world trade and employment. Although wool raising accounts for less than one-half of 1 percent of our agricultural income, it is very important in world trade. It is the most important import into the United States from Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa. It is by far their most important source of the dollars they need so badly to buy our exports. If we impose new barriers to this trade we cannot expect them to cooperate wholeheartedly in creating the type of postwar world we want to have. Without such cooperation the other British commonwealth nations would have difficulty joining with us in a mutually advantageous program. Other nations would question the sincerity of our protestations that we do not intend to retreat to economic isolationism.

Let me summarize by saying the Department approves support to wool growers and authority for Commodity Credit Corporation to sell its wool below parity. The Department therefore hopes that the Congress will adopt the proposed bill as passed by the Senate without amendment.

Sincerely yours,

WILL CLAYTON.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, we have listened to the reading of the letter of the distinguished gentleman, Mr. Clayton. I do not know what position anyone else wants to take, but so far as I am concerned, he is just one more American, no more and no less. I have not heard of anyone electing him to ruin their business. Now, I do not care whether or not Clayton-Anderson Co. made $4,000,000 in 1945 or $8,000,000 in 1946, but I do know that my concept of representative government is that Mr. Clayton has no more right than any other individual to be sent to Geneva and to be giving away an item produced by hundreds of thousands of American people.

I do not know why we continue to appropriate money to control domestic monopolies and then send Mr. Clayton or anyone else to Geneva to connive with a foreign wool monopoly. Do you wish to vote to cooperate with a foreign monopoly? If you do vote against this bill you will be giving your approval to such a program in order to ruin thousands of wool growers in America. So much for that.

I want to say to you here today that this wool bill has reached the high point of high pressure. Never in the heyday of the CIO did they ever put on as good a propaganda campaign as have these woolen people during the last 3 or 4 weeks. To show you how far they have gone, I call your attention to a telegram. I did not think that a big manufacturer of an automobile had time to send telegrams to Members of Congress about a little thing like wool, but here is one from the vice president of the Ford Motor Co. over at Detroit. The following is the telegram:

DEARBORN, MICH., May 15, 1947.

Hon. REID F. MURRAY,
Washington, D. C.:

We are informed that Senate bill 814, including amendment 4, which would permit the Secretary of Agriculture to add 50 percent ad valorem tax to present duties on foreign wools is now before the Rules Committee of this House. This bill, if enacted, would result in a material increase in the cost of automobile upholstery. In view of the persistent requests for decreases in the prices of automobiles, in which Ford Motor Co. has assumed leadership, we strongly oppose passage of the proposed legislation and urge you to vote against it. The Herter bill would be more consistent with the normal functions of Commodity Credit Corporation and with the current demands for decreases in prices of manufactured products.

A. J. BROWNING,
Vice President, Ford Motor Co.

For what few years I have been a Member of this House so far I have not jumped through the hoop for the Ford Motor Co. or any other corporation in this country, and any time that I cannot vote and support measures for the interests of the general welfare of the people of this country I surely do not want to be a Member of this House. Pressure is getting farfetched when a big company sends out telegrams about 6 pounds of wool used in a $1,200 to $1,500 car.

I wired him back, as I should, and I asked him, in the following telegram:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 19, 1947.

Mr. A. J. BROWNING,
Vice President, Ford Motor Co.,
Dearborn, Mich.:

Retel regarding wool bill. Advise amount wool used on each car.

REID F. MURRAY,
Member of Congress.

I received the following letter:

FORD MOTOR CO.,

Hon. REID F. MURRAY,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MURRAY: In accordance with your recent wire, you will find below the amount of wool required per passenger car:

Sincerely yours,

A. J. BROWNING,
Vice President.

Well, lo and behold, what do you suppose the amount of wool is they use in making cars? It runs from 4 to 11 pounds per car, and I understand from other sources it averages six and a fraction pounds per car. I answered as follows:

MAY 22, 1947.

Mr. A. J. BROWNING,
Vice President, Ford Motor Co.,
Dearborn, Mich.

DEAR MR. BROWNING: Thank you for your letter of May 21 giving me the information as to the amount of wool required per passenger car. I was surprised to note the small amount of wool used in connection with the making of a car.

Possibly you are not familiar with the subsidy that is being paid for cotton that is being used in the manufacture of a car. The Agriculture Department here advises me that there is about 30 pounds of cotton used for a car and the subsidy is 4 cents per pound. This would make a total of $1.20 per car subsidy.

In regard to the wool bill, there is nothing that the proposed wool legislation would do to make wool any higher than it is at the present time as prices are to be continued at the 1946 prices.

I will not be able to support your position in regard to the wool bill. The labor that has gone into the producing of the wool has increased over one-third since the program was put into operation and it is difficult for me to see why labor that is going into producing wool should not have a forty to fifty cent hourly return at a time when the labor that goes into the car has a much more favorable consideration. There is most assuredly a comparable relationship for all labor.

Factory pay rolls and the gross national agricultural income go hand in hand and our national income is 3½ times the total of the factory pay rolls and the agricultural gross income. In other words, the national income is seven times more than the factory pay rolls or the national gross farm income. Since I believe that all labor should have comparable consideration, I would not care to be in the position of reducing the hourly income of one labor group when they are already receiving a comparably smaller labor income due to 1946 wool prices.

Sincerely yours,

REID F. MURRAY,
Member of Congress.

I do not want to raise the price of cars, because they are high enough now. They are evidently sending the largest number they can out of this country to prevent Americans from getting them. I should have forcibly called attention to the fact that section 32 funds are derived by taking 30 percent of the custom receipt. They have provided Mr. Ford with $1.20 subsidy in the form of the cotton battings that go into his car. So I thought possibly under the circumstances, as long as the public was subsidizing Mr. Ford $1.20 on the cotton for each car, he ought at least pay somewheres near that amount to the wool growers for the wool used in his cars. At the least the wool grower should have 40 to 50 cents per hour for his labor. I hope that Mr. Ford sees it that way.

I hope the next time he comes to Washington he gives a banquet for the boys and girls of America, the 4–H boys, that he has this thing in mind, because there is nothing that the farm people need as much as they do a little money on the barrelhead for their work. They do not need all this blah-blah-blah stuff. You give them 40 to 50 cents an hour for producing the wool, and I am sure the wool producers of this country will be in a position to attend to their children.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wonder if the gentleman has any information on the current situation wherein automobile dealers are advertising that they will pay from $100 to $1,000 premium on new 1947 cars so that those cars can be shipped out of the United States and sold to foreign purchasers, to whom we furnish dollar credits through these grants, gifts, and loans, thereby using another tool to deprive the good people of this country of the opportunity to buy 1947 automobiles.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I will answer my colleague by saying that I do know about this situation but am willing to accept his opinion as correct. I am interested in seeing that the wool grower at least gets 40 to 50 cents an hour for producing wool, and any time that the Ford Motor Co. cannot do that they had better put sawdust in their seats.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman wants him to get that 42 to 44 cents an hour so he can buy an American-made automobile?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Yes; the gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. At the same time we should be concerned about how we are going to supply the dollars to other people to take that car away from him at a large premium before he gets a chance.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I will say to the gentleman that so far as I am concerned I have been rather careful in that regard.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. GRANGER. Going back to Mr. Clayton's letter again, I think there is a very interesting paragraph here, next to the last paragraph, where he says:

> Wool is an agricultural item in our current negotiations for international trade organization for the expansion of world trade and employment—

What does that mean?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I presume he means that wool is one of the principal items on the Geneva agenda.

Mr. GRANGER. Then he goes on to say:

> Although wool raising makes up less than one-half of 1 percent of our agricultural economy, it is very important in world trade—

Which means to me that Mr. Clayton has been over at Geneva negotiating to reduce the tariff on wool, and because it is just a little item he is going to negotiate it out of existence. That is what that paragraph means.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I think the gentleman is right. I think he is amply justified in his conclusion.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word to my good friend, the distinguished minority leader. I have been here for nearly 9 years with him, and I certainly have a high regard for him. It will not be very many days before the President is going to ask for further controls over exports. There is much pressure being brought right now to get rid of all export controls. Many people wish to discontinue export controls. Personally, after analyzing it, I have committed myself. Surely, I think certain of these controls should be extended. The reason is that if we do not do it, then this money that our colleague, the gentleman from Michigan, tells us about which is scattered all over the world and which they may or may not intend to pay back, will be used to purchase American food products without regard to the consumers of America. They may pay $4 to $5 a bushel for wheat, and the people of the United States will be allowed to starve to death. I say to the minority leader that I hope any time I vote to give the President power to control exports out of this country I am consistent when I am willing to give the President the power under this bill to have him control the imports into this country. If that is an unfair position, I will yield to anyone to correct me.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I would like to go back to the proposition you mentioned a while ago regarding the cost of producing wool. Let me read about six lines from the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the Department of Agriculture report which shows "that the index number of prices, interest and taxes paid by farmers as a group increased from 136 as of September 1941 to 207 on September 1946, an increase of 45 percent. The index number of farm wages for the same period rose from 165 to 389, or an increase of 136 percent. For example, in 1940 the average monthly wage for sheepherders was approximately $60 per month and board. In 1946 the average monthly sheepherder wage was $160, or more than twice as much as in 1940."

Then they expect us to take away this protection on the price of wool to the farmer and let them go absolutely to the very bottom of the pit so far as the price of wool is concerned.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. The wool people are not asking anything unfair when they ask for 41 cents plus per pound for wool. The lambs were subsidized during the war. The whole animal should have been classed as a Steagall commodity in the beginning. Wool is entitled to the same protection that is afforded any other Steagall commodity.

I do hope that this bill passes. The American farmer will then have assurance the Eightieth Congress is going to fulfill the commitments made under the support program. To do less would be unfortunate.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I have some misgivings as to whether the membership regards the vote on this bill as important as it may prove to be. In my judgment, the vote on this bill will, in large measure, determine the future farm program of this Nation. I think there are some fundamental questions involved and I think now, as well as any other time, we might as well face them and decide them.

If the farmers of this country must depend upon a program carrying support prices and which, at the same time, permits the import, practically without limit, of competitive agricultural commodities, then the farmers, as well as you, have sense enough to know that such a program would not continue over 12 or 24 months. The Treasury of the United States, strong as it is, is not able to support prices of agricultural commodities at one figure, and certainly it should not be at less than 90 percent of parity, and then permit the producers in foreign countries to send their commodities to this country without limit. You know as well as I know that the Congress of the United States will not, from year to year, appropriate two, three, four, five, or perhaps six billion dollars to make up the loss. I repeat that what you do today on this question, of whether or not you shall support wool at parity and then order the Commodity Credit Corporation to sell not only the 500,000,000 pounds of surplus it now has, but in addition to sell probably 700,000,000 pounds more which it will acquire from the 1947 and 1948 clip, is a fundamental question which you must decide. You are ordering them to support it at one level and then ordering the Commodity Credit Corporation to sell it at a much lower level. I say to those of you who have expressed approval of the Senate bill, that is exactly what the Senate bill does, and nothing more. It orders an agency of your Government, the Commodity Credit Corporation, to continue to support wool at the parity price—which is no more than a fair price—and, in the same breath, orders that agency to dump about 500,000,000 pounds it now has on hand and such other million pounds as it may acquire at the world price.

Now, let us look at this bill a minute. It does three things. First, in very simple language and in very few words, it says the Commodity Credit Corporation shall continue to support American wool at the same price it was supported during the war.

May I say here: You will have extreme difficulty in the Department of Agriculture in trying to find out exactly what that support is. First, they attempt to give you the cleaned support price. Then when they try to reduce it to the grease price they tell you simply that it is the same as the OPA ceiling, basis Boston. On the 15th day of April this year the parity price of wool was 42.1, and the support price was 42.1 or 2 or 3. So I think, to make this easy, because the difference is insignificant, we can say that the parity price of wool is 42 cents and the support price proposed in this bill is 42 cents. I think that makes it much easier in your thinking. The distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER] gives 42.3 cents, and that is about as good a guess, I think, as he could get out of the Department—as the support price up to April 15. So the bill would continue to support wool at parity, and for that principle I am in most enthusiastic support. Those who believe in the parity principle know that it is no more than a fair price to the producer, and that the producer should realize parity.

Secondly, in about two lines the bill orders the Commodity Credit Corporation to sell the wool that it now has and may hereafter acquire at the competitive price. I think I should read those words that all of you may have them clearly in your mind:

> The Commodity Credit Corporation may, until December 31, 1948, dispose of wool owned by it without regard to any restrictions imposed upon it by law.

The Commodity Credit Corporation, therefore, is just as free as any person could be as to the price and how it shall handle the disposition or the dumping of this approximately 500,000,000 pounds it now has on hand and all wool it may hereafter acquire.

Thirdly, the Senate bill as originally reported out carried section 4 which gave the Secretary of Agriculture the right, when the conditions described arose, to order the imposition of an import fee on wool not in excess of 50 percent ad valorem, and also ordered the imposition of a floor tax comparable with the import fee, the idea being to prevent the American importers who may have millions of pounds of wool in their warehouses from making a quick windfall profit. So a comparable tax was to be levied on floor stocks. But it developed that there were many concerns in this country who had contracts out for 3, 6, 9, and possibly 12 months on goods to be manufactured out of wool, and they were bound by contract on the basis of the present price of wool. They took the position that if we imposed this floor tax on them it would mean absolute bankruptcy. The chairman of the committee and other members saw the merit in this contention, and the result is that the committee reconsidered section 4 and now by amendment seeks to treat wool just the same as we have treated all the other basic commodities, and many other commodities produced in this country; that is, to give the President of the United States when he sees fit—and I repeat those words—when he sees fit, authority to call upon the Tariff Commission to make an investigation and find out whether or not the importations of wool are so great as to interfere with programs maintained in this country; and then when the Tariff Commission has made its report the President may issue a proclamation imposing an import fee on wool if he is satisfied with the report of the Commission. And listen to these words in section 22 on this question of import fees, and I read subsection (d):

> Any decision of the President of the United States as to the facts under this section shall be final.

It lies entirely within the discretion of the President of the United States to act in the first instance and to review the report of the Tariff Commission.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I thought that was stricken out by the Rules Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I was reading from the original bill. Let me check with the gentleman from Kansas to be sure.

Mr. HOPE. I may say that the provisions to which reference is made are contained in a later subsection of section 22. It is not necessarily included in this amendment.

Mr. PACE. But it is still the law?

Mr. HOPE. It is still the law.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In the event section 32 funds are not continued, as has been reported as the action taken by the Subcommittee on Agricultural Appropriations of the Appropriations Committee and are not available as heretofore, I will ask the gentleman whether wool under the terms of this bill, if passed by the House, has any status preferred over and above cotton, say?

Mr. PACE. It will not.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the passage of this bill guarantee the fixing of the fee where a quota is now provided by other law, with respect to cotton or other agricultural commodities?

Mr. PACE. It will not affect the right under the present law of import fees on cotton.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In other words, cotton, for instance, will still have the right to an import quota even though the section 32 funds are not made available? If this bill passes cotton is in the same category as wool?

Mr. PACE. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Under the terms of this bill?

Mr. PACE. In exactly the same fix except cotton will be in a better position because the amendment prohibits the right to put quotas on wool, which is now authorized for cotton.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It is not necessary to insert the words "or other support program" as now carried on under the Agricultural Adjustment Act?

Mr. PACE. It would not.

Mr. Chairman, so far as I know, there is not a sheep living in the Third Congressional District of Georgia. I have utterly no concern directly in the personal welfare of any constituent who is a producer of wool. But there is one thing of which I am deeply convinced and that is, I do not feel I have any right to ask the Congress to do any more for the cotton producer, for the tobacco producer, for the peanut producer, for the producers of those other commodities which are peculiar to my section, than the wool producers have to ask the Congress to do for the producers of wool and the other commodities of the great West. In my opinion, agriculture in this Nation can survive only if there is no selfishness among the different commodity producers. The principles of this bill are right. I am not going to vote to put the producers of my State under quotas and other control unless there is some reasonable limitation of control placed upon the producers in foreign lands. You cannot pay three, four and five dollars a day for cotton-picking and compete with cotton produced in other countries at 30 and 40 cents a day. I know you bring to me—I hear it all around—the great benefits of international trade, but I bring to you the answer that the greatest market in the world today is the American farmer. If you give to the American farmer a fair price for his crops he can consume for many years all the products of American industry.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I want to be sure I understand the gentleman. Did the gentleman mean to say he would vote to repeal the triple-A program which provides for a bonus on cotton in his State, without limiting the production of cotton?

Mr. PACE. Under this very section 22 they stopped cotton imports from coming into this country. You can import only 90,000 bales into this country, and the reason you cannot bring in more is section 22, and we are now trying to bring wool under this section.

I repeat that I am not going to vote to put the farmers of my State under controls and open the ports of this Nation for unlimited imports of competitive commodities. Does the gentleman intend to do that? No. I can answer for him.

You may agree here today to support commodities, like the Senate did, at one price and then dump them at another price. I do not know what the price would be if you dumped this 500,000,000 pounds on the market. But, if you vote here today to do that I make you this prediction: You might as well send word to the farmers of this Nation to get ready for 1949, because unless we are able to continue the support program, unless we are able to give the farmers who produce the food and fiber to feed and clothe the people of this Nation protection, and who I think are entitled to that same degree of security and protection as the people who eat that food, unless you can give them that assurance, then in my judgment you will have a condition in 1940 or 1950 exactly comparable with that which you had in 1920, and you might as well get ready for it.

I give this bill and I give the amendment to be offered by the distinguished chairman of my committee my most cordial and enthusiastic support. Section 22—get it straight—was written into the law on the recommendation of the late President Roosevelt; it was contained in the Triple-A Act of 1933. When the Supreme Court in 1936 declared a part of that act unconstitutional, this Congress expressly reenacted section 22. It was again repeated by special enactment in the Marketing Agreements Act. So on three separate and distinct occasions, a Democratic Congress of the United States has said that when we have an agricultural program in this country, when we attempt to protect the producers, and this flood of foreign agricultural commodities comes in here that would destroy those programs, the President of the United States in his discretion, upon the recommendation of the Tariff Commission, may, through the imposition of import fees or through the imposition of quotas, stop this inflow of foreign commodities and give the protection to which they are entitled to those, may I say again, who produce the food and fiber for the rest of the millions of this Nation to eat and be clothed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has again expired.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, in legal jurisprudence there is a plea known as "confession and avoidance." I am sure that it is an appropriate plea for me to enter at this time.

Frankly, I must confess that I did not appreciate fully the importance of the subject with which my committee was dealing when the committee had under consideration the very controversial matter which is now before the House. Maybe I was somewhat "wool gathering." I frankly confess that I know very little about the problems of wool producers, and since my knowledge of the subject was very limited, I was rather inclined to follow my good friends, WALTER GRANGER and BILL HILL, and others on the committee in whom I have always had great confidence. Very little importance seemed to be attached to the measure when its provisions were discussed in the committee, so I went along with the committee in reporting the bill. We amended the Senate bill, and when it was finally reported by the committee I learned for the first time that it was of tremendous importance. I doubt very much if other members of the committee fully realized the far-reaching implications of the measure. While I have no right to speak for other Members, I frankly confess that I did not understand or appreciate the great and devastating effect which the measure might have upon our foreign economic policy and upon the rebuilding of world trade.

After the bill had been reported, and while it was pending before the Rules Committee, I made inquiries and the information I obtained led me to conclude that the bill was in many respects objectionable. A few days ago our committee was called together in executive session to consider a new proposal. The new proposal was submitted by the distinguished chairman of our committee, and, frankly, it appeared to be much better than the bill which the committee had reported. In the first bill reported we gave broad powers to the Secretary of Agriculture, a Cabinet officer. In the amendment which was adopted a few days ago by the committee, we gave these same great powers to the President, to be used by him upon information or findings of the Tariff Commission. No hearings were held by the committee on the new proposal and everyone seemed to approve the same. Much to my surprise, I was later informed that the new proposal was not drafted by a nonpartisan subcommittee of the House Committee on Agriculture, nor was it drafted by any subcommittee of the House Committee on Agriculture, appointed by the chairman of the committee. We Democrats might as well face the truth. Actually the truth has appeared in public print. This proposed substitute or amendment was actually written by a subcommittee of the steering committee of the Republican Party. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK], the majority leader, appointed that subcommittee, and no Democrats served on it. That in itself does not make the bill objectionable, but, certainly, it does not make it more acceptable.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. Of course.

Mr. HOPE. The gentleman was present at a meeting of the Committee on Agriculture last Saturday, was he not, when that committee unanimously recommended the amendment which will be offered tomorrow?

Mr. COOLEY. I made that confession at the beginning of my remarks.

Mr. HOPE. The amendment was submitted and the committee unanimously agreed to it.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman is entirely correct, but I doubt very much that any member of the committee appreciated fully the importance of what we were doing. Not even when the matter was being considered in executive session the second time.

Here, gentlemen, we are dealing with a matter of international importance, of world-wide importance, without even a printed page of hearings before us. The hearings before the House committee have never been transcribed and made available to Members of Congress.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. At the meeting last Saturday was the gentleman aware of the fact that a subcommittee of the steering committee of the Republican Party had drafted this bill?

Mr. COOLEY. I certainly was not. I was actually under the impression that it had been worked out by members of both parties on our committee and had been agreed to. I assumed, since the bill was presented by my distinguished and beloved chairman, that it had received the careful thought and consideration of both Democrats and Republicans on the committee.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JENNINGS. It would seem, then, from the facts that have just been developed, that if this subcommittee of the steering committee of the Republican Party drafted this amendment it put the gentleman's feet upon the rock, and put a new garment upon him and a new song in his mouth.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman thought last Saturday that a good job was done, whoever wrote the amendment, did he not?

Mr. COOLEY. I probably did last Saturday, but certainly not now. I am not changing my views merely because of the discovery of the true author of the bill. I have confessed frankly that I did not fully understand the important effects of the measure at the time it was reported by the committee. It was not until I had a conference with Secretary Clayton day before yesterday that I understood fully the great importance of the matter now before us. Certainly, Secretary Clayton should have been accorded an opportunity to appear before the committee. In fact he should have been invited to appear and present his views fully, but the fact is that he returned from Geneva, where he was attending the International Trade Organization sessions because of the fact that he had been greatly embarrassed by the action taken by our committee, and certainly he should have been given an opportunity to appear before the committee and to enlighten the members of the committee with regard to the full force and effect which the activities of the committee might have upon international trade and commerce.

I was amazed to find that our Under Secretary of State had been so greatly embarrassed at the important conference at Geneva. I have never seen in all of my experience a statesman who appeared to be more greatly embarrassed than was Secretary Clayton. After my talk with him I could understand fully his situation. While he was sitting at Geneva, talking about reciprocal trade treaties and the urgent necessity for reviving world commerce; while he was advocating a policy of reciprocal action, looking to the elimination of trade barriers and to a free flow of world commerce, over the ticker came a message to him and to his colleagues to the effect that a great committee of the Congress had reported a bill, the effect of which would be to lift new and even higher trade barriers. The representatives of other nations gathered at the conference received the distracting news that a committee of Congress was providing the President with a sword with which he could carve to pieces everything which might be accomplished at Geneva. This bill is incompatible with our policy of reciprocal trade agreements, and, certainly, Mr. Clayton was embarrassed by the news that it had been reported. Certainly, there was nothing for him to do except to come back home.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. GRANGER. It is just a little bit embarrassing to all of us if the Republican steering committee wrote this amendment because they did exactly what the Secretary of Agriculture had advised the Committee on Agriculture to do—that is, that we should enact section 22.

Mr. COOLEY. You mean to put wool under section 22?

Mr. GRANGER. That is right.

Mr. COOLEY. I am not aware that the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Anderson, made such a recommendation. I do know, however, that neither Under Secretary Clayton nor Secretary Marshall were consulted about this very important international matter, and I am likewise quite certain that neither of them approve this measure.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to my good friend from Oklahoma, late a member of the great Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. RIZLEY. The statement made by the gentleman amazes and astounds me. I served for 5 years with the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina, and I know that there is not a man on the Committee of Agriculture who knows more of the implications of all legislation that comes from that committee. That my friend should stand in the well of the House and say that he was in the committee last Saturday and considered this amendment when it was brought before the committee by the chairman and that he approved of it then, and to hear him say here today that because he later learned that somebody in the Republican Party had something to do with the drafting of the amendment, and that that makes it bad, is something that surprises me and is something that I cannot understand.

Mr. COOLEY. I did not say that I changed my views because of my discovery of the author of the bill, but I changed my views because of my very interesting talk with the Under Secretary of State, Mr. Clayton.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. HILL. The question in my mind is this. I appreciate your ability and your ideas on agriculture, being the ranking member of our committee, or at least one of the ranking members, but the only change that has been made in this bill since the beginning was to take out section 4 and put in these few words in section 22. Do you favor such legislation as section 22 for cotton? As the gentleman from Georgia so well stated, are you in favor of that type of legislation for cotton? Answer yes or no.

Mr. COOLEY. I certainly am; yes. Definitely yes; for cotton and every other surplus commodity for which we have an adjustment program. If you will read the language of section 22 as it was originally written you will see in clear, unambiguous English that it deals only with commodities on which there is an adjustment program in operation.

Mr. HILL. But the question arises immediately: What do you mean by surplus? Wool could be a surplus commodity or wheat could be a surplus commodity, and next year it would not be surplus at all. Do you mean to tell me that section 22 makes any distinction in that regard? It does not, so your argument falls absolutely flat and is ridiculous on the face of it because any crop can be surplus at any time of the year and not be surplus at any other time.

Mr. COOLEY. Section 22 deals with commodities on which there is an adjustment program in operation, and there is not such a program on wool.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. BARRETT. Is it not true that there has been a support program on wool for the past 4 years?

Mr. COOLEY. You are correct, but there is no adjustment program on it.

Mr. BARRETT. Is it not true also that for the 3 years preceding the war we imported more wheat into this country than we exported? Wheat is one of those commodities that is supported.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY] has expired.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, we know that wool is normally a short crop in this country. We import most of our wool. We do not import most of our wheat, cotton, or tobacco and other crops.

Mr. BARRETT. Now, that is not true. We do not normally import most of our wool. We produce normally better than two-thirds of our wool.

Mr. COOLEY. My information is to the contrary.

Mr. BARRETT. Well, I have the facts and figures and they show that normally we consume about 650,000,000 pounds of wool and that normally we produce 450,000,000 pounds of wool, which is consumed in this country.

Mr. COOLEY. But certainly we are not self-sufficient in wool.

Mr. BARRETT. No. I did not say that.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman said he was inclined to reverse his position because he had talked with Mr. Clayton. I was wondering whether Mr. Clayton told the gentleman whether he was embarrassed by the use of section 22 with respect to cotton and tobacco.

Mr. COOLEY. No; because they are in a different category altogether.

Now, coming back to the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE], his slogan through the years has always been—and it is a high-sounding sort of thing—"The American market for the American farmer." Well, I do not agree with that. I do not want my farmers restricted to the American market. If I were going to adopt a slogan, I would say, "World markets for American farmers." Now, if that is not our program, if we are going to follow the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] and his philosophy, then we might as well go ahead and lift all trade barriers to the sky and protect all of agriculture from the vicious world about us, which is the greatest potential market we have ever had. If we are going to have that sort of program, we need to reflect for a moment and know what happened after World War I. We did exactly that. We restricted our comerce. We sent our merchant fleet to the bottom of the sea. We abandoned the commerce of the world. We were going to live in great peace and prosperity by ourselves, a rich and powerful nation. We all know the tragic story of bankruptcy which followed. Now we are faced with this proposition: Are we going to accept the challenge which comes to us from all over the universe, a challenge for America to lead a distracted and destroyed world, or are we going back to isolation, economic isolation, and try to live among ourselves and with ourselves, secluded from all the rest of the starving and distressed people of the world?

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. MORRIS. I do not ask this question to be critical at all. I am trying to learn about this. Does this bill do anything at all—anything—for wool that is not done for cotton, wheat, and other staple products?

Mr. COOLEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. MORRIS. What is it?

Mr. COOLEY. It puts it in a category where it has no business being. In the first place, if you will read the letter that Mr. Clayton sent up here, wool is one of the most important factors that he has to deal with in international trade. He says that in the letter. Now, if we are going to pass a law that embarrasses our diplomat as he goes away from here in an effort to revive world trade, and if we are going to attempt to embarrass our President, then we can do it in no more definite way than to pass this bill. We know as we read Mr. Clayton's letter that it will meet with disfavor at the White House. Now, why is it important? I do not know all of the ramifications of international trade and reciprocal-trade treaties, and I am not an expert, but I do know this, that we must trade with the world, and that international trade is a two-way highway. If we are going to support out of the Treasury any producers of agriculture, we certainly can well afford to subsidize, if necessary, the producers of wool, because, after all, it is a very small matter in dollars and cents, comparatively speaking.

Mr. MORRIS. I get the gentleman's point.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has again expired.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

Mr. MORRIS. At least I did not mean to ask that question; the question was outside of that particular point which the gentleman makes and I am not saying whether I agree with him or not. I am trying to learn at this time outside of that whether it does anything in the way of giving wool any more support in dollars and cents, let us say, than it does for cotton or wheat.

Mr. COOLEY. No; and it does not give it any more support than it is given in the Senate bill.

Mr. MORRIS. That is the question.

Mr. COOLEY. Here is my position on it: I want to protect the wool growers; I am just as anxious to do it as my friend GRANGER, my friend HILL, or anyone else. I agree with them that the wool growers of the country were a war casualty. If so we ought to stand up to the rack and pay off. That is what Secretary Clayton says do, that is what Mr. Truman says do; but you Republicans are so economy-minded that you are not willing to pay off because the more you pay off the less you can keep your promises of economy.

I will vote for the Senate bill. I am anxious to protect the gentleman's producers just as much as the gentleman is.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. COOLEY. I shall be delighted to if I can.

Mr. HILL. In all sincerity, let us leave wool out of the subject for a moment and pull no wool over anyone's eyes. How can you work out a program to protect American producers of farm products in any form whatsoever by way of subsidy or in any other way—there may be some others—and at the same time permit the markets in America to be flooded by any type or any kind of foreign agricultural products?

Mr. COOLEY. I will answer that——

Mr. HILL. Leave wool out, leave the wool market out.

Mr. COOLEY. We cannot leave wool out because the terms of the Senate bill protect wool producers regardless of what happens in world trading in wool; the gentleman's producers are protected by a support price.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Does the gentleman know of any other basic commodity covered by section 22 against which a limitation of imports cannot be applied?

Mr. COOLEY. I am not sure that I understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. McCORMACK. In this particular proposed amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] we find this proviso:

Provided, That no limitation shall be imposed on the total quantity of any article which may be imported from any country which reduces such permissible total quantity to less than 50 percent of the average annual quantity of such article which was imported from such country during the period from January 1, 1929, to December 31, 1933, both dates inclusive.

Mr. COOLEY. Under section 22 you could impose quotas or fees.

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. COOLEY. They are asking for the privilege of imposing only fees not to exceed 50 percent.

Mr. McCORMACK. And this applies only to wool.

Mr. COOLEY. That is right.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. GRANGER. I can say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the limitation on quotas was put in there specifically by the gentlemen from Boston, Mass., Mr. HERTER and Mr. McCORMACK.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. My friend is mistaken. I have no knowledge about this.

Mr. GRANGER. But the people the gentleman represents have knowledge about it.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am not representing people, I am trying to represent all the people. I will oppose this bill with section 4 in there, I am opposing it with section 22 in there. I say it is a discrimination and an inequity. Either you are going to pay a subsidy out of the Treasury or you are going to use this import fee to make the public pay a subsidy which in that case will be many times the former.

Mr. GRANGER. That provision was put in there to satisfy the firms the gentleman represents and who are opposed to the fees.

Mr. McCORMACK. But I had nothing to do with drafting it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I was very much impressed by the gentleman's statement that he wanted the world market; but that apparently applies to cotton.

Mr. COOLEY. Oh, no; cotton and tobacco and other surplus crops.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. He wants the world market to apply to American-grown wool. I ask the gentleman if he wants to extend that to tobacco? Will he agree to reduce the tariff on tobacco so that the world market, including the United States, will be open to foreign tobacco growers?

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman is just stating a hypothetical case that could not actually happen. Every time anybody wants to back me into a corner they say something about tobacco.

Mr. Chairman, I yield myself three additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the House on the way it has received tobacco legislation and the way it has approved the tobacco program. I want to emphasize one thought, however, and that is not a single one of our programs has ever cost the American taxpayers a single dollar.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is exactly what we want to do with the wool program.

Mr. COOLEY. In tobacco we produce a surplus. We are now operating under strict quotas. We would even reduce our crop 10 percent, 15 percent, or 20 percent, if necessary, to protect ourselves. At the same time it is not costing the taxpayers or the consumers any money at all.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. It is not?

Mr. COOLEY. No.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Why not abolish the tariff?

Mr. COOLEY. What does the gentleman mean?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Then why not abolish the tariff on tobacco?

Mr. COOLEY. You were paying 15 cents for Chesterfield cigarettes when we were getting 6 and 7 cents per pound for tobacco, and you are paying the same price when we are getting 48 or 50 cents a pound for tobacco. Your consumer does not contribute anything to the tobacco farmers, neither does the taxpayer. It comes about because of the machinery which the Congress provided that enabled us to protect ourselves by these quotas which we now have in operation.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The only thing I understand about it then is that what is right for tobacco is not right for wool?

Mr. COOLEY. Oh, no. If you have a surplus of wool, if you want to control the production of wool, I would vote for that. We have the same thing for peanuts, cotton, and wheat. We once had it for potatoes and we found out it was a hot potato and we replaced it right quick.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Along the same lines, if you have a surplus of shoes and leather, is the gentleman in favor of the same principle?

Mr. COOLEY. When you have a surplus of shoes all the manufacturer has to do is to pull a little switch and slow down production. In that way they protect themselves. But those who toil out in the broiling sun cannot cut off the sunlight and cannot retard the processes of nature and control production so easily.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I am interested in the gentleman's remarks about the importance of a quota to the tobacco industry. Is the gentleman familiar with Mr. Clayton's views on the matter of quotas?

Mr. COOLEY. Import quotas?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Yes; all quotas in the import field.

Mr. COOLEY. I cannot say that I am generally familiar with them.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I suggest that the gentleman read the proceedings before the Ways and Means Committee wherein Mr. Clayton expressed himself as very definitely opposed to quotas and dedicating himself to an effort toward eliminating all quotas.

Mr. COOLEY. I can see his viewpoint and I think I would be inclined to agree with him.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Would you agree we should eliminate all quotas on tobacco?

Mr. COOLEY. I do not know that we have any quotas on tobacco. The quotas I am talking about are the quotas we put on the farmers back home, not on the importer or exporter.

Mr. Chairman, I do not see how our economy can function if we are going to close the channels of commerce and trade throughout the world. If we are actuated by motives of selfishness in trying to establish our foreign economic policy, we know it will definitely bring us to grief. How can we support the national debt hanging over this Nation unless we maintain an income comparable to the national income we have today? How can we maintain a national income comparable with that of today unless we trade with the world? How can we trade with the world if we are going to be selfish with every proposition that comes up and say we are going to lift our tariffs here and yonder and everywhere? The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] is exactly right. This is a starting point. We are going to be isolationists; we are going in for high tariffs and trade barriers, or we are going into a liberalized foreign trade and unless we can trade with the world Mr. PACE's farmers will come to grief along with my farmers in North Carolina, because we had that experience before, and we know exactly what will happen. We have the greatest opportunity now that America has ever had in all history to become the leader of the world. We will pass up that opportunity if we become selfish, if we become greedy. Only by going into world commerce with an anxious desire to be liberal and fair and to stimulate world trade will we ever be able to support our own economy here at home.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BREHM. The gentleman would not say that we have been greedy and selfish with the amount of money we have been giving and lending to foreign nations, would he?

Mr. COOLEY. No; I do not say we have been, but I say we should not become greedy and selfish. We are living in a world that has been destroyed, and we helped in the destruction, not because we wanted to, but because of the necessities of the situation. Now, are we going to abandon the program that the brave men and women of America fought for? They fought to liberate these people in the distressed areas of the world; in the devastated and war-torn areas of the world.

Mr. BREHM. But not at the expense of enslaving our own people or a segment of our own people.

Mr. COOLEY. We are not in danger of being enslaved by anybody. We are endeavoring to give people the freedom that we possess and fought for.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. The gentleman, apparently, addressed some of his remarks to me. Does the gentleman really feel, as representing a great segment of the tobacco producers of this country, and being familiar with the legislation that has been enacted in their behalf and for their protection, that he is free to give us this exposé on free world trade?

Mr. COOLEY. Certainly. I have never been any greater advocate of self-control than the gentleman from Georgia. I never will forget how the gentleman from Georgia came before our committee when we were talking about making peanuts a basic commodity and permitting the peanut growers to control acreage and production, and he came in and objected. Oh, he was very strong in opposing it. He went back to Georgia, and he got all the peanut growers together and he said, "Boys, go out and plant the world in peanuts." And they planted all of Georgia in peanuts and built up a big acreage in the next 2 years, and then he came back and said, "Now, we are ready for the quotas." He has been an aggressive advocate of quotas ever since. If cotton wants to control itself, all right. I am willing for the cotton farmer to have quotas. I think my distinguished friend held extensive hearings through the cotton belt in an effort to determine whether the cotton producers wanted quotas for 1948; is that true? Did not the gentleman attempt to ascertain from the cotton producers whether they wanted quotas in 1948?

Mr. PACE. We were directed to ascertain the views of the producers regarding a modification of the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman remembers referring to the quota section.

Mr. PACE. It involved the question of quotas, so far as I recall.

Mr. COOLEY. If the cotton farmers in America want quotas, I am sure the gentleman would favor it.

Mr. PACE. Quite so, but I again repeat I would not encourage them to have quotas if unlimited imports could come into this country where the producers in those foreign lands were not under quota limitations themselves.

Mr. COOLEY. Do we not have quotas on cotton now?

Mr. PACE. Yes.

Mr. COOLEY. And we are shutting out Egyptian long staple cotton now, and there is a shortage in this country.

Mr. PACE. Cotton is highly benefited by legislation, and that is the reason I think wool should have equal benefits.

Mr. COOLEY. I hope that the wool growers of the cotton district of Georgia will be protected in some way by the House. I did not know that the gentleman had so many wool growers down there. I know I do not have a great many in my district, but I am just as intensely interested as I believe it is possible for me to be in trying to protect the wool farmer, and I believe the Senate bill does it.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. GRANGER. Tobacco farmers are protected by quotas on tobacco. In addition, they are protected by a prohibition on sending tobacco seed out to all the world.

Mr. COOLEY. That is an entirely different thing. That is the thing the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY] harps on all the time. Judge KERR and the rest of us interested in stopping the exportation of American tobacco seed to foreign countries, where they might go in competition with us did advocate the passage of the bill the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. PACE. The gentleman tells us that he secured the enactment of a law——

Mr. COOLEY. No; the gentleman did not say he secured the enactment of a law.

Mr. PACE. He favored it—that would prohibit the exportation of any American tobacco seed, to keep anybody in any other country from producing the commodity in competition with your tobacco.

Mr. COOLEY. That is right. I would vote for it again today, and the gentleman would, too.

Mr. PACE. Yet the gentleman says that is not in violation of any good will or international relations throughout the world?

Mr. COOLEY. No. The world has accepted it. The fact of the business is that many nations of the world have a prohibition against growing tobacco. They are willing for us to grow tobacco over here.

Mr. KERSTEN of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KERSTEN of Wisconsin. Apart from the broad implications of international trade, and so forth, what effect does this have on the price of a suit?

Mr. COOLEY. I do not know, but I assume if you put the price of wool up it will be reflected in the manufactured garment. I believe the best way for us to take care of the situation is just as President Truman suggested, that is, by paying the loss, absorbing the loss, and thereby holding down the cost of manufactured articles.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. BARRETT. To make an ordinary suit of clothes it takes about 4 pounds——

Mr. COOLEY. I thought the gentleman said 4½.

Mr. BARRETT. Four pounds of clean wool for the best suit of clothes that can be made. It takes about 10 pounds of grease wool for a suit of clothes. The difference between the foreign wool and the domestic price at the present time is about 2 cents in the grease, so it would take about 20 cents more if you brought the price of the foreign wool up to the price of the domestic wool.

Mr. COOLEY. That I assume has answered the gentleman's question.

Mr. BARRETT. It is 5 cents a pound in the clean, so you can figure that way. The gentleman is in favor of protecting cotton, or protecting tobacco, or protecting every product that is raised out in his district and in the South. During the past 5 years they have imported a billion pounds of wool into this country and taken the market away from us. Our only sale for domestic wool was to the Army and the Navy. The duty paid on foreign wool averaged $119,000,000 each year. Thirty percent of that money was used to support these commodities the gentleman speaks of, particularly cotton. The gentleman thinks that is right, but he is not in favor of some legitimate program that will protect the wool grower of this country.

Mr. COOLEY. Did the gentleman object to the building up of the stock pile of wool?

Mr. BARRETT. I certainly do.

Mr. COOLEY. I said, Did he while it was being done?

Mr. BARRETT. I want it without any loss to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. COOLEY. Did the gentleman object to it while it was being done, building up a stock pile to protect the American Army if it had gone to Alaska and the cold sections of the North to fight? The gentleman certainly would not object to the country's having an adequate stock pile of wool.

Mr. BARRETT. I did not object to it at that time, but I do object to having a stock pile of 460,000,000 pounds at the present time, when we are consuming in this country nearly a billion pounds of wool.

Mr. COOLEY. I assume the gentleman has read the Senate bill, has he not?

Mr. BARRETT. I certainly have read the Senate bill.

Mr. COOLEY. Does not the gentleman believe that will protect the wool producer?

Mr. BARRETT. But it will not protect the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. COOLEY. That is right. Now we finally have it. The gentleman agrees now.

Mr. BARRETT. I do not think the people of this country are entitled to take any loss on that wool.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman must choose now whether he is going to protect the wool grower or the Treasury. Which does he love best?

Mr. BARRETT. I do not think the people of Great Britain would expect us to take a loss on that.

Mr. COOLEY. Finally, Mr. Chairman, the importance of this measure cannot be too greatly emphasized. Of course we want to protect the wool producers of America. Both President Truman and Under Secretary of State Clayton have pointed the way that this can be accomplished. The Senate has enacted a bill which will accomplish the desired objective. The proposition before us now is whether we shall adopt the Senate bill and provide the necessary protection for the wool producers of America or whether we shall, through the back door, completely reverse the international trade policies which we have followed in recent years. If we are to embark upon a program of high tariffs and trade barriers; if we intend to keep out of this country every single commodity that can be produced cheaper in some other country than in our own; if we are about to embark upon a program of retaliatory tariffs; do you not think that we should at least show the Secretary of State the courtesy of according to him an opportunity to be heard? Actually, is not it a matter for the Ways and Means Committee to consider? And is not it a matter which merits the very careful thought and consideration of every Member of both Houses of Congress? We are about to attach a little tariff bill to a bill which originated in the Senate. This is contrary to the plain provisions of the Constitution, the organic law of our Republic. If we attach this little tariff bill to a bill which originated in the Senate, surely others will follow and this great event will be cited as a precedent. Since we now know the real meaning of this measure, certainly we should not act in haste in the passage of a measure of such great importance. If the House Committee on Agriculture is to take over the responsibility of writing tariffs on agricultural commodities, it will certainly be a great departure from the established precedents of this great legislative body. The only justification for section 22, as originally written, was because of the fact that it was a vital part and parcel of a broad Nation-wide agricultural adjustment program.

If Mr. Clayton was embarrassed at Geneva and came home on account of this ill-advised legislative proposal, I suppose that the Geneva Conference might as well be called off so far as America is concerned, for certainly he could not go back to Geneva with this bill around his neck as a brazen badge of the intentions of Congress to return to the ways of Smoot and Hawley and to the road which once led the world to great distress. I urge you to vote for the Senate bill as it came to us and to vote down the amendment which will be offered by my distinguished chairman tomorrow.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LARCADE.]

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Chairman, I am deeply interested in the bill which we have under consideration at this time as I represent a district which is a producer of wool. Beauregard Parish, in the northwestern portion of my district, is one of the larger wool-producing parishes in my district, and naturally whatever affects the industry as a whole affects my constituents in that parish, and it is my duty to endeavor to try to protect, as far as possible, not only my constituents but also the industry as a whole.

Mr. Chairman, experience is a teacher, and I well remember after the First World War, and again in 1933, what happened to the price on wool, and if we can judge the future by what has transpired in the past, unless some protection is given to the producers of wool in this country, we can well expect a repetition of what happened in the past. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the debate today, and I was greatly impressed with the remarks of my good friend and colleague the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE], who spoke just a few minutes ago. I think that my colleague has made a fine presentation of the subject dealing with the protection and the future of agriculture. I think that the arguments and facts presented represent sound and irrefutable arguments, as well as the deep concern of the gentleman from Georgia for the future of agriculture in general.

Mr. Chairman, it is a well-known fact that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] is recognized as one of the best informed Members of the House of Representatives on matters pertaining to agriculture, and his statements here today have exhibited his understanding and unselfishness in the protection of agriculture in the whole of the United States, and we are all fortunate to have on the Committee on Agriculture such an able and outstanding and hard-working member who is so fair and valuable to us all.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LANE].

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, I am in agreement with many of the previous speakers with the intent of this bill now before the House for consideration that the wool-growing industry be protected by adequate price support legislation. However, I differ in my statements from many of the other Members in stating that the wool growers are already entitled to the same price support protection as other farm commodities are receiving, but no more. I feel that it would be unfair and unjust and unreasonable to select wool for better treatment than other products produced by the farmers of our country.

We have been informed that the wool trade is not opposing adequate price support for domestic wool growers, but we do want to get the Government out of business and free enterprise returned now that the war is over. This industry approves a support-floor for wool at the farms equal to, but no more than that given over 160 other agriculture commodities.

Our wool industries' annual wool requirements are now more than twice the domestic clip, therefore we must import wool which means that domestic wool cannot sell at a higher price than imported wool.

Section 2A of this bill guarantees the wool grower a price for his wool based on the top of the market until the end of 1948. There is every reason to believe parity will be lowered materially before December 31, 1948, in which case wool growers would be receiving a much greater purchase price than afforded any other commodity by the Government if a wool purchase is continued at the 1946 level of prices. There is no doubt that the cost of this program will add to the already heavy burden being borne by the taxpayers of this Nation.

By the amendment, section 4, the bill gives the Secretary of Agriculture the power to impose fees on all wool that has been imported and is held in the inventories of all branches of wool industry, not in excess of 50 percent ad valorem. The imposition of these fees would cost the industry millions of dollars and in some cases would mean ruination. The imposition of these import fees will add to the cost of wool clothing to our population and may also affect our foreign relations with the 23 countries from whom we import wool.

Our domestic wool growers were never able to supply more than one-half of the raw material needs of our manufacturers of worsted cloth. Furthermore, they could not supply them with the long fiber raw wool necessary for quality worsteds. Even when given tariff protection, domestic sheep raisers cannot do the job.

Why our extensive worsted industry and their workers which suffered from substandard conditions for many years and only recently arrived at steady production, good wages, and good profits should be asked to bear the burden, is beyond all semblance of economic justice.

We believe that the Government has done more than enough for one segment of our economy, the wool growers. In spite of a 34 cents per pound tariff, foreign wool and better wool imported from 23 different countries, can still be sold at less than the support price which the Government is paying to wool industries in the United States.

Under the provisions of the amendment, section 4, we are now being asked to give the Secretary of Agriculture the power to impose tariff on foreign wool at his discretion. This is altogether too much power to give to any man, and especially at a time when so many other controls, justified only by the emergency of war, have been dropped. It amounts, in effect, to a nationalization of the raw-wool industry.

The imposition of these import fees would curtail wool imports, resulting in a contraction of manufacturing and a drop in employment, bringing sudden and severe deflation to many of our industrial communities.

In the New England States, textiles provide 4 out of every 10 jobs. In my home city of Lawrence, Mass., the largest producer of worsteds in the world, the industry provides 7 out of every 10 jobs. We are in no mood to stand idly by and permit the basic element in our economy to be destroyed by the wool-raiding lobby. If the wool and worsted industries curtail production, as they certainly will if faced with this tariff, the wool growers of the United States will also lose. This bill as amended by the committee has all the earmarks of a conspiracy to profit a few, at a disastrous cost to many.

I know that this extra preference granted to the wool farmers may appear attractive to them, but I give them sober warning, however, that this bill will prove to be a boomerang. If you paralyze the wool industry you will be cutting off the market for your wool. The domestic woolgrowers can neither provide us with the supply and quality. Shall the manufacturers and the consumers of the Nation be penalized for this? That precisely, will be the net result, if this bill as amended should be approved by this House. In short it says, "Take my limited product at prices held high above real market value or take none at all." In effect, it is monopolistic and dangerous.

The workers in the textile industry like other workers are feeling the high cost of living because their wages have not kept pace with the increasing cost. They are aware that the prices of agriculture commodities as a group have gone higher than any others. Why wool should be seeking a support price still higher than it has enjoyed is beyond common sense understanding.

We from the manufacturing areas recognize that the domestic growers of wool are entitled to some price support. In a spirit of cooperation we ask that they in turn consider our problem. The wool and worsted industries cannot survive the drastic penalties imposed by this bill. Wool growers, manufacturers, textile workers, and consumers are partners in an enterprise. They must not become antagonists, because all of them will suffer.

In place of the extreme provisions embodied in this bill, we suggest that you join with us in supporting the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER], which will give some consideration to some of the factors involved in this problem. Under the provisions of this amendment, Government support at 90 percent parity to wool growers is in line with other agricultural commodities. It will restore private incentive to the industry and protect tens of thousands from losing their positions and their jobs. It will bank and not fan the fires of inflation.

May I mention at this point that 90 percent of the domestic wool supply is processed in the manufacturing plants in the Northeastern States, and about three-fourths of the lamb crop is consumed in this area. It is hardly the best policy for the wool growers to bite the hand that feeds them.

The only reasonable course for us to follow is to enact legislation embodying the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER], which I believe is fair to all parties concerned.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD].

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the present measure because of the precarious position in which the sheep industry finds itself in Montana and throughout the whole Rocky Mountain region as well. As you know, livestock is one of the basic industries of the West.

Due to factors over which the industry has had very little or no control, our sheep population has dropped from 49,- 807,000 in 1942 to 32,542,000 today. This represents a reduction of 35 percent and furthermore makes our sheep population the lowest in over 50 years.

The production of domestic wool according to the Department of Agriculture has dropped from 459,073,000 pounds in 1942 to 300,000,000 pounds today; that likewise represents a reduction of 35 percent.

Intensive study by the United States Tariff Commission shows that the wool growers of this country at the present time are losing 9½ cents on every pound of wool produced and are also losing $1.18 on every head of sheep.

Since Pearl Harbor the domestic wool situation has come to occupy an increasing difficult economic position and while wool prices have generally increased 13.2 percent, 24 other principal agricultural commodities increased on an average of 91 percent. Furthermore, the operating expenses of the sheep industry have increased 66 percent from 1941 to the present time.

The sheep industry is finding it extremely difficult to compete with low-cost producers for the American market and the result has been, due to the war and other factors, that the imports of wool in this country have been extremely heavy. Eighty percent of the 1,000,000,000 pounds of wool consumed in this country last year was of foreign origin. It is highly imperative if we want the American sheep industry to survive to function on a decent profit basis, that this bill reported out by the Committee on Agriculture and given a rule by the Rules Committee, be passed today.

This measure provides:

First. That the Commodity Credit Corporation will continue its purchase program until December 31, 1948, at the 1946 price, which, as I have indicated, has not changed since Pearl Harbor. That price is less than parity.

Second. It authorizes the Commodity Credit Corporation to sell its wool at competitive prices with foreign wool. This will enable the United States to dispose of its stock pile.

Third. Amend existing law by adding wool to other commodities under section 22 of the AAA Act and thus provide that if imports of foreign wool tend to materially interfere with the wool program, the President may require the Tariff Commission to make a study and after a hearing if the President finds such to be the fact, he is required to impose such fees on imports as may be necessary to correct the situation.

In my opinion, the provisions of this wool bill are sound and necessary to provide for the sale of Government stock pile and to protect the American sheep industry from further liquidation. Like many of you in this Chamber, I realize this bill will have hard sledding because of the factional and economic interests involved but I want to appeal to you in behalf of this great American industry which needs help in order to survive and to ask you to vote for this measure so that the fine people who operate this industry will be given the opportunity to live peacefully and with a reasonable degree of security. I do not urge your support of this measure on political grounds but I do urge your adoption of this bill in behalf of an industry which has contributed much to our economy in both peace and war and which I think is entitled to every consideration at this time.

May I say, in conclusion, that the wool producers of this country owe a great deal to the distinguished gentleman from Utah [Mr. GRANGER] who has guided this measure through the Agricultural Committee, the Rules Committee, and onto the floor and who has throughout his many terms in Congress proved himself a fighter in behalf of the best interests of his State and his country. Utah is, I am sure, well aware of his outstanding ability and the fine work he has performed in behalf of his constituents.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time today primarily because I read an editorial which was referred to earlier in the day. I will read a part of it. It appeared in a Washington paper a couple of days ago. Here is what part of the editorial concerning the consideration of this bill in Congress says:

> The result was to put in a turmoil the international conference on tariffs and commercial policy at present going on in Geneva. Vigorous attacks on our good faith have been launched by the delegates.
>
> In particular Australia has led the agitation. That country has been earning dollars to buy from us in this dollar-poor world mainly out of wool exports to America. It is little short of tragic to see the turn that the Geneva proceedings are taking, for the purpose of the conference is to prepare the way for the establishment of an international trade organization, which would be a cornerstone in the functional cooperation we are seeking to promote among the nations. Evidently Under Secretary Clayton is back in Washington in order to remind Congress of the way that our reputation as a treaty observer is imperiled. It is unthinkable that his reminders will be disregarded.
> More significant at the moment is the evidence that no international economic order can be built when price-support schemes require further support at the customs house. Subsidies are less noxious, and only then if they are so graduated as to enable, say, the wool growers who do not wish to compete with foreign wool to change over to other industries.

I want to know when in the name of common sense the State Department sees fit to jockey us into a position where we have one of three choices: One, to sell our farmers and other producers of our raw and critical commodities down the river and tell them to change over to other occupations, causing us to depend entirely upon foreign producers for our future needs regardless of the jeopardy in which that places the United States. Or, two, to subsidize them out of the Treasury of the United States no matter what the cost may be; or, three, to ask our United States wool growers to incur great losses in competition with cheap foreign wool.

I studied the strategic and critical material field for 8 years during my service on the Committee on Military Affairs. I know something of the struggle we had prior to Pearl Harbor and how jittery we were about our inadequate supply of wool for war purposes. Any future war may be fought largely in the air and we have need for high altitude flying and possibly polar warfare.

How can Mr. Clayton or any other member of the State Department think that they are strengthening our Nation by jockeying us into position where we have to jeopardize the very existence of a great domestic industry and our capacity to produce such an important commodity as wool. I am speaking now primarily because of my interest in national defense. I think it is highly important that Congress serves notice on Mr. Clayton that it is a part of his job to give ear to the Congress and the voice of the people in maintaining an adequate national defense and that America is not strengthening its defense when we put ourselves in the position where we are dependent upon long and dangerous sea lanes for our strategic and critical materials which are necessary for our national economy and our national defense.

I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN.]

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am glad the gentleman brought up the points that are mentioned in that editorial. The facts are that Australia and the British are demanding that we cut the duty on wool. It is not this legislation that is bothering them. They are insisting that the administration go along and cut the duty on wool. This bill may be a deterrent to Mr. Clayton from going ahead and cutting the duty, but as soon as it is disposed of, no doubt, he will go ahead and cut the duty on wool, and that will mean the liquidation of the wool industry in this country.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Yes; I am sorry to say that is too apt to be the case. Mr. Clayton faces the situation that he faces today because of the grasping and reaching of these countries at Geneva who are trying to grab the American market away from the American farmer, the American businessman, and the American industrialist. The biggest and best market in the whole world today is the American market. We should not permit other nations to take our own market from us at the expense of our own national defense.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART].

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, earlier in the day I heard the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] say that if we passed this wool bill we would wreck the Conference at Geneva. I began to wonder, should I raise my voice in defense of a domestic industry and perhaps wreck an international conference, or should I remain silent and let an international conference wreck a great and promising domestic industry.

In the old days, when we were under unilateral tariffs, before we ushered in the Hull program of so-called reciprocity, we gave to every industry in the United States the protection to which it was felt that that particular industry was entitled. When we took up reciprocal trading, so called, we abandoned that theory and went to another one, one which approved the sacrifice of one industry in order that another industry might gain an advantage. That is precisely the basis upon which reciprocal-trade agreements are negotiated today. Yes, wool is the key commodity upon which the success or failure of the Conference at Geneva will turn. The United States wants to break down the British imperial-preference system, not for the benefit of wool, no; but for the benefit of the great metal-fabricating industries of the United States, an outstanding example, of course, being the automobile industry. Now, who are the great defenders of the British imperial system? Australia, South Africa, and New Zealand are the Dominions which insist upon its maintenance. They will not give up their preferences that they have acquired over the last 30 or 40 years in the building up of this British imperial-preference system unless they are compensated in a big way. They are in a strategic position, and so they say to the American automobile industry, "You cannot send your automobiles into Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa unless you cut the American tariff on wool."

Now, the question is, Are we willing to sacrifice the wool grower, his future, his right to expand his industry, his right to supply his own, the American, market, in order that the automobile industry shall acquire, on the other side of the world, greater opportunities to expand its business? I do not know. I was taught in school and at my mother's knee that it was the duty of our American Government, a duty above all others, to afford equal protection to every man, woman, and child in this country, without discrimination. I was taught to believe in the principle of equal treatment for all; special privilege to none. So the great moral question now arises: Has the American Government the right, the moral right, if you please, to sacrifice hundreds of thousands of people who are making their living in the domestic wool industry in order to confer great benefits and great opportunities upon hundreds of thousands of other people who derive their livelihood from the manufacture and sale of automobiles.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEARHART. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman is opposed to reciprocal trade treaties; is he?

Mr. GEARHART. I am strongly in favor of reciprocity, but I am now and have always been very much opposed to the policy which the administration seems to have taken unto its heart of bringing disaster to some American citizens in order to confer benefits on others upon whom it chooses to confer its favors.

Mr. COOLEY. Certainly the gentleman does not accuse the State Department of deliberately embarking upon a program which is calculated to sacrifice any segment or group in America; does he?

Mr. GEARHART. I am sure that if the gentleman from North Carolina had sat in on the hearings I have sat in on down through the last 6 or 7 years, he would never have exposed himself by asking that question. I will tell him a few.

Mr. COOLEY. Has the gentleman ever voted for any reciprocal trade-treaty program?

Mr. GEARHART. I will tell the gentleman an industry. What has become of the American jeweled-watch industry? What has happened to the American pottery industry——

Mr. COOLEY (interrupting). I do not suggest that some industries have not been adversely affected.

Mr. GEARHART. If any have been adversely affected, is it possible that the gentleman will defend the governmental action that is responsible for the result? Does he realize that that is exactly what will happen to the American wool industry if Mr. Clayton is permitted to turn the American wool market over to the Australians, the South Africans, and the New Zealanders in return for the privilege of shipping American automobiles into their markets?

It is a moral question. Which side of the question is the gentleman on?

Mr. COOLEY. I am on the side of the reciprocal trade treaties, if the gentleman is directing the question to me, and I would like to ask him if he has ever voted for any reciprocal-trade-treaty program.

Mr. GEARHART. No; not for the continuation of this program as presently administered. But I do believe sincerely in the principle of reciprocity, the bilateral granting of concessions in our markets for things we need for concessions in other markets for our excess production, a system which will not require the sacrifice of one domestic producer for the benefit of another domestic producer. The Hull program bears no resemblance to that. I will always oppose any American governmental action which benefits one group of American citizens to the deliberate detriment of another group of American citizens equally entitled to their country's favor. Robbing Peter to pay Paul never had any particular appeal to me. And that is precisely what the Hull so-called reciprocal-trade-agreements program results in—the robbing of one to pay another.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEARHART. I am very happy to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. When the representative of the State Department appeared before our committee on this bill he said in no uncertain terms that it was the purpose gradually to liquidate the sheep and wool industry of this country because they could produce wool cheaper in other countries in the world.

Mr. GEARHART. Yes; and if it is liquidated they necessarily expose the United States to the greatest dangers in the event that we are again overtaken by war. Wool is a critical material of the first order. Is it possible our negotiators do not know that?

There are a lot of people in the State Department who think only in terms of smokestacks and pay rolls, altogether too few who think in terms of a balanced economy, self-sufficiency in time of war. And there is an influential few behind the silken curtains in charge of the negotiation of these agreements, who believe that agriculture is a lowly pursuit which should be sacrificed—and they have succeeded, oh, too well.

Do you know that under the reciprocal-trade-agreements program the export of nonagricultural products has mounted 57 percent but the export of agricultural products from the United States has fallen off to 30 percent less than we were exporting in 1934, the year that the reciprocal-trade-agreements program, so-called, was enacted?

If there is one in this room or within the hearing of my voice who can point out one way that any agriculture commodity has benefited from this program I will gladly yield to him now. The record will disclose that all we have done is to cut agricultural tariffs, this to the number of 327 items, these to an average of 40 percent of what the tariff was before, the effect of which has been the flooding of this country with competitive agricultural products until war economy started them moving the other way. And I am not talking about bananas, coffee, and tropical fruits. I am talking about the kind of agricultural products every farmer in this country is capable of raising and supplying the American market with. It is also significant that the importation of these agricultural commodities under this program has prevented the utilization of 70,000,000 acres of American farm lands in their domestic production. In other words, if the farmers were allowed to raise these crops they would have to employ 70,000,000 acres more than they are now using. When we consider the further fact that there are only 325,000,000 acres under cultivation in this country, 70,000,000 acres—an average computed for the years 1935 to 1939, inclusive—are not an insignificant few.

Consider also the fact that as a consequence of the administration of this program the agricultural population of the United States has fallen from 33 percent of all the people to less than 25 percent. That difference, representing 10,000,000 people, accounts for the number of the unemployed during the depression years, contributing the greatest number to the bread lines of the country during the unhappy thirties.

It might be well, Mr. Chairman, that those who so fervently protest their love for the American farmer, look well to these figures.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. ROBERTSON] may have permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, as a Representative of the people of North Dakota, one of the Nation's outstanding agricultural States, I should like to speak in behalf of the wool bill.

As I understand the bill, first, it will allow the Commodity Credit Corporation to continue its purchase program until December 31, 1948, at the 1946 price; second, it authorizes the Commodity Credit Corporation to sell its wool at competitive prices with foreign wool; and, third, it requires the President to impose fees on imports if the Tariff Commission makes the finding that foreign wool materially interferes with the wool program.

Many pertinent facts have been pointed out by other Members supporting this bill. However, I should like to outline briefly those facts which to me make the passage of this bill imperative.

The United States produces only about one-third of the wool which it consumes. Formerly the United States produced 35 percent more than the 300,000,000 pounds it produces today. The reason for the decline in production is directly attributable to the lack of profit in raising sheep. A report made by the United States Tariff Commission after an extended study of the sheep industry showed that the wool growers of this country lost 9½ cents on every pound of wool produced in 1946, and suffered a somewhat higher loss in the two preceding years.

The facts are particularly significant in light of the finding of the Army and Navy Munitions Board that wool is a strategic and critical material necessary for the security of the Nation. This means one thing: We must encourage rather than discourage the production of wool in the United States. This bill will encourage such production.

As a member of the Appropriations Committee I am concerned with the tremendous expense of government. I feel that every activity of government should be placed on a paying basis wherever possible. This bill can cost the Government some money. I am not too alarmed over this possibility, however, for two reasons: First, the wool growers are entitled to a support price, because wool prices have increased but 13 percent since 1941 and operating expenses have increase 66 percent—on the other hand, 24 principal agricultural commodities increased an average of 91 percent during that same period. We must encourage production of wool, and without a support price, production will decrease even more rapidly than it has in the past years. Today we only produce about one-third of the wool we consume. We must produce more. The Army and Navy feel that wool is a critical material. We all know of its importance in meeting our daily needs of clothing and protection. So it is not difficult to understand its importance to national security. Second, if the obvious intent of this bill is carried out, if the mandate to the President to act in accordance with the findings of the Tariff Commission is followed, the price of wool will be sufficient so that it will not cost the Government a cent in support-price payment. The Commodity Credit Corporation will be able to dispose of its tremendous stock pile of wool without suffering a further loss. And, most important, the production of wool will increase.

I should like to explain briefly my statement that it is necessary that the President carry out the mandate of this bill. It would provide the President with the authority to require the Tariff Commission to make a study of the wool program—the Tariff Commission has made such a study. It has found, as I stated earlier, that the price of wool is lower than the cost of production in the United States. Under such a finding, there can be only one conclusion, and that is that the imports of foreign wool tend to materially interfere with the wool program. Under such a finding, it is my understanding, the President is required—not given the option, but required—to impose such fees on imports as may be necessary to correct the situation. If the President follows the mandate of this bill, the Commodity Credit Corporation will not continue to be a drag on the Federal Treasury. The wool program can be self-supporting, and the United States will produce a higher percentage of this critical material.

For these reasons, I shall support the wool bill.

The CHAIRMAN. All time having expired, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Wool Act of 1947."

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HARNESS of Indiana, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 814) to provide support for wool, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COOLEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include two brief speeches, one on soil conservation and the other on progressive farming.

Mr. GEARHART asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances and in each instances to include extraneous matter.

Mr. FORAND asked and was given permission to revise and extend the remarks he made earlier in the day and include a newspaper article.

Mr. TEAGUE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances and include editorials.

Mr. DONOHUE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a radio speech.

Mr. PATMAN (at the request of Mr. RAYBURN) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to revise and extend the remarks he made earlier in the day and include some telegrams and one letter.

COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House Committee on the District of Columbia shall have been considered as having had permission to meet during the session of the House this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. HAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow the members of the Board of Visitors to the United States Coast Guard Academy may have permission to be absent from the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

ARCHBISHOP MICHAEL J. CURLEY

Mr. MEADE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. MEADE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct the attention of the House to the fact that in Baltimore today were held funeral services for one of the outstanding Americans of all time, Archbishop Michael J. Curley. In the death of Archbishop Curley, not only the Catholics of the archdioceses of Baltimore and Washington have lost a great spiritual leader but the people of this Nation have lost a truly great man. Archbishop Curley was keenly interested in education and due to his efforts the Catholic schools in Washington and in Maryland showed tremendous growth during the past generation.

It is a great tribute to him in that he died a poor man, although during his life he had been given more than a million dollars, all of which he gave to charity. His only possessions at the time of his death were a few old clothes and some books.

We have lost a great man and it will be a long time before he can be replaced and he will never be forgotten.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan (at the request of Mr. HOPE) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LATHAM (at the request of Mr. HOPE) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

SENATE

FRIDAY, MAY 23, 1947

(Legislative day of Monday, April 21, 1947)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord our God, shed the light of Thy Holy Spirit within the minds and hearts of Thy servants in this place of responsibility and decision, that all who sincerely seek the truth may find it, and finding it may follow it, whatever the cost, knowing that it is the truth that makes men free. When we have the truth, let us not hit each other over the head with it, but rather use it as a lamp to lighten dark places, in order that we may see where we are going.

This we ask in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. WHITE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, May 22, 1947, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, and he announced that on May 22, 1947, the President had approved and signed the act (S. 938) to provide for assistance to Greece and Turkey.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3029) to provide for the acquisition of a site and for preparation of plans and specifications for a courthouse to accommodate the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia and the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 3348) to declare the policy of the United States with respect to the allocation of costs of construction of the Coachella Division of the All-American Canal irrigation project, California, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 854) to amend section 502 (a) of the act entitled "An act to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes," and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication and letter, which were referred as indicated:

PROPOSED PROVISION PERTAINING TO APPROPRIATION FOR COMMERCE DEPARTMENT (S. DOC. NO. 56)

A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a draft of a proposed provision pertaining to an appropriation for the Department of Commerce in the form of an amendment to the budget for the fiscal year 1948 (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REVISION OF METHOD OF ISSUING PATENTS TO PUBLIC LANDS

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to revise the method of issuing patents for public lands (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Public Lands.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the PRESIDENT pro tempore:

A resolution of the House of Representatives of the General Assembly of the State of Illinois; to the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy:

"House Resolution 61

"Whereas it is proposed to locate an atomic energy laboratory engaged in research for the development of all phases of the energy, including military, in Du Page County, on approximately 4,000 acres of land now occupied by homes, farms, and forest preserve; and

"Whereas the Atomic Energy Commission did not hold a public hearing on this matter, thus depriving interested citizens of an opportunity to be heard; and

"Whereas the Department of Conservation of the State of Illinois has advised that the location of the laboratory would be a severe hardship on the residents of this area in that the laboratory would require millions of gallons of water from an area which is already in danger of a water shortage due to the rapidly receding water level; and

"Whereas the dispossession of residents of the land to be taken over would add an extreme hardship through increasing the already serious housing emergency already existing in the county; and

"Whereas the acquisition of the Du Page tract is entirely unnecessary because of the existence of a far more suitable location in nearby Elwood, Ill., on some 40,000 acres of Government-owned land formerly used as an ordnance plant and equipped with highways, water system, railroads, electricity, housing, and hospital facilities; and

"Whereas the location of such a plant in a more remote Government-owned area would provide a margin of safety not possible at the Du Page location and would result in saving millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Sixty-fifth General Assembly of the State of Illinois, That we respectfully petition and urge the Congress of the United States to investigate the obvious advantages of locating the proposed laboratory in some Government-owned area in the hope that the Atomic Energy Commission may consider the desirability of using such a Government-owned or Government-controlled site; that a copy of this preamble and resolution be forwarded by the secretary of state to the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and each Illinois Member of Congress at Washington.

"Adopted by the house, May 14, 1947."

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii; to the Committee on Finance:

"Senate Joint Resolution 9

"Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to provide for purposes of taxation of income, that damage caused by the tidal wave which hit the Hawaiian Islands on April 1, 1946, and the subsequent tidal waves or like marine disturbances may be deducted from income in installments over a period of 5 years

"Be it enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii:

"SECTION 1. The Congress of the United States of America is most respectfully memorialized to provide that, for purposes of taxation of income, deductions for damage caused by the tidal wave which hit the Hawaiian Islands on April 1, 1946, and the subsequent tidal waves or other marine disturbances of like nature may be deducted either wholly in the year in which such damage was suffered or in one-fifth installments over a period of 5 years.

"SEC. 2. Certified copies of this joint resolution shall be forwarded to the President of the United States of America, to the President of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress, to the Secretary of the Interior and to the delegate to the Congress from Hawaii.

"Approved this 16th day of May A. D. 1947.

"INGRAM M. STAINBACK,
"Governor of the Territory of Hawaii."

Petitions of members of the Tampa Townsend Club, No. 1; the members of the Tampa Townsend Club, No. 4, and the Zephyrhills Townsend Club, No. 1, all in the State of Florida, favoring the enactment of the so-called Townsend plan to provide old-age assistance; to the Committee on Finance.

A resolution adopted by the Board of Aldermen of the City of Chelsea, Mass., favoring the enactment of the so-called Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill, S. 866, to establish a national housing objective and the policy to be followed in the attainment thereof, to facilitate sustained progress in the attainment of such objective and to provide for the coordinated execution of such policy through a National Housing Commission, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. O'CONOR::

A resolution of the Senate of the Legislature of the State of Maryland; to the Committee on Finance:

"Senate resolution petitioning the United States Congress to investigate the operation of cooperatives particularly with reference to special privileges granted under tax exemptions

"Whereas the Senate of Maryland recognizes the tremendous growth of cooperative associations to be inimical to the American system of competitive enterprise; and

"Whereas it is the sense of the Senate of Maryland that danger to our free enterprise exists in the continued and accelerated growth of cooperative associations; and

"Whereas the Senate of Maryland recognizes that the impelling force and increasing power of these cooperatives emanates from the Federal law granting special privileges, particularly in tax exemptions; and

"Whereas no individual State has power far reaching enough to wholly correct the danger to our free institutions: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of Maryland, That the United States Congress is hereby requested to make a thorough and complete investigation and analysis of the effect of cooperatives on our competitive system of business, with a view to enactment of legislation found necessary or desirable to correct any evils found to exist under present laws; and be it further

"Resolved, That this resolution be spread upon the journal of the senate and that the secretary be, and he is hereby, directed to send a copy of same to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the Representatives from Maryland in both Houses of Congress."

A resolution of the Senate of the Legislature of the State of Maryland; to the Committee on Public Works:

"Senate resolution requesting the United States Public Roads Administration to construct a dual highway between Andrews Field, in Prince Georges County, and the United States Naval Radar Station, in Calvert County

"Whereas there is no direct route from Andrews Field, in Prince Georges County, to the United States Naval Radar Station at Randle Cliffs, in Calvert County; and

"Whereas it is desirable that there be a direct and safe route between these two points; and

"Whereas such a highway will be of great value to the Government and also to the people residing in Washington and its vicinity who wish to visit the water front along the Chesapeake Bay: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of Maryland, That the United States Public Roads Administration be, and it is hereby, requested to construct a dual highway between Andrews Field, in Prince Georges County, and the United States Naval Radar Station at Randle Cliffs, in Calvert County; and be it further

"Resolved, That this resolution be spread on the journal of the senate and that the secretary send a copy thereof to the United States Public Roads Administration and to each Representative in the United States Congress from Maryland."

A resolution of the Senate of the Legislature of the State of Maryland; to the Committee on Armed Services:

"Whereas the Navy has proposed the abandonment of the Indian Head powder factory and the erection of a similar plant in another section of the Nation; and

"Whereas it seems increasingly apparent that an economy program by the Congress and Federal Government cannot support such additional expenditures, as new facilities would cost an estimated $6,000,000 but by an expenditure of approximately $1,000,000 at Indian Head, the present plant could produce the latest types of powder; and

"Whereas there has been advanced no real reason why experimental work cannot be conducted as satisfactorily at Indian Head as at any other locale, and no other naval establishment is equipped to produce double-base powder but the Indian Head plant is 75 percent equipped to do so at present; and

"Whereas thousands of dollars would be lost to the community of Indian Head and vicinity should the removal of the Navy base be consummated; and

"Whereas such removal would work great hardship on the citizens and taxpayers of Charles County; and

"Whereas the people of Charles County have already delegated a special committee to consider and oppose the project of such removal: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of Maryland, That the Members of the Maryland delegation in Congress be and they are hereby respectfully requested to give complete and thorough attention, immediately to the Navy's proposal for the termination of operations at Indian Head; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each of the Members of the Maryland delegation, including the six Representatives and two Senators from Maryland; and another copy to the Secretary of the Navy, with a request for a full and open hearing on this proposal before the Navy Department and Congress."

UNIFORM MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE LAWS

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present for appropriate reference and to have printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted at the ninety-fifth annual convention of the diocese of Iowa, in which they express their approval of the principles and purposes of the constitutional amendment and bill to make uniform marriage and divorce laws of the various States, as introduced by me in the Senate.

There being no objection, the resolution was received, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DIOCESE OF IOWA, NINETY-FIFTH ANNUAL CONVENTION—RESOLUTION SUBMITTED BY THE COMMITTEE ON CHRISTIAN SOCIAL RELATIONS

Resolved, That this convention agrees with the principle and purposes of the constitutional amendment and bill to make uniform the marriage and divorce laws of the various States, as introduced in Congress by Senator ARTHUR CAPPER, and directs its secretary to notify him of this fact.

The above resolution supported and carried.

Rev. GEORGE C. WEISER,
Secretary.

FORT MADISON, IOWA.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

The following report of a committee was submitted:

By Mr CAPPER, from the Committee on Foreign Relations:

H. R. 1179. A bill to aid in defraying the expenses of the seventeenth triennial convention of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union to be held in this country in June 1947; without amendment (Rept. No. 198).

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

(Mr. WHITE introduced Senate bill 1333, to amend the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. CAPPER:

S. 1334. A bill to enable the Secretary of Agriculture, through the Federal Extension Service, to cooperate with the land-grant colleges and universities in carrying out a program for the collection and dissemination of information with respect to the supply of, the need for, and the effective use of agricultural workers, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

S. 1335. A bill to provide for the establishment of the Alcove Springs National Park in Marshall County, Kans.; to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS ACT OF 1934

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for appropriate reference a bill which I send to the desk amending the Communications Act of 1934, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 1333) to amend the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. WHITE, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I have just introduced a bill to amend the Communications Act of 1934. Because of the wide interest expressed in radio legislation, it seems appropriate to make a brief explanatory statement of the measure.

The bill is the result of more than 7 years of congressional investigations, studies, and hearings by committees in both Houses of Congress, conferences, and discussions with representatives of large and small broadcasters and members of the Federal Communications Commission, as well as with experts and students of the problem. It has its immediate source in S. 1268, a bill introduced by Senator Wheeler in the Seventy-sixth Congress; in S. 1520, introduced by me in the Seventy-sixth Congress; in S. 814, introduced by me for myself and Senator Wheeler in the Seventy-eighth Congress; in recommendations of the Federal Communications Bar Association; in recommendations in the Report of the Attorney General's Committee on Administrative Procedure; and in court decisions.

The purpose of the bill is largely to clarify the meaning and intent of the existing act and to rectify some of the defects which have become obvious during the past 12 years of administration of the law. Broadly, it deals with:

First. Changes in the organization of the Commission designed to make it function more expeditiously and expertly.

Second. Modifications in functioning and procedure by the Commission to insure equality in treatment of applicants and licensees.

Third. Modifications in appellate procedure and provision for declaratory judgments.

Fourth. Equality of right and opportunity to use radio facilities in political campaigns and in discussion of public questions and separation of fact from editorial opinion.

Fifth. Further protection against censorship over programs or station operation by Government.

Sixth. Protection against monopoly by limitations on station ownership.

It should be emphasized that the bill should not be regarded as the answer to every question that has been raised. There may be much to be added and some to be subtracted. We shall have hearings, and all who have suggestions to offer will be heard, and their views will be carefully considered.

This much, however, I believe can be said. We are in great need of new radio legislation; the art is more than a quarter of a century old and has made gigantic strides technically, but is operating under law which for the most part is nearly 20 years old. Back in 1939, the late President Roosevelt commented publicly on the need for a reorganization of the Commission and new substantive law on the subject of communications. The Nation's broadcasters have made clear that they want new legislation; but even more important, the 140,000,000 people in this country who are the radio listeners are entitled to what I believe to be the benefits of this proposed legislation.

Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a statement I have prepared which explains in a section by section analysis the provisions of the bill I have introduced.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DIGEST AND EXPLANATION OF THE BILL

SECTIONS 1, 2, AND 3

Section 1 cites the titles of the act as the "Communications Act Amendments, 1947." Sections 2 and 3 amend section 3 of the present law to add a number of definitions and clarify the meaning of some existing definitions. These include the definitions of "broadcasting," "network broadcasting," "license," "station license," "radio station license," "broadcast station," "broadcasting station," "radio broadcast station," "network organization," "hours," "broadcast hours," "construction permit," "single broadcast band." Clarification of some of these terms, particularly the term "license," is made necessary because of a tendency upon the part of the Commission to treat what are in fact licenses, as instruments of a different character and lesser import, thereby making possible avoidance of compliance with procedural and appellate provisions of the act intended as safeguards against arbitrary administrative action, provisions necessary to be respected if orderly procedure is to be had. These definitions tend to insure that result.

SECTIONS 4 AND 5

Sections 4 and 5 amend sections 4 and 5 of the present law and modify the administrative set-up and functions of the Commission. Section 4 eliminates the provision giving the President authority to name the Chairman, thus conforming to the general practice in several other quasi-judicial agencies which annually elect their own Chairman. Section 5 would require separation of the Commission of seven members into two statutory divisions of three members each and clarifies the functions of the Chairman and the Commission.

Under the legislation proposed the whole Commission would have power and authority to adopt and promulgate any rule or regulation of general application required or authorized by the act, including procedural rules and regulations for the Commission and each division. The whole Commission would have plenary authority over amateur services, emergency services, maritime services, aircraft services, general safety services, the qualification and licensing of operators, the selection and control of personnel, the assignment of bands of frequencies to the various radio services and many other subjects and services, as at present. But the present judicial and quasi-judicial functions of the Commission would be vested in the proposed divisions insofar as those functions relate to the most important and controversial subjects within the present jurisdiction of the Commission.

Jurisdiction to hear and determine all cases arising under the act or regulations relating to broadcast, television, facsimile and kindred communications intended for public reception is vested in the Broadcast Division. Similar jurisdiction with respect to common carriers and communications intended for a designated addressee is vested in the Common Carrier Division. This plan not only recognizes the basic and fundamental difference between the two types of communications involved and the nature of the questions presented by each, but it also provides a method for obtaining proper consideration of those cases by persons who wil be able to devote their time and attention to the questions committed to them wihout undue interruption or interference occasioned by the demands of basically different problems.

Under the plan proposed, the status of the chairman would be that of an executive officer and coordinator participating fully in all matters within the jurisdiction of the Commission except the determination and decision of contested matters which are made the exclusive business of the divisions. Experience has amply demonstrated that the chairman cannot be expected to devote the time and attention necessary to the proper handling and disposition of these matters and also efficiently to discharge the many other duties which are unavoidably his under the act. As to these other duties, an attempt also has been made to clarify the status of the chairman and to make him, and him only, the official spokesman and representative of the Commission in certain important respects.

When the present act was before the Congress in 1934, the bill passed by the Senate provided for a mandatory separation of the Commission into divisions as is now proposed by this bill but this plan was later abandoned and the present Commission has been operating under a law which permitted but did not require it to organize itself into divisions. In recent years, the division plan has been entirely abandoned by the Commission and it seems obvious that such abandonment has operated to the detriment of orderly procedure and to wise administration and regulation. Students of this legislative problem are thoroughly convinced of the wisdom of the mandatory division plan for at least two important reasons. They recognize that there are fundamental differences in the two classes of communications; that rate making and public utility concepts are the very essence of private communications but have little, if any, application to communications with the public directly; that there has been a tendency upon the part of the Commission to confuse the two and to apply the same concepts and philosophies in the regulation of the two. This tendency must be avoided. Secondly, it is apparent that the subject of public or mass communications and the problems incident to the regulation thereof are so interesting and attractive that they draw public attention; that on the other hand, there is very little of news value or opportunity for publicity in the regulation of common carriers and this has had the result of centering the attention of the Commission and its personnel almost exclusively on broadcasting and related problems and of preventing the giving of sufficient attention to equally important problems relating to private communications.

The changes proposed in these two sections would bring about a much needed and desired separation of the judicial and regulatory functions of the Commission; would contribute to a sounder knowledge on the part of the commissioners of the communication problems committed to them; would make for orderly procedure and harmony of decision; and would speed up the disposition of cases before the Commission and the divisions thereof.

Definite authority is given to the Commission or to either division to assign or refer to an individual commissioner or to a body composed of an employee or employees, any portion of its work, business, or functions but with an assured right of review by the Commission or the appropriate division. This obviates the necessity for full Commission or division action in cases where this is not believed necessary. It should result in speedier consideration and decision.

SECTION 6

This section amends section 4 (k) of the present act and is intended to make more clear and definite what shall be contained in the annual report filed by the Commission. Briefly, the Commission is to furnish annually (1) information and data bearing on the problems of regulation of interstate and foreign wire and radio communication; (2) information on the general administrative operations of the Commission so that Congress may readily understand what the Commission has done or ailed to do; (3) information concerning personnel employed during the year and their experience, etc., and those resigned or discharged; (4) information in detail of all sums expended by the Commission, for what purpose and under what authority; (5) specific recommendations on necessary additional legislation and the reasons therefor.

SECTION 7

This section amends subsection (i) of section 303 of the present act and is designed to expressly limit the Commission's rule-making power with respect to stations engaged in chain broadcasting only to the physical and technical phases of regulation. It would limit the effect of the opinion of the Supreme Court handed down May 10, 1943, in the case of National Broadcasting Company, Inc., et al. v. U. S. et al. (319 U. S. 190) which generally has been considered as an example of judicial "law-making" of authority not granted in the act. It should be noted here that the Commission's chain-broadcasting regulations involved in this section are, in substance, made a part of this bill in section 19.

SECTION 8

This section amends subsection (j) of section 303 of the present act which gives the Commission authority to make rules and regulations requiring stations to maintain records of programs and similar technical details. The proposed new language is designed and intended to accomplish two purposes: (1) To enlarge in specific terms the requirement for certain types of information not originally provided for; and (2) to limit the authority of the Commission, now apparently exercised under the authority of section 308 (b), to require reports and information from licensees which are not necessary to carry out its regulatory function.

SECTION 9

This section amends subsection (d) of section 307 of the law which now provides that definite the existing language regarding allocation of licenses, frequencies, and hours of operation by the Commission. It is designed to bring about a fairer distribution of radio broadcast facilities in the country and at the same time discourage a policy which grants licenses wholesale simply on "demand."

SECTION 10

This section amends subsection (b) of section 307 of the present act to make more Commission action on renewals of licenses is limited to and governed by the same considerations and practices which affect the granting of an original license. The proposed new language would make the procedure in such cases conform in every particular to the procedure set out for original applications proposed in section 12 of this bill. It is designed to bring about orderly procedure under law.

SECTIONS 11 AND 12

These sections amend sections 308 and 309 of the present act. They are designed to make more definite and certain the procedure to be employed by the Commission in the exercise of its radio-licensing function. These amendments are made necessary by the restrictive character of the language in the present act and by the disposition of the Commission to give that language an extremely literal rather than a broad interpretation. The result has been to deprive applicants in many cases of the right to be heard before their applications are denied and also to deprive persons adversely affected by actions of the Commission an opportunity to be heard before the Commission.

Section 11 would make clear that all instruments of authorization granted by the Commission entitling the holders to construct or operate radio apparatus should, in general, be the subject of a written application. Provision is made, however, for authorizations in emergencies or in times of war without the filing of a formal application.

It is also proposed that the Commission may not, except as specifically provided in section 14 of this bill, modify or revoke an existing license and that no transfer proceedings may be utilized by the Commission for the purpose of disciplinary action designed to punish a licensee for his actions as such.

The amendments to section 309 contained in section 12 of this bill make clear that any person filing an application is entitled as a matter of right to have that application handled in a definite procedural way. This is not assured under present practice of the Commission. The procedure to be followed in the handling of applications is that which was successfully followed by the Commission for a considerable period of time pursuant to rules and regulations prescribed by it, but the method was abandoned on the apparent theory that the Commission was according to applicants and others in interest greater rights than those specified by the act. Since the right to notice and hearing is the very essence of orderly procedure, amendments which leave no doubt that such rights are secured are absolutely imperative. Specifically, the amendments proposed to section 309 will make it possible, as at present, for the Commission to grant any application without hearing if convinced that the statutory standard will be served thereby. But it will provide a method whereby any person who has the right to challenge the legality or propriety of such a grant by appeal from the Commission's decision can make his complaint first before the Commission—a guaranty which the present law does not contain. The proposed language makes clear who have rights, what their rights are, and exact procedural steps in accordance with recommendations of the Attorney General's Committee on Administrative Procedure.

SECTION 13

This section amends section 310 (b) of the present act to make certain that no station license granted by the Commission may be transferred without Commission approval, and makes definite the procedure to be employed by the Commission in passing upon the merits of such applications. The necessity for provisions of this character arises out of the failure of the present transfer section to refer to construction permits as well as licenses, and its failure to specify either the procedure to be employed or, with sufficient certainty, the standard to be accepted which controls the ultimate decision.

SECTION 14

This section proposes extensive revision of section 312 of the present act, which deals with revocation of licenses. The present law permits revocation by the Commission for false statements either in the application or in the statement of fact which may be required under the licensing provisions; or because of conditions revealed by such statements of fact as may be required from time to time which would warrant the Commission to refuse to grant a license on an original application; or for failure to operate substantially as set forth in the license; or for failure to observe any of the restrictions or conditions of the act or of regulations of the Commission authorized by the act or a treaty ratified by the United States. Thus, revocation is the sole administrative penalty in the case of violators ranging from the most serious to those who may innocently violate regulations of the Commission on technical matters.

It is believed that some method short of absolute revocation should be provided for lesser violations and at the same time make the section effective to deal with violations of all types, since understandably the Commission has been reluctant to proceed with drastic penalties for minor violations. Accordingly, it is proposed that for many of the less serious violations the Commission may undertake cease-and-desist procedures, carefully spelled out, and subsequent violation of such a cease-and-desist order is cause for revocation. Revocation is also authorized for conditions coming to the attention of the Commission which would have warranted the Commission to deny a license originally. An additional provision is included dealing with modifications of licenses or construction permits by the Commission under a definite procedure which allows the holder a hearing, if he requests it.

SECTION 15

This section is a revision of section 315 of the present act, which deals with the use of radio stations for broadcasting in political campaigns. Section 15 of the present act merely provides that the Commission has no authority to require a licensee to permit the use of his station for a political campaign. In the proposed revision, that prohibition against the Commission remains, but it is provided that if the licensee does permit the use of his station for a political campaign, certain conditions and obligations shall obtain.

In brief, these conditions are as follows:

1. If a legally qualified candidate in any election, or a person designated by him, is permitted the use of a station for participating in a political campaign, then equal opportunity must be granted each of the candidate's opponents or persons designated by them. Similarly, if a person is permitted the use of a radio station in opposition to a candidate, then the candidate, or someone designated by him, must be given equal opportunity.

2. If an official of a regularly organized political party, or a person designated by him, is permitted to use a radio station, then the corresponding official of all other regularly organized political parties, or persons designated by them, must be given equal opportunity.

3. During a political campaign no station shall make facilities available for or against any candidate except to a candidate for the same office, or a person designated by him, or by a person designated by the responsible official of a regularly organized political party whose candidates' names appear on the ballot.

4. If any person is permitted the use of a station to speak for or against any public measure to be voted upon as such in an election, the licensee must afford equal opportunities and an equal amount of time in the aggregate for the presentation of each different view on the measure or question.

5. Political broadcasting or the discussion of any question to be voted upon shall not be permitted by a licensee for a period beginning 24 hours prior to election day and continuing throughout that day, in conformance with the rule governing general political advertising in newspapers.

6. Neither the licensee nor the Commission shall have any right to censor in any way any political broadcast, and the licensee is exempted from liability for any libel or slander by any person speaking under the provisions of this section.

The term "equal opportunities" is defined to make clear that it covers not only time and number of stations used but also cost, if any, for such use of facilities.

SECTION 16

This section amends section 326 of the present act which deals with the general subject of censorship. It is designed to make manifest and the subject of specific statutory declaration principles which should have been sufficiently clear from an examination of the present law in its entirety. Subsection (a) specifically states that the Commission is to have no power to regulate the business of the licensee of any radio broadcast station, except where that power is specifically conferred by the act itself. It is designed to prevent the elastic stretching of the words of the statute into tortured constructions that go beyond congressional intent. Subsection (b) provides a more comprehensive prohibition against censorship than is now in the act and also makes clear that the Commission has the authority in any case where application for renewal of a license is made to examine the over-all operation of the licensee to determine whether or not the operation has satisfied the statutory standard.

It should be noted here that this section involves a most troublesome question. It is an axiom of administrative government, such as the quasi-judicial agencies, that some discretion must vest in the good judgment and common sense of the administrators. It is impossible for a statute to spell out every detail. And this is even far more difficult in the case of regulation of noncommon carriers. It is virtually impossible to spell out specifically in a statute just what the public interest, convenience, and necessity means or does not mean. Therefore, regardless of what many well-intentioned and conscientious people may believe, the regulatory agency must be given some degree of authority to determine, case by case, whether there has been operation in the public interest, convenience, and necessity. One of the principal complaints against the Commission has been that it has interpreted the public interest in such manner as to discriminate between licensees. It has compelled licensees to vary, modify, or change program content or methods of doing business by withholding renewals, or by other methods without granting hearings and making specific charges or complaints. The Commission has no such power now; it was not intended to have such power, and this bill would not grant it such power. But as the regulatory agency, the Commission should have and does have the authority to grant or deny renewals of applications based on findings as to whether a licensee has operated in the public interest. So long as the licensee or applicant has a clear, definite, and orderly procedure to seek a final determination on the question in the courts, there can be no criticism of the regulatory function granted by the Congress.

The proposed language of this section does not take away the Commission's authority to make a finding whether or not a licensee has operated in the public interest; it is, in fact, affirmed. But it also makes clear that the Commission does not have the authority to tell a licensee, directly or indirectly, what he can broadcast or cannot broadcast, or how he should run his day-by-day business.

SECTION 17

This section adds two new sections to the Communications Act dealing with the discussion of public questions, sections 330 and 331.

It will be remembered that section 15 of this bill dealt with political broadcasting in a political campaign. Section 330 here proposed sets forth conditions governing broadcasting of public or political questions which do not fall within the purview of the political campaign broadcast section. It is proposed that if a licensee permits the use of his facilities for the discussion of any public question or issue, he must afford equal opportunities for the presentation of different views on the question or issue. "Equal opportunities" is defined as in section 15 so that all will have the same treatment, as to time on the air, the number of stations, cost, if any, and all other pertinent factors. It is obvious that some provision is necessary to meet the sharp criticism regarding lack of fairness and equality on the air that frequently has been expressed in recent years. This proposed language is intended to accomplish that result. It provides, of course, that neither the Commission nor the licensee shall have any authority to censor or alter what is being said, except that material advocating overthrow of the Government by force or violence may be rejected by the licensee and he shall have the right to have a copy of the material to be broadcast in sufficient time to examine its contents.

The other proposed new section, section 331, provides that certain specific identification data be made known to the listening public in all cases of political broadcasts or discussions of public questions coming under sections 315 and 330. These identification data include not only the name of the speaker or speakers and the subject under discussion, but likewise the capacity in which the speaker appears—that is, whether on his own account as an individual, candidate, or public officer, or as the representative, advocate or employee of another; how the time for the broadcast was made available, and if paid for, by whom. However, in the case of a public officer, speaking as such, only the name of the speaker, the office held by whom the power of election or appointment is exercised is required as identifying data.

It must be obvious that the public has the right to know certain pertinent facts regarding a person who is seeking to convince them of particular views on important questions. Too often, advocates of a particular policy or issue have appeared under false colors; sometimes they have been politically beholden to the one for whom they spoke; other times they were employees of those espousing a particular course of conduct. But the listening public never knew the facts. This section is designed to bring these facts out in the open; it does not stop use of radio broadcasting; it merely provides for honest labeling.

SECTION 18

This section also proposes a new section to the act relating to identification of source in news items and discussions of public events over the radio. It provides that in the broadcasting of news items and in any analysis of or comment on current events, the source of the material shall be identified, and that editorial and interpretive comment on news shall be identified as such. It is designed to make clear to the listening public what portion of a so-called news broadcast is, in fact, news and what is its source—i. e., a news agency, the news staff or the radio station, or a special correspondent; and to separate the news from the editorial comment or interpretation or analysis. While there is no requirement in this section that those who broadcast news reports and commentators shall be identified in the detail required in political broadcasts, this section is intended to give the listening public an opportunity to know what is fact and what is the editorial opinion or interpretation by a speaker.

One of the largest radio networks already has undertaken to follow this policy and is worthy of commendation for it. It is common knowledge that in many so-called news broadcasts not even the most discerning of listeners is able to separate fact from opinion. The factual news is so interlarded with comment, personal viewpoint, and intrepretation that the listener is hardly aware when he is hearing fact and when he is hearing opinion. There is no desire to prevent the broadcasting of opinion or comment; many listeners appreciate and even value the particular individual viewpoint of a particular commentator and they would not be deprived of that interpretation. It should be emphasized that the proposed section is not a litimitation on free speech and cannot be so construed or interpreted. It does not limit access to the radio by any speaker, analyst, or commentator; it does not limit or modify in the slightest degree what he may say. It does require honest labeling and identification. It is designed to bring into general operation in the industry a policy which will avoid distortion of the news, to separate fact from fancy, to make news reporting over the radio as factual as possible without at the same time interfering with the right of free speech.

SECTION 19

This section proposes a new section, section 333, to the Communications Act, relating to chain broadcasting and station ownership.

It proposes positive and unequivocal statutory prohibitions against certain contractual relationships between the licensees of broadcast stations and network organizations and on ownership of radio stations. It should be emphasized that such prohibitions, in generally similar terms, are presently in effect, but as rules and regulations of the Commission, and have been conformed to by all licensees. But there is a serious question whether or not the regulatory agency had the statutory authority to make such rules. This section would make clear that the Commission has no power either over the subject of the contractual relationship between stations and networks or over limiting ownership of stations and reaffirms the power and authority of Congress and law.

More specifically, the so-called network regulations promulgated by the Commission would be rendered inoperative and the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of National Broadcasting Co., Inc., et al. v. U. S. et al., decided May 10, 1943, would be made inapplicable to section 303 (i) of the act as proposed to be amended by section 7 of this bill. These limitations on contractual relationships between licensees and network organizations are aimed at preventing the continuance of certain practices, which, in the opinion both of the regulatory agency and most independent radio-station operators, have proved inimical to the individual licensee and to broadcasting generally. They are designed to free the individual licensee from contractual restrictions imposed by networks because of the latter's superior bargaining position. They are not intended to be and should not be construed as a condemnation of networks or of the normal station-network relationship which has been beneficial in many respects. These limitations are phrased in such a manner as to be well understood by the industry and are in substance such that they will lend themselves to speedy and convenient compliance.

Of the several prohibitions, it is believed that only two require some explanation. The first is in paragraph 1 which is designed to prevent a network from requiring a station to carry only the programs of that network.

It would permit any station to carry the programs of any network on time which is not contracted for, and in the case of contractual option provisions, to carry such programs in event the option has not been exercised. The effect is simply to permit a station to sell that portion of its unused option time to a second network, but subject to the initial option. The restrictions contained in paragraph 4 relate only to option time and would not prevent any station from carrying as many network programs as it deems necessary in the service of its listening public. The restrictions would, however, operate as a limitation both upon the time which any one network may option from any one station, and upon the time which any station may option to all networks.

Subsection (b) prohibits the ownership or operation of more than one network by any person or corporation. This prohibition has been in force for several years by Commission rule and regulation and it is merely proposed that Congress and the law shall make this prohibition rather than the Commission through broad interpretation of the statute.

Subsection (c) proposes that 1 year after the enactment of the bill, the Commission shall not permit any person to own or control in the same area more than one broadcast station in any single band nor may any person own stations in any single band which in the aggregate give a primary service to more than 25 percent of the total population of the United States.

It is important to note two sets of facts in connection with the proposed limitations on ownership:

First, the Commission by rule and regulation already has banned the ownership by one person of more than one station serving substantially the same area or the ownership of more than six frequency modulation stations or five television stations. Moreover, it has indicated in a recent hearing that it does not look with favor on the ownership of more than six amplitude modulation stations by one person. While the Commission has apparently issued such rules under its own broad interpretation of public interest, convenience, and necessity, it is proposed by this bill that Congress itself, through the statute, lay down the policy rather than permit so important a policy determination to be made by administrative edict.

Secondly, it should be emphasized that Congress is here dealing with a field which has a natural restriction of its own; the frequency bands are not limitless and will accommodate only a limited number of users. It is obviously poor public policy to permit a field already limited by natural law to be monopolized by a relatively few users. It is axiomatic in a free democratic society that competition not be restricted by statute and that monopoly be avoided. This policy is doubly important in an art so heavily invested with public interest as is radio broadcasting.

It should be pointed out that these proposed limitations on ownership are not burdensome and will work no great hardship on existing licensees who own more than one station. Each licensee would be permitted to own in each field—amplitude modulation, frequency modulation, television, and facsimile—that number of stations which serve up to one-fourth of the 140,000,000 people of the United States. While the right to the "eyes" and "ears" of 25 percent of the total population may be criticized as a step in the direction of monopoly, actually no one licensee will have or can have the exclusive privilege of the "eyes" and "ears" of that number of people in view of the multiplicity of stations in the major population centers of the Nation.

SECTION 20

This section proposes a new section 334 to the act and prohibits the uttering of indecent language or the making of false accusations or charges by means of radio communications The prohibition against indecent language is presently in the law (section 326) but has been shifted to a new section as a matter of clarification. The only new language is the prohibition against false accusations or charges.

SECTION 21

This section adds a new subsection to section 401 of the present act to provide for the issuance of declaratory orders. A recommendation advocating declaratory orders by administrative quasi-judicial agencies was made in the Report of the Attorney General's Committee on Administrative Procedure in Government Agencies in 1941 but the policy has not been adopted by many agencies and specifically not by the Federal Communications Commission. One of the criticisms of governmental procedure, particularly that of the regulatory agencies, is that in order to test the legality, or even the meaning of a regulation or rule, it is necessary to violate it and incur penalties. This results in a particularly difficult situation in the case of radio broadcasting, involving as it does highly technical and specialized rules applicable to engineering and other specialized equipment, and may, in many cases, actually jeopardize the license itself thus putting the licensee out of business. It is proposed, therefore, that the Commission issue declaratory orders in cases of actual controversy arising under any provision of the act, upon petition, and after notice and opportunity for hearing. This would make unnecessary incurring the risk of violating the law in order to secure an authoritative ruling. Such orders would, of course, be subject to judicial review.

SECTION 22

This section deals with the subject of judicial review of the Commission's decisions and orders and amends the present section 402 of the act. While this and the next two sections proposed are somewhat technical because they involve legal procedure, they are among the most important proposals of this bill in attempting to make clear, definite, and orderly the procedure both before the Commission and the courts.

Subsection (a) deals with judicial review of Commission orders by specially constituted three-judge courts. It substantially restates existing law with needed clarifications, except that a provision is inserted that would give parties plaintiff, other than the Government, an option of venue for such suits, either in the appropriate United States district court or in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia.

Subsections (b) through (j) deal with the subject of judicial review of decisions and orders of the Commission entered in the exercise of its radio licensing function. Since the changes in existing law which would be effected by the enactment of these subsections are several and substantial, detailed consideration follows.

Subsection (b) attempts a more precise and comprehensive definition of the jurisdiction of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in cases appealed from the Commission. The language of this subsection, when considered in relation to that of subsection (a), also would make clear that judicial review of all cases involving the exercise of the Commission's radio licensing power is limited to that court. Under present law confusion and controversy has arisen concerning what decisions and orders of the Commission might become the subject of judicial review and in what court. This has been carried to the point where the time and effort of both litigants and courts have been too much taken up with jurisdictional problems rather than the merits of particular cases. This subsection is designed to obviate this difficulty.

Subsection (c) deals with the time for and the manner of taking an appeal from the Commission to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and the duty of the Commission with respect to the filing and certification of the record in the event that such an appeal is taken. The appellate period is made 30 rather than 20 days as at present and provision is made that the appellate period will run from date of entry of the order appealed from rather than its effective date. This subsection also definitely fixes and prescribes the nature and extent of the jurisdiction of the appellate court after a notice of appeal has been filed, and confers upon that court, by specific language rather than by inference, authority to grant temporary relief, which may be either affirmative or negative in its scope and application.

Subsection (d) would continue in effect, substantially, the provisions of section 402 (c) of existing law. It does, however, propose to settle certain ambiguities. The Commission would be compelled to file with the court both the record and its written decision within a period of 30 days after the filing of an appeal. Present provisions of law are susceptible of an interpretation which would require the filing of the Commission's decision 30 days after the filing of the record.

Subsection (e) is a redraft of section 402 (d) of existing law with minor clarifying amendments.

Subsection (f) specifically confers upon the appellate court the right to fix by rule the material to be included in any record upon which an appeal is to be heard and determined. While this is now the practice of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, questions have arisen concerning that court's power to take such action due to the peculiar language of the statute. This appears to be a matter which obviously should be clarified.

Subsection (g) restates existing law found in section 402 (e) of the act insofar as that section deals with the duty and functions of the appellate court in arriving at its decision. It should be observed that the jurisdiction of the appellate court is limited to questions of law and that findings of fact by the Commission, if supported by substantial evidence, are conclusive, unless it appears that such findings are arbitrary or capricious.

Subsection (h) contains provisions which are intended to confer upon the appellate court a measure of control commensurate with the dignity and responsibility of that tribunal, requiring the Commission to give effect to the judgment of the court in the absence of proceedings to review.

Subsection (i) carries forward without change provisions of section 402 (f) of existing law relating to the assessment of costs on appeal.

Subsection (j) provides that in a limited class of cases appeals may be taken directly and as a matter of right to the United States Supreme Court. Under present law review by the Supreme Court of decisions of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia is limited to certiorari proceedings and to certification by the court of appeals. Experience has clearly demonstrated that it is extremely difficult for private litigants to secure an ultimate Supreme Court review of Commission action by the certiorari method. Since 1927 only one such petition has been granted upon request of a private litigant, whereas only one such petition has been denied when filed by the Government. The result has been that many cases involving Commission action on applications for renewal and modification of license have during this period of 20 years been reviewed by the Supreme Court upon request of the Government and only one has received such consideration upon petition of a private litigant. Since either revocation or renewal proceedings may result in absolute or final loss of license, it is believed that adequate opportunity should be given the parties affected in such cases to litigate their claims; and that in this limited class of cases opportunity should extend to and include review by the highest judicial tribunal. Such appeals, as a matter of right, are given in practically all cases involving decisions and orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission and are given under section 402 (a) of the Communications Act in cases which involve the exercise by the Commission of its legislative, as distinguished from its judicial, powers.

SECTION 23

This section amends section 405 of the present act to conform rehearing procedure before the Commission to the changes in the administrative organization of the Commission proposed in section 5 of this bill. It also would make more definite and certain the rights and remedies of interested parties in this, the final stage in the administrative process.

Provision is made for delaying the effective date of any decision, order, or requirement made in any case which is the subject of petition for rehearing until after final decision upon such petition. This section also is designed to eliminate doubt now prevalent concerning when a petition for rehearing must be filed before judicial review of the Commission's order can be had. Under the provisions proposed here, the petition for rehearing will not be a condition precedent to judicial review except where the party seeking such review was not a party to the proceedings before the Commission resulting in such order or where the party seeking such review relies upon questions of law or fact upon which the Commission has been afforded no opportunity to pass. It should be emphasized here that the principal justification for the establishment and maintenance of administrative agencies is to afford parties in interest an opportunity to present their claims and have them originally determined in an orderly fashion without recourse to the courts, when possible. Under the provisions of existing law these salutary principles have not always been followed by the Commission. The situation requires correction, and it is believed that this section will accomplish that result.

SECTION 24

This section proposes an amendment to section 409 (a) of the present law dealing generally with hearings before the Commission. It is designed to make definite and certain the procedure to be employed by the Commission in all cases where a public hearing is required by the act or other applicable provisions of law.

It would appear clear that in any adversary proceeding where a public hearing is required, an opportunity should be afforded all parties in interest to appear before and present evidence to the persons charged with the responsibility of making an initial determination. Such action not only is necessary to proper administration but to confidence in the agency itself. Under present Commission practice such an opportunity may or may not be given. It also must appear clear that before any final decision is rendered, all parties whose rights are to be affected should be given an opportunity to present their views concerning the points at issue to the authority charged with the final or ultimate decision. Again, under present practice by the Commission, such an opportunity may or may not be afforded.

Thus, the procedure employed by the Commission has led to a great deal of controversy and there has been a decided lack of uniformity both in the handling of such matters and the character of reports submitted by the hearing officer. The language here proposed would require not only the submission of a uniform type of report setting out in detail and with particularity all basic or evidentiary facts developed as a result of the evidence taken but also conclusions of fact and law upon each issue submitted for hearing. It also would make mandatory the hearing of oral argument by the Commission or the Division having jurisdiction of any case upon request of any party before the entry of a final order. The Commission or Division also would be required to accompany any final order with a full statement in writing of all the relevant facts as well as conclusions of law upon those facts. The adoption of this section would give statutory recognition to a procedure whereby the parties in interest in adversary proceedings before the Commission may secure a full and fair hearing as that term has been defined by the Supreme Court in the Morgan cases. That is the minimum which parties having business before the Commission have the right to expect.

In this section, an attempt has again been made to conform to the recommendations of the Report of the Attorney General's Committee on Administrative Procedure. The proposed new language is wholly consistent with those recommendations and the legislation that has resulted from them.

SECTION 25

This section proposes a new section to title IV of the act, section 418, dealing with discrimination. It would prohibit the Commission from taking any action which may result in discrimination between persons based upon race, or religious or political affiliation, or kind of occupation, or business association. Among other things this section would prevent the Commission from adopting any rule, regulation, or policy which, for example, denies radio broadcast licenses to newspapers. It also would prevent the Commission from holding certain applications, or classes of applications, in an inactive status and, in general, prevent the denial, in whole or in part, of any right, privilege, benefit, or license where adequate right or entitlement is shown.

RENT CONTROL—AMENDMENTS

Mr. CORDON submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1017) providing for the temporary continuation of rent control, transferring rent control to the Housing Expediter, providing for creation of local advisory boards on rent control, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

SCHOOL BUILDING IN MOCLIPS, GRAYS HARBOR COUNTY, WASH.—CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, on May 20, 1947, the bill (S. 1318) to provide funds for cooperation with the school board of the Moclips-Aloha district for the construction and equipment of a new school building in the town of Moclips, Grays Harbor County, Wash., to be available to both Indian and non-Indian children, was introduced by the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN] and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. At the request of the author of the bill, and because it deals with Indian affairs, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 3348) to declare the policy of the United States with respect to the allocation of costs of construction of the Coachella division of the All-American Canal irrigation project, California, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on today, May 23, 1947, he presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 854) to amend section 502 (a) of the act entitled "An act to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes."

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

MEETING OF INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE SUBCOMMITTEE

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Subcommittee having before it Senate bill 249 be permitted to sit this afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, consent is granted.

CONTINUATION OF CERTAIN WAR POWERS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 266)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(For President's message see today's proceedings of the House of Representatives on pp. 5734–5735.)

MRS. ROSCOE C. O'BYRNE, PRESIDENT GENERAL, DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, this is a happy day for the Hoosier State.

That great organization—the Daughters of the American Revolution—has chosen an Indiana woman for its president general.

I want to take a moment to tell the Senate that Indiana is proud of Mrs. Roscoe C. O'Byrne, of Brookville, Ind., the new leader of the DAR.

Mrs. O'Byrne, Indiana's first president general of the DAR since 1902, is a very gracious and capable lady. She won her national mark in the organization while serving recently as the national registrar general.

I am happy to have this opportunity to pay due tribute to a woman of whom all of Indiana is justly proud.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR O'CONOR ON JURY SERVICE IN UNITED STATES COURTS

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, I request unanimous consent to insert in the body of the RECORD a statement I have issued relating to certain pending proposals affecting the rendition of jury service in the courts of the United States.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR O'CONOR REGARDING S. 17, S. 18, AND S. 19

Because of their far-reaching importance I suggest that Members of this Congress should give studied attention to several bills relating to jury service in the Federal courts. The bills now pending before the Judiciary Committee (S. 17, 18, and 19) are designed to strengthen greatly one of the fundamental bulwarks of our democracy.

They are the products of intensive and highly skilled study by distinguished members of the Federal judiciary and are sponsored by the Chief Justice and the senior circuit judges of the United States. They have the support of the Attorney General and many of the trial judges on the Federal district courts whose daily work it is to administer the jury system. In addition, the measures have been carefully examined and approved by many of the Nation's leading lawyers and bar associations. It is not often that we find such unanimity of informed opinion in support of change in the laws dealing with so fundamental a subject, and for this reason, if for no other, the bills should receive the careful consideration of every Senator.

Together they constitute part of an overall effort on the part of the judiciary to improve the administration of justice at the point where it most directly touches not only those who are members of the legal profession, but also, and most important, the lives of the average citizen. For the quality of Federal justice, and consequently the welfare of all litigants, depends to a very large degree upon the jurors who are called to decide the issues presented by the cases that are the routine business of the courts. It is axiomatic that many citizens whose only contact with the courts arises from their call for jury duty will, from that experience, form basic opinions regarding the efficiency of the judicial process. It is, therefore, incumbent upon judges and legislators to see to it that the system of jury selection is the best that we are able to devise.

The framework which these bills propose is a long stride toward this goal. The committee of district judges which formulated them after 2 years of study has stated its objective in an extensive report as follows: "Jurors to serve in the district courts of the United States should be drawn from every economic and social group of the community without regard to race, color, or politics, and those chosen to serve as jurors should possess as high a degree of intelligence, morality, integrity, and common sense as can be found by the persons charged with the duty of making the selection." Following this indisputable objective, the committee of judges presented a number of definite and highly constructive recommendations for action to improve the present system. Among them are the three highly important measures which are now under consideration and which cannot be made effective without congressional action.

The primary proposal, Senate 18, establishes for the Federal courts, uniform qualifications for jurors called to serve in those courts. It thus frees the Federal courts of the present requirement that in selecting jurors they must follow the qualifications prescribed by the laws of the State where the Federal district court sits. The proposed change would make all adult citizens eligible for both grand and petit jury service except those who have been convicted of a felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, or who lack knowledge of the English language or who have disqualifying physical or mental infirmities. It exempts from service members of the armed forces on active duty, and it permits those who have served as jurors within a year, or who are public officers of the United States or of the States to claim exemption.

Under its broad provisions, women are eligible for jury duty to the same extent as men. There will thus be made available for this important civil duty, great sections of the community, many of them excellent and willing citizens, who heretofore have been excluded from juries by the exemptions and disqualifications that still exist in many of the States. The committee of judges found at least 68 general classes of exemption of this sort, covering so wide a range of business, professional, and trade groups that they inevitably prevent the calling of a jury that is truly representative of the community, and they often limit jury duty to those who are least qualified to serve. Discretion would be vested in the judge to excuse from jury service those whose service would cause undue hardship.

Senate 17, dealing with the jury commission, is designed to supplement and effectuate the qualifications stated in S. 18. It makes definite an agency of judicial administration that has been for many years in an uncertain and ill-defined condition in the Federal statutes. Fundamentally, it places the ultimate responsibility for the direction of jury selection squarely upon the presiding district judge, who, because of his intense interest in the efficient and just decision of cases, is by all standards best qualified to supervise it.

Under the court's direction, a jury commission, consisting of the clerk and one other commissioner appointed by the court, are to choose from the eligible citizenry, "without reference to party affiliation" those qualified persons "who in their opinion are intelligent, honest, fair minded, of good reputation and capable of rendering satisfactory service," and to keep suitable records regarding them. At least 300 of the names thus selected will be put in a wheel or box for drawing by lot each time a panel of jurors is needed. The bill provides that in selecting names, the jury commission may require the persons under consideration to answer a questionnaire, or to respond to a personal interview to determine whether or not they are qualified.

These procedures have been found to be extremely valuable in preventing the unnecessary calling of persons who are not eligible or who will, in any event, be excused because of the necessities of their occupation, their financial condition, or in the public interest. One of the features of the bill is the provision which it makes for the appointment in metropolitan districts, where the court and the judicial conference thinks it essential, of salaried jury commissioners who will devote full time to their exacting duties. In the ordinary rural district, where the court business is not so heavy, the bill contemplates part-time commissioners who are to be paid a moderate per diem for the days upon which they work.

Senate 19 relates to the compensation of jurors. It continues the present meager $4 per day fee for jury service, but, in addition, it permits payment of not over $2 per day for actual travel and subsistence expense. At the present time most Federal courts pay round-trip travel expenses to jurors who reside outside of the locality where the court sits, but this is limited to only one trip a week, and for jurors who remain overnight at the place of holding court, there is no provision to pay the expense of subsistence or lodging except the $4 which they receive as compensation for their jury duty. This results in real financial hardship, particularly in these days of high food and hotel prices. Under the bill, expenses for daily travel home or, where that is impracticable, an allowance for subsistence, not to exceed in any case $2 a day will be provided to alleviate the hardship.

The new law would also permit a judge to allow jurors compensation up to $10 a day if they are required to serve at a single trial which lasts over 30 days. Such long trials now result in severe financial loss to many jurors, and the amount allowed is small recompense for the loss of income or even employment which sometimes follows.

In these times of troubled international and domestic conditions, we often overlook those of our institutions which are best adapted to insure justice, peace, and tranquillity at home, and respect for our way of life from abroad. A great danger lies in the passive assumption that all is well with our courts. The judiciary, acting under the authority of the Congress, has shown itself to be alert to this danger.

These three proposals to reform the jury system will establish standards of jury administration which, under the wise guidance of carefully selected judges, will insure to our citizens their right to have their cases tried by a fair, impartial, and intelligent jury of their peers. As such, the measures will improve the Federal courts, and at the time serve as examples which the States and other nations may well follow. In this they are similar to the highly successful Federal Rules of Civil and Criminal Procedure, recently made effective under the authority of the Congress by the United States Supreme Court. It is our plain duty to strengthen the judicial structure by promptly enacting these bills into law.

Our citizens are justly proud of the high standards being maintained in our Federal judicial system. This highly desirable situation is due, in no small measure, to the efficiency, integrity, and zeal of our Federal judges and other court officials.

It is our duty to afford this branch of our Government every facility to bring about continued satisfactory operation of this important work.

It is for this reason that I favor the passage of the three proposals which have been referred to in this statement.

THE VOICE OF AMERICA—EDITORIAL FROM THE WASHINGTON TIMES-HERALD

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an editorial entitled "'Voice' of What?" published in the Washington Times-Herald of May 22, 1947. I ask Senators to examine it. I think they will find many things in the editorial that are very interesting.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"VOICE" OF WHAT?

"Conducted by a group of pro-Communist fellow travelers and muddleheads, they fill the ether with tons of material favorable to the Soviet Union and the Communists, or just plain twaddle."

The quotation is from a recent speech in the House by Representative FRED E. BUSBEY, Republican, of Illinois, about the Voice of America.

This alleged American voice is the State Department's radio set-up, under Assistant Secretary of State William Benton, for the broadcasting of United States promotion stuff to other countries, including Russia.

When the State Department asked recently for thirty-one-million-and-some-odd dollars to keep the voice prattling for another year, the House cut the request by exact' 100 percent.

Representative KARL E. MUNDT, Republican, of South Dakota, is now backing a bill to let the voice go on talking, but on a reduced budget and under a management from which the FBI would have carefully sifted out all Communists, fellow travelers, and other subversives.

When you consider that these broadcasts reach few if any people in gagged and earplugged Soviet Russia, the whole project seems pretty futile, even though Generals Eisenhower and Marshall and various other prominent persons think it is a fine thing.

If we must have the voice, though, it certainly should be Edgar Bergen'd by Americans whose loyalty is unquestionable. That has not been happening under the Benton management to date.

Benton's three top assistants in charge of the Voice of America broadcasts have been Messrs. William T Stone, Haldore E. Hanson and Charles A. Thomson.

Stone is an ex-member of the editorial board of Amer-Asia magazine, which has printed large amounts of pro-Russian copy. Hanson was for long a soldier of fortune in China, where his best friends and confidants were Chinese Communists. He was shifted hurriedly to another State Department niche when the congressional heat was turned on the "Voice." Thomson has had considerable to do with production of pro-Communist movies, and is on record with some loud praises of the Communists' activities in the Spanish civil war.

Many of Benton's lesser helpers were inherited from Archibald MacLeish's and Elmer Davis' old Office of War Information, which was notorious for its high percentage of Red and fellow-traveler employees.

Benton says he was unfamiliar with most of the "Voice" program contents. The answer to that is, we'd say, Then what are the taxpayers paying Benton his $10,000 a year for? To sit around and look pretty?

We'd suggest urgently that if Congress keeps the Voice of America alive at all, it at least insist on a personnel clean-up from top to bottom; and if it wants to start with Benton himself we don't expect to object.

THE CONVICTION OF CARL ALDO MARZANI

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, on yesterday I read with much interest the newspaper account of the trial of a man by the name of Carl Aldo Marzani, former employee of the Office of Strategic Services and State Department, who yesterday was convicted by the District Court on all 11 counts of an indictment which charged that he had falsified about his Communist connections to get on the Federal pay roll.

The case was tried before Judge Keech and a jury, and the newspaper article said that the jury was composed of white and colored members.

Mr. President, I want to take off my hat to this court and jury. The result shows the great value of the age-old system of trial by jury. According to the newspaper accounts—and I followed them very closely; I hardly know why—the evidence was ample to sustain a conviction, and the jury did its entire duty. The fact that a part of the jury were colored pays high tribute to the jury trial system, and I wish to commend each and every member of the jury for his or her upstanding Americanism as shown by verdict. We have too many Communists in high position now in this country, and we ought to get rid of them in all our Government departments. Again I wish to commend the outstanding Americanism and honesty and uprightness of this Washington jury, composed of both white and colored members.

Mr. President, I do not wish to be understood in the slightest degree as endeavoring to interfere with the orderly course of the administration of justice in any step which may have been taken in this case, but I simply want to express my approval of what was done by this very patriotic and splendid judge, and by the jury composed of two of the great segments of our people.

AMERICAN LIBERALISM FACES THE FUTURE—ADDRESS BY SENATOR MURRAY

[Mr. MURRAY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address entitled "American Liberalism Faces the Future," delivered by him at the annual dinner of the Liberal Party of New York State in Brooklyn, N. Y., May 21, 1947, which appears in the Appendix.]

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MYERS ON INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

[Mr. MYERS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement made by him before a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, regarding House bill 3123, making appropriations for the Interior Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, which appears in the Appendix.]

PENDING LABOR LEGISLATION—ADDRESS BY SENATOR WILEY

[Mr. WILEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address on "A Pro-American Labor Law," to be delivered by him over ABC national network, May 23, 1947, at 4 p. m., which appears in the Appendix.]

STATEMENT OF LIBERALISM

[Mr. MURRAY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement setting forth a standard of political conduct for those who believe in liberalism or progressivism, which appears in the Appendix.]

UPSTREAM ASPECTS OF THE MISSOURI BASIN—STATEMENT BY JOHN W. SPENCER

[Mr. MURRAY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement entitled "Upstream Aspects of the Missouri Basin," by John W. Spencer, regional forester, United States Forest Service, Denver, Colo., before the Missouri Basin Inter-Agency Committee at Cheyenne, Wyo., January 16, 1947, which appears in the Appendix.]

A REPUBLICAN CONGRESS SHOULD TAKE ACTION ON THE PRESIDENT'S ECONOMIC REPORT

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I rise today for the purpose of discussing what I consider to be one of the most important documents of the postwar period, a document which represents the first effort of our Government since the end of the war to come to grips with the problem of preventing a future depression, a document which has been widely discussed throughout the country, a document which, so far as the Congress is concerned, is filed, forgotten, and forlorn. I believe the document bears a very close relationship to the legislation now pending before the Senate, because it seems to me that an intelligent solution of our economic problems which threaten a future depression must be considered by the Congress before it takes final action on any tax measure.

I refer, of course to the economic report of the President transmitted to the Congress on January 8, 1947, in accordance with section 3 (a) of the Employment Act of 1946.

The big question before the world today, Mr. President, is whether World War II is to be followed by another period of boom and bust—a period that will lead once again to world-wide depression, bitter economic conflicts among nations, and perhaps to war itself. After the last war, instead of contributing to the development of a healthy world economy, America became a sore spot which infected every other country. Immediately after the war we had a wild inflation, then a brief depression. Then followed the seven fat years of the great American boom—a boom which culminated in the greatest economic collapse in our history.

Today the whole world is looking anxiously toward America—anxiously and, I am ashamed to admit it, somewhat skeptically. All the countries of the world know that another depression in America will sweep like wild fire around the globe and put an end to all our dreams of fruitful cooperation among nations. All the other countries in the world are afraid that we have not learned our lesson, that we have failed to read the history of the past and that sooner or later the American economy will collapse.

It was to avoid this danger that the Congress of the United States in February of last year enacted the Employment Act of 1946. The purpose of this act was to establish machinery whereby the President and the Congress could work together in developing an effective and prudent program for maintaining useful employment opportunities for those able, willing, and seeking to work, and for promoting maximum employment, production, and purchasing power.

This act, Mr. President, was passed after intensive hearings and considerable debate in both Houses of Congress. It represented a synthesis of many opposing views and as such was not regarded as a perfect document either by those who had originally sponsored the measure or by those who had opposed it in its original form.

But all of those Members of Congress, Mr. President, who were connected with the legislative activities on this measure were convinced that the administration of the act was far more important than the wording of any section or clause.

The act provided that at the beginning of each regular session the President should transmit to the Congress a new type of document entitled the "Economic Report." While the act attempted to set forth in considerable detail the scope and content of this Economic Report, the question in the minds of those who voted for the act were: "How well will the President live up to this mandate? How effective an economic report will he really transmit to the Congress?"

The act set up a new agency of government—a Council of Economic Advisers. This Council, composed of three qualified economists was to assist and advise the President in the preparation of the Economic Report. The questions in our minds, Mr. President, were, Will the President appoint competent men to this Council? Will the Council operate as an effective advisory board or will it be merely another bureaucratic appendage of the Federal Government?

We have now had before us for more than 4 months the Economic Report of the President. This report was prepared according to President Truman's letter of transmittal, with the advice and assistance of the Council of Economic Advisers, members of the Cabinet, and heads of independent agencies. Through it, in accordance with the act, the President has undertaken a comprehensive review of the economic health of our country. In it, he has submitted an over-all economic program for the Federal Government.

This report, Mr. President, provides a basis for appraising the extent to which President Truman has or has not been successful in carrying out the declaration of policy set forth by Congress in the Employment Act of 1946. It provides a basis for judging the performance of the Council of Economic Advisers.

But it represents much more than a basis upon which the President may be judged. It represents a challenge to the Congress. In particular, it constitutes a challenge to the leaders of the Republican Party.

In submitting this Economic Report to the Congress the President has shown where he stands. The question now before the people is, "Where does the Republican Party stand?"

Mr. President, this challenge must be met squarely. It cannot be dodged. It must be met by our telling the American people exactly where we stand and why we stand where we stand.

Where the proposals of the President are sound, we must back him up to the hilt. Where we believe the President's proposals are wrong, we must openly oppose him. And in both situations we must state the reasons for our position so that the members of our party throughout the country will understand the why and wherefore of our actions.

The Economic Report is also a challenge to each Member of the Congress regardless of the party to which he belongs. The subjects with which the Economic Report deals are the livelihood, the happiness, the bread, and the butter of the people who elected each of us to his position in the Congress. It would be bad faith, indeed, to the people of my State if I, as a Senator from Oregon, failed to give adequate attention to a Presidential message to the Congress which deals so directly with matters affecting the lives and livelihood of every inhabitant of my State.

As one of the Republican sponsors of the Full Employment Act, I speak with an additional sense of responsibility. I offered and spoke for the first amendments to the original bill, which amendments, Mr. President, were adopted and made a part of the bill; and I, therefore, along with certain other Republican Senators whose names I shall mention in a moment, became a cosponsor of the full-employment bill. If it had not been for the active participation of the Republican sponsors of this measure—who include the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], as well as myself—this legislation could never have been passed.

Accordingly, I have been extremely interested in the Economic Report and since January 8, the day it was transmitted to Congress, have been carefully studying and evaluating it. I have done so, even though I am not a member of the Economic Report Committee. I think the record is perfectly clear as to why I am not a member of that committee, although I think it should be stated that in accordance with custom and tradition one of the cosponsors of the bill from the Republican side of the aisle should have been appointed a member of the Economic Report Committee. We were entitled to that from the Republican leadership in the Senate so that our point of view could have been manifested at all times on the committee. I am sure that had any one of us been appointed as a member of the committee, he would have been as insistent as I am in this speech that action should be taken on the report by the Congress. We would not have permitted the record of inaction which has thus far been made on the report. But, Mr. President, party discipline is a very interesting thing sometimes, and it takes on a variety of forms. However, I think I shall succeed in demonstrating to the Republican leadership in the Senate that a Member of the Senate—at least on the floor of the Senate—cannot be disciplined if he refuses to be disciplined. They can deny some of us our committee appointment rights, but they cannot stop us from fighting for the right on the floor of the Senate. They cannot stop us from pointing out the failure of the Republicans to meet the challenge of this report.

I have now reached certain tentative conclusions concerning its virtues and its defects. I say tentative conclusions because the subjects dealt with in the Economic Report are so vast and complex that final conclusions upon its contents can really be reached only after the report has been more fully discussed and debated in the Congress. The only final conclusion I have reached is that the report deserves full discussion and debate by the Congress. It is for this reason then, Mr. President, that I shall now proceed to discuss in some detail what I conceive to be the virtues and defects of the Economic Report of the President.

The Economic Report is relatively a short document, only 32 pages long, with an excellent statistical appendix of another 22 pages.

The first part of the report presents an analysis of the economy. The second part presents the President's short-range economic program. The third and final part presents the President's long-range program. Let us examine each of these parts of the report in order.

SUMMARY OF REPORT'S ANALYSIS OF THE ECONOMY

The report's analysis of economic trends leads off with a review of employment, production, and purchasing power in 1946. During 1946, it is pointed out, civilian employment approached fifty-eight million, the highest civilian employment this Nation has ever known—a level substantially in accord with the objectives stated by the Congress in the Employment Act. In 1946, production also mounted to new peacetime levels. Nevertheless, production did not reach its peak in relation to productive capacity because of shortages of materials, bottlenecks, and other reconversion difficulties. With respect to purchasing power, the report points out that the situation was not quite so satisfactory. Although cash and credit were available to purchasers in large amounts, the rise in prices which occurred the last 6 months of 1946 greatly reduced purchasing power of the large majority of our people.

The report then discusses prices, wages, and profits in 1946. It charts the extremely rapid increase in prices subsequent to the relaxation of price controls in the late fall. It shows that between July 1945 and July 1946 the wage increases which occurred as a result of the first postwar round of wage increases were nearly half offset by reductions in overtime, declines in piecework earnings, and the shift of workers from higher-paid wartime to lower-paid peacetime jobs. Since 1946, the report points out, price increases have outstripped increases in wage rates and real earnings have fallen. With respect to profits, the report makes it perfectly clear that the profit picture has been extremely uneven as between industries. It issues a warning which I think we can well heed, because there is a great deal of loose talk in America today about profits. It cautions those who would infer that all industries or all firms in a given industry were operating at a highly profitable level in 1946 or that none were incurring losses. The facts do not bear out such a conclusion. Despite these qualifications, however, the report shows that profits increased steadily throughout the year and that in general business received exceptional profits in 1946.

There then follows a discussion of what is called the Nation's economic budget as distinguished from the Federal Government's budget. The Nation's economic budget shows the expenditures and receipts not only of the Federal Government, but also of State and local governments, of business, and consumers, and indicates the place in the economy of international transactions. In this manner, one is able to get an over-all view of the economy.

A number of basic points evolve from this presentation. First of all, Government expenditures were significantly reduced during 1946. This meant that higher private expenditures were needed to sustain a high enough level of national income. Second, business expenditures increased, although a part of the increase reflected higher prices rather than increased production. Third, consumer expenditures rose, but practically all of the increase was attributable to the price rise. Consumer incomes rose less than expenditures and actually declined in real terms.

The report next discusses employment, production, and purchasing power objectives for 1947. This portion of the analysis conforms with the requirement of the Employment Act in section 3 (a) that the President's economic report set forth the levels of employment, production, and purchasing power needed to carry out the stated objectives of the act.

The 1947 goal for employment according to the report should be to sustain employment at about the 1946 levels or slightly higher.

The 1947 goal for production should be perhaps an over-all increase of 5 percent beyond the 1946 level.

With respect to purchasing power no goal is set in dollar figures. The point is made, however, that if the employment and production goals are to be efficient, real purchasing power must rise sufficiently to take the increased production off the market.

The report then discusses favorable and unfavorable factors in 1947—as they relate to consumer demand, business investments, international transactions, and Government budgets.

With respect to consumer demand, the favorable factors are the consumer demand for many goods that have been scarce during the war years and the existence of higher levels of incomes than existed in prewar years. The unfavorable factors are the decline in real incomes resulting from higher prices and the rapid dwindling of consumer savings and a dangerous expansion of installment and credit buying.

It is interesting to note that preceding the "bust" of 1929 one of the phenomena present in our economic system of that time was the great increase in installment and credit buying.

With respect to business demand, the favorable factors are the availability of abundant capital funds, ample bank credit, a highly rewarding profit level during 1946 and a huge backlog demand for construction. The unfavorable factors are the fear of a drop in general consumer demand, the uncertainty with respect to management-labor disputes, the high cost of construction, and certain shortages in basic materials.

With respect to international transactions, the favorable factors are the vast backlog of reconstruction demand and the existence of large dollar resources on the part of many countries. The unfavorable factors are derived from our current high prices, which could make some countries reluctant to buy from us, and the fears of other countries concerning our willingness and ability to increase our imports and extend our foreign loans.

With respect to Government budgets, the report presents an extremely interesting table which does not appear in the budget message. This table entitled "Federal Cash Payments to the Public" breaks down estimated Government expenditures for the calendar years of 1946 and 1947 according to the type of recipients and character of the payments.

The President estimates that the total decline in Federal expenditures from the calendar year of 1946 to the calendar year of 1947 will be a little less than $6,000,000,000.

The opposite trend is found in State and local expenditures which have steadily increased since VJ-day.

Finally, the report summarizes present economic conditions and trends.

On the plus side of the economic ledger are listed:

First. A fabulous wealth of resources.

Second. Large and efficient industrial plants.

Third. Ample funds for business expansion, together with high profit incentives in most lines.

Fourth. A large and skilled labor force.

Fifth. Higher consumer spending than power before the war.

Sixth. A backlog of unsatisfied domestic and foreign demand.

Seventh. The high standards of living to which our people have become accustomed.

The most important unfavorable factor in the economic situation is the marked decline in real purchasing power of great numbers of consumers. Let me, at this point, quote directly from the report:

Maximum production and employment this year would allow a substantial increase in the available supply of consumer goods and services, especially in the area of durable goods. This requires higher real purchasing power to take the goods off the market.

If price and wage adjustments are not made—and made soon enough—there is a danger that consumer buying will falter. Orders to manufacturers will decline, production will drop and unemployment will grow—unless consumers resort to large additional borrowing and use of past savings to buy the increased supply of goods. These temporary expedients are limited in power and even if available would only postpone the day of reckoning.

Second, the report indicates a danger of a weakening in investment resulting from the high prices of residential construction and the possibility of a slackening in industrial and commercial construction.

The third unfavorable factor is the uncertainty with respect to labor-management strife, a subject which was discussed more fully in the President's State of the Union message.

In summing up the analysis of the economic trends the report ends on the following note:

During this year the underlying favorable factors are strong enough to maintain high prosperity. But this year brings us face to face with naladjustments and unfavorable possibilities which, if not corrected or prevented, could cause a recession in production and employment. The Government will watch this situation and be prepared for action if needed.

APPRAISAL OF THE REPORT'S ANALYSIS OF THE ECONOMY

The analysis of economic trends which I have just summarized has both virtues and defects.

On the credit side I list the fact that the Economic Report does not indulge in any puerile attempts to predict the future. The report is written with a discriminating awareness of the fact that in a free enterprise, private property economy there are so many variable factors that it is impossible to make accurate forecasts on the future course of economic events. One need only recall the fact that two years ago Administration officials were openly predicting 6 to 8 million people unemployed in 1946 to realize that the type of analysis provided in the Economic Report represents a significant forward step.

The second virtue is the clear and forthright maner in which the Economic Report puts its finger upon diminishing consumer purchasing power as the single greatest threat to economic stability. During the 1920's there was the failure of purchasing power to keep pace with our productive capacity which finally resulted in the devastating depression that began in 1929. In the 1920's, however, there were none in high places who pointed out this dangerous trend. It is heartening to realize today that we have advanced to the point where this underlying problem can be fully set forth in a major Presidential document.

I must say at this point, however, that the case would have been made much stronger if the President in his Economic Report had discussed this question of consumer purchasing power in the even more meaningful terms that were used by Gov. Harold Stassen in his recent testimony before the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee. While the Economic Report of the President has not a word to say in comparison between present trends and the development in the 1920's, Governor Stassen aptly linked up today's problems with the sad lesson of the 1920's. Let me quote from his statement:

EXCERPT FROM TESTIMONY OF HAROLD E. STASSEN BEFORE SENATE COMMITTEE ON LABOR AND PUBLIC WELFARE, FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 1947

I think it is important that we remember the experience of 1920 to 1929. In 1920 the average wages in 25 leading industries in this country which were sampled, were 61 cents an hour. In 1921 and 1922 those wages were driven down to 49 cents an hour, a drop of 12 cents. Then we went through the boom up to 1929, and they still only got up to an average of 59 cents an hour. That lagging behind of wages of workers was accompanied by the knocking down of union membership from 5,000,000 to 3,400,000 of membership. So that you had profits rising rapidly in industry, total production going up to new highs, but wages held down below the 1920 level (p. 572).

Another factor is the careful emphasis which the report gives to the wage, price, and profit decisions made in the private economy. The report clearly indicates that the responsibility for determining the levels of prices and wages is no longer in the hands of the Government and that the decisions now rest with business and labor. At the same time the report very properly avoids the kind of analysis which leads to Government spending as the final answer to our economic problems.

Furthermore, the President and the council of economic advisers are to be congratulated for the excellent handling of their statistical tools. The Nation's economic budget provides an admirable instrument for appraising the over-all character of our economy and the relation to our economy of the Government's financial operations. The statistical appendices which explain the Nation's economical budget in detail and which provides an available source book of information on income, prices, earnings, profits, and employment, are also to be commended.

But the report's analysis of the economy has certain defects.

First of all, there are many unforgivable gaps in the analysis of economic trends. There is no statistical treatment whatsoever, anywhere in the report, of the most dangerous trend in our era—the trend toward monopolistic practices and the concentration of economic power. Furthermore, I fail to find in the report any discussion of economic trends in the major segments of industry and agriculture. What are the trends in the development of the light metal industries? What is the outlook for steel development on the west coast? What is the outlook for the lumber industry? What is the position of power development in the emerging postwar economy? What does the future hold for the wheat farmers of America?

I did not expect a detailed exposition on each of these points, but I did expect to see in the economic report of the President a broad economic picture which would relate these questions to the growth of our country and the needs of our people. Yet there is not one word in the entire report which throws light on these matters.

Moreover, I had expected that the economic report would provide a meaningful picture of what the productive capacity of this country really is—both in terms of our present capacity and in terms of our potential capacity. This expectation was founded in the fact that the Employment Act of 1946 places such great emphasis on both the concepts of maximum production. Yet nowhere in the report have I been able to find any light on the question of what maximum production in a peacetime America could really be.

Furthermore, there is insufficient attention in the report to the defining of economic goals. True, rough goals are established for employment, production, and purchasing power; but there is no effort to define the needed levels of business investment, the needed levels of exports, and the needed levels of imports. There is no attempt to define the balance which we must achieve between agriculture and industry. Finally, the report ignores the glaring deficiencies in our present statistics, and fails to point out the fact that better Government statistics are needed if we are to have the instruments at hand with which to achieve a more fruitful analysis of our economy.

SUMMARY OF REPORT'S SHORT-RANGE PROGRAM

The short-range program presented by the President in his Economic Report deals with subjects that have long-range significance, but which, according to the President, merit immediate attention from the Congress and from the people as a whole because of their influence upon economic conditions in 1947.

The first point in the short-range program consists of recommendations to businessmen to reduce prices and to labor to refrain from demands for excessive wage increases that will require price increases or prevent price reductions.

The second point is the recommendation that the Congress take steps at once to extend rent control beyond next June.

The third recommendation is for an extension in the coverage of the Fair Labor Standards Act and a raising of the minimum wage.

The fourth recommendation is for the Congress to take immediate steps to revise benefit payments under the social-security system in order to alleviate real hardship which has been aggravated by increases in the cost of living.

The fifth recommendation is for the passage by Congress at the earliest possible moment of the nonpartisan housing legislation which passed the Senate in the Seventy-ninth Congress.

The sixth recommendation deals with taxes. The report points out that the present moment, when employment and incomes are high, is the time for a surplus in Government revenues over expenditures, and that it would be unsound fiscal policy to reduce taxes at this time. An appropriate point is made: That when the reductions come, they should be handled in a manner that will contribute to the maintenance of purchasing power by reducing the burden on the mass of consumers.

As I interpret that section of the report, I think it is clear that the recommendation is that the tax reductions, when they come, should be to the benefit of the people of small incomes in America, rather than to the greater benefit of people of large incomes. I think that is a sound tax principle to apply in these days when we are still faced with the problem of adjusting from a wartime economy to a peacetime economy, and when so much of our national income still flows directly from the economic dislocations incident to a war. It seems to me that fact should be kept in mind as we consider the source to the individuals of the incomes which they are getting out of wartime economic dislocations; and certainly it is sound, it seems to me, to apply the first tax relief to the people of small incomes, rather than to adopt a principle based upon the notion of making the rich richer and the poor poorer.

With respect to labor-management relations, the economic report merely refers back to the program set forth in the state of the Union message.

APPRAISAL OF REPORT'S SHORT-RANGE PROGRAM

Essentially the short-range program which I have just summarized is sound. It covers the most important types of action that can affect the American economy in 1947. It sets forth the essential points on which immediate action by the Congress is imperative. At the same time, it is moderate and restrained. It does not attempt to give Congress a detailed directive, but, rather, recognizes the desirability of congressional initiative and discretion in working out each of the legislative measures to which the report refers.

The only defect in the short-range program, as I see it, is the failure to speak in more specific terms concerning the price reductions that are recommended to business. The section of the report containing the Presidential admonition to businessmen consists of merely three sentences. I cannot see how any individual businessman or any business leaders could derive from that brief and cursory counsel any real indication as to the type of price actions which the President is recommending to the business community. If the President's approach to the price situation is to be based on recommendations to business, businessmen have the right to expect a simple and direct exposition of the type and locations of the price decreases which are needed, the practical problems that must be faced in effectuating such decreases, and the manner in which price decreases can be prevented from leading into a severe deflationary spiral. The recommendations have to cover a wider field than mere advice as to reductions in retail prices. Of course, we must deal with the whole problem, including reductions in wholesale prices and reductions in the cost of production itself, and that takes us into the field of employer-employee relationships, where it is necessary to bring about greater stability. That is why so many times in the last 2 years, Mr. President, on the floor of the Senate I have counseled against large increases in wages, because my counsel to labor has been that the only increases in wages that are of any value to labor are increases in real wages. Much of the wage increases since VJ-day have not been in the form of increases in real wages, but have only been in the form of increases in money wages. After all, it seems to me, we cannot have any stable employer-employee relationships in the United States until business and labor and the Government itself come to grips with this whole problem of adopting an economic program which will make it possible for us to maintain a high level of purchasing power on the part of all consumers, fair profits to employers, and a decent standard of living for workers and farmers.

SUMMARY OF REPORT'S LONG-RANGE PROGRAM

Mr. President, I now wish to summarize my views with respect to the long-range program suggested by the President.

The long-range program contains both legislative proposals to Congress and recommendations for intensive studies. The legislative aspect of the program is as follows:

First. Congress should provide permanent Federal legislation dealing with discrimination in employment or wages against certain national and religious groups, against workers in late middle age, and against women.

Second. The school-lunch program should be expanded.

Third. Legislation for a uniform patent policy should be enacted.

Fourth. Section 7 of the Clayton Act should be extended to control mergers by the acquisition of assets as well as by the acquisition of stock control.

Fifth. Increased appropriations should be provided for the control of monopolistic practices.

Sixth. Congress should extend the coverage and the benefits of our social-security laws.

The President also stakes out the following fields of study:

First. Federal agencies are directed to initiative a study of Federal and State programs for industrial training and employment counseling.

Second. It is suggested that "we should study carefully the possible need for food and nutrition programs to reach low income families."

Third. The Government should examine the contribution to regional development that can be made by power developments, flood control and navigation, improved roads, fair transportation rates, the removal of barriers to truck transportation, and land drainage and irrigation projects.

Fourth. The Council of Economic Advisers is making a special study of chronically depressed areas and those areas which have been left stranded by the end of the war.

Fifth. The Council of Economic Advisers is also working to develop a study of Federal grants to State and local governments.

Sixth. The Congress should "review the studies made by the Temporary Economic National Committee and by other congressional committees" with a view toward new legislation on monopoly and monopolistic practices.

Seventh. The Government should study the entire problem of providing better access by small business to long-term credit and equity capital.

Eighth. The Congress should study the various methods of taxation that might be used in financing expanded social-security system.

Ninth. The Council of Economic Advisers is making a continuing study of the devices that may become necessary to stabilize our economy if there should be indications of a down turn in economic activity.

What about an appraisal of this long-range program?

APPRAISAL OF THE REPORT'S LONG-RANGE PROGRAM

The long-range program presented in the economic report has many virtues.

The recommendations for legislation deserve the immediate attention of the Congress.

In this connection I should like to point out that the President's proposal for legislation to prevent discrimination in wages would be carried out by enactment of the equal-pay bill which I introduced in the Seventy-ninth Congress, and which I intend to reintroduce at this session.

The school-lunch program should most certainly be expanded.

Legislation for a uniform patent policy should most certainly be enacted.

The President's proposal for strengthening of section 7 of the Clayton Act, in order to facilitate the control of mergers by the Federal Trade Commission, is provided for in the antimonopoly bill, S. 72, which I have introduced at this session in collaboration with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senators from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER and Mr. YOUNG], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE]. This same bill also calls for increased appropriations to the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission, as recommended by the President.

Naturally I regret that greater progress has not been made in moving this bill through the machinery of the Congress to the floor of the Senate. I want to make it very clear that I am going to be a Member of the Senate for at least a few more years, and probably longer, but so long as I am here—and probably it will take that long—I shall continue to press for action on Senate bill 72, because I think the control of monopolies is unquestionably the most important economic problem on the domestic front. I say that because rapidly we are becoming an economy of monopoly.

Finally, the President's recommendation that there be a cost-of-living adjustment in social-security benefits is certainly well-founded.

The President's proposals for future studies by the Congress and the executive branch are also constructive. I doubt whether there is anyone in the Congress who would disagree with the President's contention that the studies he has outlined should be undertaken. I myself am particularly impressed with the necessity of having the Congress undertake a comprehensive study of monopoly and monopolistic practices for the purpose of developing a coordinated and integrated antimonopoly program. I called for such an investigation at the end of the last session of the Congress, before the Economic Report was written, and on February 14 I introduced a Senate resolution—together with the other sponsors of the antimonopoly bill—calling upon the Judiciary Committee to make an investigation of this type. I hope the Committee on the Judiciary will proceed to give consideration to the resolution.

I am also particularly interested in having more rapid progress made on the analysis of Federal grants to State and local governments. There is now pending before the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare a resolution which I have submitted, calling for a subcommittee study of this subject. It is all very well and good for the President to have this matter explored by his Council of Economic Advisers, but the problem of Federal grants to State and local governments is much more than an Executive problem. It is also a congressional responsibility, and should be made the subject of a formal congressional study. Therefore, my resolution.

But there are also certain defects in the long-range program presented in the Economic Report. These are, for the most part, defects of omission.

On the vital question of future agricultural policy, the report contains no specific recommendations whatsoever.

Mr. President, I think that the Eightieth Congress can well afford in its deliberations to give aforehand consideration to the problems of agriculture which will confront the farmers in the next few years. We should start now to take the steps necessary to maintain a strong and healthy agriculture which will enable the farmers of the Nation to maintain a high individual purchasing power.

As I said on another occasion, we cannot get away from the fact that basic to the strength of our democratic system of government is the American individual farm. It is the most important defense weapon we have. It is because American agriculture has made it possible for us to be a self-sustaining Nation, from the standpoint of food, that we can afford to maintain an economic system based upon the private-property economy which we maintain. On the other hand dictatorship thrives upon economies which are not based upon an agriculture which makes it possible for the farmers of a given nation to supply the people of the nation with all their food.

Why do I say that, Mr. President? It is because people with empty stomachs, a population that is living under the perpetual fear that it may starve, is easy prey to ideologies inconsistent with the great democratic system and representative form of government we maintain in this country.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'CONOR in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. YOUNG. I wish to commend the Senator from Oregon for his statement concerning agriculture and his splendid analysis of the President's economic report. I believe it is little understood that agriculture is in the most precarious situation among all our economic groups. Industry can set prices for its products. Labor largely is able to determine, by bargaining, its income. Agricultural prices are determined almost entirely on a supply and demand basis on the open market. At the present time, of course, there is on the statute books the Steagall amendment, which under certain conditions would guarantee minimum prices for agricultural products. But at the present time it is little understood that farm prices are far above support levels, and that the only reason why farm prices are high is the tremendous volume of foreign exports, to the extent of over a million tons a month, which has created a scarcity in this country, resulting in higher prices. Right now the price of wheat, with the tremendous crop, the largest in history, would probably be not much more than a dollar a bushel; the price of potatoes would perhaps be down to 30 or 40 cents a bushel; the price of wool, because of the lack of support prices and the lack of action on S. 814 in the House, has dropped about 10 or 12 cents a pound, at a time when we are importing about 82 percent of all the wool consumed in the United States. I think for that reason it is highly important that the present Congress write a future agriculture bill, to become effective when the present program expires with next year's crop. It has long been my belief that a balanced economy—that is, a favorable economic balance between labor, industry, and farmers—has brought about good times. Whenever one or the other is thrown out of balance by low income, it results in a depression. Would the Senator from Oregon agree on those conclusions?

Mr. MORSE. I want to thank the Senator from North Dakota for his excellent contribution to my discussion of the farm problem. I agree with him 100 percent. I agree with him so completely that this morning I am taking advantage of the opportunity to issue a warning to my party that the Republican Party must never be guilty of failing to plan to take care of the agricultural economy of the country, so that never again will the farmers be faced with the specter of depression which ruined so many of them in 1929 and the early thirties. There is nothing we can do that is more fundamental to maintaining long-time prosperity than to see to it that American agriculture is kept economically healthy. That is why I am greatly concerned about certain fiscal policies of the present Congress. That is why, at the expense of precious time I admit, I am taking advantage this morning of the opportunity to discuss what I consider to be some of the most serious economic problems that face America. We need to consider these problems raised by the President's economic report along with any consideration of a tax program.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, agriculture has probably received a larger amount of adverse publicity than any other segment of the country. There appeared in the papers yesterday, and I think in this morning's papers also, a story about appropriation bills, and concerning particularly the $618,000,000 just appropriated under the second deficiency appropriation bill for farm support prices. Actually, it is not well understood even by Members of Congress that the $618,000,000 was the result of consumer's subsidies paid before OPA expired. Anyone reading the stories would think that at the present time $618,000,000 had been appropriated for farm support prices, when that is not the situation at all.

Mr. MORSE. I want to thank the Senator again. It illustrates what the constant repetition of inaccuracies and false statements can do to the public mind. The constant misrepresenting of the position of the American farmer I think has recently done him a great injury in public opinion. I think those of us who are making a study of farm problems owe an obligation to the farmers of America, an obligation which the Senator from North Dakota has shown very clearly this morning he is willing to assume, to try to place the facts in regard to farm problems before the American public. Once they see the relationship between farm prosperity and general prosperity, the relationship between the purchasing power of the farmer and the purchasing power of labor, our people will insist that Congress take action along the lines of this speech. Once the public understands the facts I am sure it will insist that Congress must proceed to take necessary legislative action, along the lines suggested by the Senator from North Dakota, to help maintain a sound agricultural economy.

So I say, Mr. President, returning to the report, that I think one of the vital defects of the President's economic report is that it contains no specific recommendations whatever in regard to an agricultural policy or program.

On the central problem of monopoly and monopolistic practices, the report contents itself with the two limited recommendations on the strengthening of the Clayton Act and the appropriation of more funds for antitrust enforcement.

On public works coordination the report contains some high-sounding general principles but no substantive recommendations of any type whatsoever.

On the question of the management of our public debt, not a word is said.

On the important problems of regional development, social security, and credit to small business, all that it done is to suggest that studies be made.

Mr. President, these are gaps that cannot be filled merly by staking out fields for future study. These are gaps that can only be filled by a frank and forthright statement of Administration policy. Such a statement cannot be found in the report.

Another defect is the lack of sufficient attention to the existing long-range programs of the Federal Government. Section 3 of the Employment Act of 1946 provides that the Economic Report include—and I quote—"a review of the economic program of the Federal Government." No such review is contained in the first Economic Report.

It is to be hoped that subsequent reports will give detailed information about these matters which I have dismissed.

Mr. President, I raise the question, where do we go from here? The responsibility for preventing another depression does not rest on any single part of our Government or on any single segment of the American people. It is a joint responsibility—one that must be exercised by the President and his Council of Economic Advisers, by the Congress and its various committees, and by industry, agriculture, labor, and State, and local governments.

There are many additional steps that the President should take if he is to carry out the intent of the Employment Act, of which I was one of the sponsors.

The first and most important step is to present to the Congress a supplementary economic report, as provided for by section 3 (b) of the Employment Act. There have been many important economic developments since January 8—particularly with respect to price movements, consumer purchasing power, construction and foreign loans. The Congress and the people are entitled to the President's appraisal of these new trends and of their implications for the policy of the Federal Government on fiscal affairs, labor relations, and other vital matters.

It is my profound hope, therefore, that a supplementary report bringing up to date the analysis of economic trends which was made in January, will be transmitted to the Congress no later than June of this year.

The Congress also has the right to expect that subsequent economic reports to the Congress—both the one which is needed in June and the one which is required next January—will fill in the many gaps which appeared in the first economic report, will provide a meaningful picture of what our productive capacity could be, and will provide more attention to the definition of economic goals and the problem of obtaining more adequate statistics.

The Economic Report of next January, moreover, should stake out specific long-range programs with respect to those important fields of Government activity which were only cursorily dealt with in this year's Economic Report—namely, agriculture, monopoly, public works, debt management, regional development, social security, and credit for small businesses. It should also provide a meaningful review of existing Federal programs.

The Joint Committee on the Economic Report also has a responsibility. Congress has a right to expect that in the not too distant future the joint committee will present to both Houses its findings and recommendations with respect to the President's analysis of the economy, the President's short-range program and the President's long-range program.

The legislative committees of the Congress have some responsibility. Legislative action should be accelerated on the extension of rent control, making reasonable adjustments in those cases where, because of increased costs of maintenance, landlords can make a showing that they are unable to derive a fair and decent return from their rental property on the basis of present rents. Likewise Congress should take prompt action for the enactment of housing legislation, the extension of the Fair Labor Standards Act, the enactment of legislation against discrimination both in employment and in wages, the expansion of the school-lunch program, legislation on patents, the Clayton Act, increased funds for enforcement of the antitrust laws, the revision of social-security benefit payments, and a comprehensive revision of our social-security system.

That is a legislative program, Mr. President; it is a legislative program which in fact is at the present time bottled up in various committees of Congress. I recommend that legislative program to the Republican Party. I submit that it is based upon sound principles of social legislation. Such a legislative program, Mr. President, if recognized, approved, and put into effect by the Republican Party, I am convinced would be approved by an overwhelming majority of the American people. But if my party thinks it can long stay in power with only a negative legislative program, without a great constructive social legislative program, it will learn in due course of time at the ballot boxes of America that the overwhelming majority of the American people expect my party to keep pace with the march of time and to recognize that human events are moving ever forward and not backward. No party, be it the Republican Party or the Democratic Party, will long sustain the confidence of the American people if it goes back on such a legislative program as I have just suggested.

Mr. President, the responsibility of our legislative committees is particularly great with respect to long-range problems and long-range programs. Every study of a long-range program which the President has recommended should be undertaken. Here is a grand opportunity for a Republican Congress to build a record of genuine achievement on problems that were not affirmatively dealt with by our Democratic President.

Here, in these fields where the President has not made long-range recommendations, is an opportunity for a Republican Congress, through effective committee work, to develop constructive programs and then ask the President to meet us halfway.

Finally, it is imperative that every economic group in the country, every public interest organization, and every State and local government give renewed attention to the problem of preventing another boom and bust cycle. The Economic Report of the President, while not a perfect document, provides an ideal focal point for discussion and analysis. This report should be distributed in the tens and hundreds of thousands. It should be analyzed at local meetings. Its pros and cons should be discussed on the radio and in the press. Above all, it should be debated on the floor of both Houses of the Congress—not only to draw more public attention to the issues involved in preventing another depression but also to give the people of America a better chance of finding out what their elected representatives stand for and stand against.

The greatest danger we face today is the danger of inertia, the danger that because things seem to be going along pretty well for the present we will postpone, for some indefinite future date, the painful task of thinking and acting in the interests of maintaining economic stability.

In conclusion, I should like to quote a very profound statement from a special report that has been issued by the editors of the Kiplinger magazine. This report is entitled "Can We Prevent Depressions?" and it deals with the Employment Act of 1946, the Council of Economic Advisers, and the first economic report of the President in these words:

> The race is on—the race against time—to decide whether, over the next few years, we can make those adjustments in our economy that are needed to avert a major depression in the fifties.
>
> This is no idle nightmare. A major depression appears on the private charts of almost every large corporation that looks 5 or 10 years ahead. Not a little recession like the adjustment of 1947 or 1948, but a depression like that of the thirties or worse. Some call it a "possibility." A few see no way of preventing it.
>
> * * * * *
> There is nothing in our past economic history to suggest that this smash will be avoided automatically. Every major war has been succeeded at some time by a period of prolonged and deep depression.
>
> The machinery of the Council of Economic Advisers to the President and the spirit of the Employment Act of 1946 stand between us and that disaster. But this is not a machinery whereby the Government, acting alone, will come to the rescue. It is a machinery to give leadership in developing an all-together effort to achieve our common goal.
>
> * * * * *
> So if nature takes its course, this machinery that has been created may lie almost unused. There will always be a tendency to consider its recommendations tomorrow, and then on another tomorrow.
>
> Of all those who are interested in the fifties, businessmen have the most at stake. The Employment Act of 1946 is not a labor measure. It is not a law invoking salvation by government. It is a measure designed to insure the American economic system of a long and healthy life. It needs everyone's help to make it work.

Mr. President, before closing my speech I desire to make a few additional comments. I worked for some time on the speech I delivered today. I do not like to consume so much time on the floor of the Senate in presenting my views on what I consider to be some of the basic and vital problems which confront my party and my country. However, in view of the fact that the leadership of my party did not see fit to place on the Economic Report Committee a single one of the Republican sponsors of the full employment bill of 1946, I considered it of great importance that at least the views of one of us on the President's economic report should be expressed on the floor of the Senate. So long as the type of disciplinary action is followed by the leadership of my party which denied any of the Republican sponsors of the full employment bill a place on the Economic Report Committee I shall continue from time to time to speak my mind on the floor of the Senate. I shall do that when denied the right under the traditions and customs of the Senate to bring my views to bear as a member of committees to which I am entitled to appointment.

Lastly, I wish to say that I think I have presented in this speech a blueprint of action for those in the Republican Party who want to make it a great progressive party, a party that will plan now, in the Eightieth Congress, to see to it that the necessary steps are taken to the extent that they can be taken by the Government, to avoid the type of depression which was painted for us in the language of the Kiplinger Report. As long as I am in the Senate I shall continue to urge my party to become a progressive party. I want it to be a party which places human rights and interests above selfish interests and partisan politics.

ORDER FOR RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I move that when the Senate concludes its session today it stand in recess until Monday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to.

HENRY J. KAISER

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, it will be recalled that a little over a year ago—on April 17, 1946—I addressed the Senate on the saga of Henry J. Kaiser, the coddled darling of the New Deal. I revealed to the Senate and the American people the fact that at that time Kaiser owed the people of the United States through the RFC almost $115,000,000, much of which was non-interest-bearing. I related the story of how through the war years this man Kaiser, going through the front, back, or side doors of the Federal Government, was able in some mysterious way to get literally bales of the people's money merely by stamping his name on some fantastic project.

For several years glad-handing Henry, juggling millions extracted from the American taxpayers, has been offering all sorts of remedies—at Government expense—for almost every economic ill. He has opened his financial side show in all parts of the country with enthusiastic New Deal applause—not to mention the free hand of the New Dealers with taxpayers' money. Without the latter, this fantastic schemer would have dropped by the wayside as others of his kind have over the years.

In my remarks to the Senate a little more than a year ago, one of Kaiser's indulgences to which I referred was the Fontana steel plant. The rocketlike Kaiser had descended upon Washington and sold the top man the Fontana proposition to the tune of $111,805,000 of American taxpayers' money. Later he got $11,500,000 more, for a grand total of $123,305,000.

Now Henry is back in town trying to induce RFC to bite once more on the Fontana dream. Henry wants RFC—which means the taxpayers of the Nation—to take an $85,000,000 loss on the money he owes for his Fontana mill. His total indebtedness on the plant is $105,452,160. He thinks it would be nice of RFC to write off all of this except $20,123,016. He has asked RFC to agree to such a plan.

After that, generous juggling Henry would pay off the $20,000,000 with $15,000,000 in earnings from his shipyards—which profited greatly under Government contracts—and another $5,000,000 to be raised from the sale of stock to the public, or borrowed privately.

Imagine that! I was shocked and amazed yesterday when I picked up the newspaper, to see that a man actually had the nerve to come to Washington and propose that a Government bureau write off $85,000,000 of a debt which he owed to the Federal Government. That is the most colossal example of unmitigated gall that I have ever heard of in one man.

Like so many of Henry's deals with the Government, this latest one is a little indefinite as to what he actually has in mind. Of course, the part about forgiving some of Henry's debt to the Government is clear, as always. But the real reason why Henry wants to get the Fontana plant free is shrouded in a good deal of fog. Henry says that wiping out most of his debt will enable him to compete with other private steel makers and constitutes a major step toward the President's goal of lower prices for the Nation.

Probably the truth is that Henry would like to get the Fontana plant practically free to pull him out of the awful hole he has gotten into in connection with his manufacture of automobiles. His efforts along this line have proved a terrible bust. Only something like steel manufactured in a gift plant—paid for by the American taxpayers—will save Henry from disaster in the automobile business, it seems.

The Kaiser-Frazer outfit has manufactured to date, according to the latest report I have seen, only about 11,000 cars. They have been made at a terrific loss to stockholders. Some $57,000,000 worth of stock was unloaded on the public at prices ranging from $10 to a little over $20 a share. The stock closed on the New York Curb last night at 6. It never has paid a dividend. The company lost $19,284,681 on total sales of $11,504,433 in 1946.

One chapter of Henry's operations which never has been publicized was his recent attempt to do a little real-estate speculating with the Willow Run plant. He quietly approached the War Assets Administration and suggested that the plant, on which he now holds a lease, be quietly optioned to him at $14,824,624. It was to be done without advertising, of course. Simultaneously New York banking groups were approached as to the possibility of raising a $40,000,000 loan on Willow Run in case it was bought by private parties. Neither War Assets nor the bankers were interested, so the project was dropped.

Perhaps Henry will induce RFC to cancel out his Fontana debt, but the outlook is not good. The air conditioning has been on full blast recently at RFC whenever Henry called. Only a few weeks ago he was refused a simple loan of $12,000,000 to bail out Kaiser-Frazer. In the better New Deal days, that was chicken feed for Henry. He could have gotten that much by making a postcard request. But times have changed, for the good of the country.

I bring these facts to the attention of the Senate because a year ago I outlined on the floor of the Senate Mr. Kaiser's various operations. At that time I never thought that we would see the day when a man would have the nerve to come to Washington and ask the Federal Government to write off $85,000,000 of a legitimate loan. As I have stated, that is the greatest amount of gall that I have ever seen exhibited in a single individual. I am very glad that to date, at least, the RFC has adopted a little more frigid attitude, rather than the cordial, receptive attitude which it exhibited in the old days.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Swanson, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 236. An act to amend the Nationality Act of 1940 so as to permit naturalization proceedings to be had at places other than in the office of the clerk or in open court in the case of sick or physically disabled individuals;

H. R. 384. An act for the relief of W. H. Baker and Walter Baker;

H. R. 428. An act for the relief of Charles N. Bemis;

H. R. 444. An act for the relief of the estate of Archie S. Woods, deceased;

H. R. 603. An act to amend an act of September 27, 1944, relating to credit for military or naval service in connection with certain homestead entries;

H. R. 1494. An act for the relief of the estate of Nellie P. Dunn, deceased;

H. R. 1844. An act to authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to grant easements in lands belonging to the United States under his supervision and control, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 3245. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes.

REDUCTION OF INDIVIDUAL INCOME-TAX PAYMENTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce individual income-tax payments.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I should like to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Are amendments to the pending bill now in order, or may amendments not be offered until the motion to postpone has been acted upon on Monday?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to postpone takes precedence over any other motion.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Amendments cannot be presented at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator so desires, amendments can be offered, to lie on the table and be taken up at a later time.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Very well.

Mr. President, on March 24 I gave notice that I would offer certain amendments to the pending bill. I sent the amendments to the desk and had them printed, and they were referred to the Finance Committee of the Senate, which committee was then considering this measure and was in process of holding hearings on it. Later, I appeared before the Senate Finance Committee and presented the amendments and gave evidence in support of them. Neither of the amendments was adopted by the Finance Committee, but I expect to present them, or some of them, on the floor when the parliamentary situation will permit that to be done.

I should like at this time to ask unanimous consent that I may have printed in the RECORD at this point two amendments which I shall offer in the event consideration of the measure is not postponed as proposed in the pending motion.

The first of these amendments, Mr. President, is one to raise personal exemptions. The second provides a new basis of collecting income taxes so as to equalize tax collections between citizens of non-community-property States and those of community-property States. I ask that these amendments be incorporated in the RECORD at this point in the order in which I have referred to them.

There being no objection, the amendments intended to be proposed by Mr. McCLELLAN were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

At the proper place in the bill insert a new section as follows:

"SEC. —. Increase in personal exemption.

"(a) Subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 25 (b) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended, are amended to read as follows:

"'(A) In the case of a single person or a married person not living with husband or wife, a personal exemption of $750.

"'(B) In the case of the head of a family or a married person living with husband or wife, a personal exemption of $1,500. A husband and wife living together shall receive but one personal exemption. The amount of such exemption shall be $1,500. If such husband and wife make separate returns, the personal exemption may be taken by either or divided between them.'

"(b) Sections 51 (a), 58 (a) (2), and 142 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended, are amended by striking out '$500' wherever it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof '$750.'

"(c) The amendments made by this section shall be effective with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1946.

"Amend the tables contained in sections 400 and 1622 (c) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code to conform to the above amendments."

On page 1, line 6, before the period, insert the following: "and establishment of new method for computation of surtax in case of joint returns."

On page 2, beginning with line 6, strike out all down to and including line 10 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(b) Reduction in surtax on individuals and establishment of new method for computation of surtax in case of joint returns: So much of section 12 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to the rates of surtax) as precedes the table therein is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(b) Computation of surtax:

"'(1) Separate return: Except in the case of a joint return by husband and wife, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the surtax net income of every individual a surtax determined by computing a tentative surtax under the table set forth in paragraph (3) of this subsection, and by reducing such tentative surtax by 24 percent thereof.

"'(2) Joint return: In the case of a joint return by husband and wife under section 51, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the aggregate surtax net income of the husband and wife a surtax determined—

"'(A) by computing a tentative surtax under the table set forth in paragraph (3) of this subsection upon an amount equal to one-half of such aggregate surtax net income;

"'(B) by multiplying the tentative surtax ascertained under subparagraph (A) by two; and

"'(C) by reducing the amount ascertained under subparagraph (B) by 24 percent thereof.

"'(3) Surtax table: The table referred to in paragraphs (1) and (2) is as follows:'."

On page 4, between lines 2 and 3, insert the following:

"(e) Standard deduction: Section 23 (aa) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to the optional standard deduction for individuals) is amended to read as follows:

"'(1) Allowance: In the case of an individual, at his election, a standard deduction as follows:

"'(A) Separate return with adjusted gross income $5,000 or more: Except in the case of a joint return by husband and wife, if the adjusted gross income is $5,000 or more, the standard deduction shall be $500.

"'(B) Joint return with adjusted gross income $5,000 or more: In the case of a joint return by husband and wife under section 51, if the aggregate adjusted gross income of the husband and wife is $5,000 or more, the standard deduction shall be $1,000 or an amount equal to 10 per centum of such aggregate adjusted gross income, whichever is the lesser.

"'(C) Adjusted gross income less than $5,000: If the adjusted gross income is less than $5,000, the standard deduction shall be an amount equal to 10 per centum of the adjusted gross income upon the basis of which the tax applicable to the adjusted gross income of the taxpayer is determined under the tax table provided in section 400'."

On page 4, line 3, strike out "(e)" and insert in lieu thereof "(f)."

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I shall first address myself to the pending motion, and to the bill. Then I shall discuss these amendments.

I believe every citizen in the Nation is anxious, as soon as it is possible, wise, and advisable to do so, to have the Federal tax burden relieved to the extent it can be done and, at the same time, maintain a sound fiscal policy. We all look forward to a reduction in our taxes; and it may be possible, Mr. President, that a reduction, perhaps a substantial one, can be made without doing any serious violence to or impairing to any appreciable degree the fiscal affairs of our Government. However, that is debatable. At best it is a guess; it is purely speculative as to how far we can reduce taxes and avoid the danger of again having to operate this Government on a deficit basis.

So I believe I can associate myself with everything that the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] said a day or two ago when he presented the pending motion for deferment or postponement of this measure until such time as the Congress has had an opportunity to know what the cost of Government will be for the next fiscal year, or at least how much we should appropriate now for the purpose of paying the costs of Government for the next fiscal year.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. The motion of the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia was to postpone the consideration of the bill until June 10. The junior Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] brought forth some facts which show that Congress does not really make a start at getting the appropriation bills enacted by June 10. Is it in the Senator's contemplation that if by June 10 we do not have a complete picture on appropriations there will be a further delay?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I will answer the Senator by saying that of course I am not the author of the motion which is pending, but if I were to plan the program myself I should certainly want to defer it until we had ascertained how much we can reduce the cost of Government, and I refer to the effort being made to reduce it below the budget estimate submitted by the President.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Of course it would be a futile thing to postpone the bill until June 10, if by that date we did not receive the type of information which the distinguished Senator wants to have.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes.

Mr. MILLIKIN. And if we did not have sufficient information by that time, of course, under that theory, another postponement, I assume, would be in order.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am sure we could at least anticipate that we would have more information than we now have. We would have made some further progress by June 10 with respect to appropriations for the next fiscal year. We could at least tell by that time what action the House had taken, which would be indicative of the prospects of cuts from the budget in accordance with what has been recommended. I say frankly, Mr. President, that in my judgment we cannot very wisely legislate on tax reduction until we know more about appropriations. As has been stated since the bill has been under discussion, no one can know what the national income will be during the next fiscal year. It is always a guess. But we can make a more intelligent guess, Mr. President; we can speculate more accurately if we have more knowledge of what the expenditures will be.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I do not want to interrupt the Senator unduly, but it is interesting to know that the Treasury Department made estimates with respect to the fiscal year 1947, after all the appropriation bills were in, and it was found that the range of mistake, or, at least, the range of the estimates—after all the appropriation bills were in and had been made into law—exceeded $1,000,000,000.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I can very well appreciate that that is about as close as anyone could come to the exact figure, when we are dealing with $40,000,000,000 a year. Under those circumstances, if the Treasury can come within a billion dollars of estimating correctly what the expenses of Government are going to be, and if we can do that well each year as we approach legislation making appropriations we shall not err very far in dealing with total expenditures of $35,000,000,000 or $40,000,000,000 a year. If the Treasury can come that close, we shall have sufficient information to enable us to legislate wisely both with respect to aprpopriations and also with respect to taxes.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. MYERS. I think the Senator from Colorado was referring to the national income, which would amount to $170,000,000,000 or $180,000,000,000 a year.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I thought the Senator from Colorado meant tax revenues.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I was not referring to the national income.

Mr. President, would it be an imposition on the Senator from Arkansas for me to state at this time the exact facts in regard to that matter?

Mr. McCLELLAN. No; I should be happy to have the Senator do so.

Mr. MILLIKIN. The expenditure estimate for the fiscal year 1947, as made by the Bureau of the Budget last August, after appropriations had been completed, was $41,500,000,000.

In January 1947 that was revised to $42,500,000,000, a difference of $1,000,000,000.

More recently, on April 19, 1947, the expenditures were revised downward to $41,250,000,000, a difference of $1,250,000,000 from the January estimates.

My point is that those estimates were made, and were found to be grievously wrong, even after those who made them had the benefit of knowing what Congress had done with the appropriation bills.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I do not agree with the Senator from Colorado that that is such a bad error of judgment. I reassert what I said a moment ago: that if our Treasury Department can continuously come that close in estimating what the expenditures of our Government will be and what the Government's revenues will be, each year, then I think we can legislate wisely and with reasonable intelligence with respect to these matters.

Mr. President, for the reasons which I have already stated and which I shall not take time to ampify further, I shall vote for the motion to postpone. I think it would be better to postpone until possibly June 30, when all of the appropriations shall have been made, than it would be to postpone until June 10. However, I did not fix that date. But any postponement at the present time will provide further opportunity for us to be better informed when we undertake to act on this bill.

Mr. President, I am not opposed to this measure. I do not know yet whether I shall vote for it or against it. I am anxious to see tax reductions made. I do know that it will be a great mistake, however, and one which will not be easily rectified, for us not to pay high taxes now, while we have a high national income and while we have a heavy debt and while we still have an annual operating cost of government in an amount of approximately $35,000,000,000. If we lower taxes now, and if we get them too low, it will not be easy for this Congress or the next Congress in time of peace to enact a tax bill increasing taxes—which already are extremely high, and of necessity so, because of the great emergency through which this Nation and the rest of the world recently passed.

If we are going to reduce taxes, then I am concerned about how we shall do it and where the relief will be given and the extent of relief which will be afforded and how it will be spread so as to benefit all taxpayers alike and equitably. Mr. President, if I could have my way about this tax bill, the first reduction in taxes which I would provide for would be to the man who today is having difficulty earning sufficient money to provide the necessities of life for himself and his family. During recent years, and because of the necessities of financing one of the greatest military efforts the world has ever known, it became necessary continuously to increase taxes and to reduce the personal exemptions which theretofore had been granted to the individual taxpayers of the United States. In doing so, the point has been reached where, today, under existing law, a man and wife earning more than $1,000 have to pay some Federal income tax; if they make more than $1,000 a year, a married man today has to pay a Federal income tax. Mr. President, in view of the present high cost of living, no man and wife, no head of a family, today can stretch $1,000 far enough to make it provide the actual necessities of life. When I say "the actual necessities of life," I mean those necessities which we regard as necessities under our standard of living. I do not say that $1,000 would not be sufficient to enable them to barely exist; surely they could barely exist on that amount. But under present conditions, and existing law, we are actually taking taxes from the wage earners in the lower brackets and in the lower income groups; and when we do that, we are simply taking away from them some of the necessities which they can hardly afford to forego.

I think the first tax relief granted should be given to those who now are being required to pay taxes, but who should have a greater allowance and a greater exemption in order that they may have a proper standard of living.

Mr. President, I have looked into this matter and have inquired with respect to it, having in mind that I would offer an amendment to increase exemptions to $1,000 for a single person and to $2,000 for the head of a family. However, I found that on that basis the loss of revenues would be too great, I think—greater than we should undertake or risk at this time. If I recall correctly, according to the Treasury's estimate, exemptions made on that basis would decrease the Treasury's revenues by approximately $5,000,000,000, and would remove 18,000,000 persons from the tax rolls.

Then I inquired with respect to raising the personal exemption to $750 for a single person and to $1,500 for the head of a family. I find that on that basis, between 8,000,000 and 9,000,000 persons would be removed from the tax rolls, and there would be a loss of revenue in the amount of approximately $3,000,000,000.

I hope Senators will bear that figure in mind, because the pending tax bill, as it passed the House, provides for an estimated reduction or loss of revenue of $3,800,000,000.

Mr. President, I am most anxious to see the personal exemption raised, and although I have spoken about those who would benefit most, those in the low income brackets, let us remember that it applies all the way across the board, and in proportion to the taxpayer's earnings, and his wealth and his ability to pay he gets a reduction. Therefore, on that basis we still maintain our taxes so that those most able to pay are the ones who pay and those least able to pay get the most relief under the amendment which I have proposed.

Mr. President, I know there are other taxes which are too high and which should be reduced, and I hope the time will come when we can reduce them. I doubt if that time is now. But if the majority of the Congress felt that these others reductions could with safety be made, of course I might disagree, but they would be made.

There is another very serious situation which I want to see corrected. Irrespective of what conditions are with reference to taxation—and the conditions about which I have spoken are known to all of us—it is never the wrong time to right a wrong if it can be righted. I call attention to the fact that one of the amendments which I shall propose would have the effect, when enacted into law, of placing all individual income taxpayers of this Nation on the same basis, that it will do equity between them, whereas under existing law there is inequity and injustice. There are 10 States now—since the last few days another was added; there have been 9 for some time—there are 10 States now which have what are known as community property laws. I have no quarrel with those States. They have the right to have such a system of laws. Probably it is a good system which perhaps all the other States should adopt; I do not know.

Mr. HATCH. I wonder if the Senator would mind striking the word "probably" from his remarks.

Mr. McCLELLAN. If the Senator does not like that word I shall strike it out and say "they should." Irrespective of that, whether they choose to do so or not, that does not warrant our Government perpetuating a tax policy and a tax structure which does an injustice, and discriminates among many American citizens.

Mr. President, I have had some tables prepared by the Treasury Department which I wish to place in the RECORD, which will support the statements I have made with reference to increasing personal exemptions, and also with respect to community property.

Mr. MILLIKIN. How much does the Senator propose the exemptions be raised?

Mr. McCLELLAN. To $750 for single persons, and to $1,500 for heads of families.

The first table I shall present, and ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point, is a table showing comparisons between individual income taxes under the present law, and under the present law, if amended, by increasing the exemption from $500 to $750 for single persons.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, the second table makes comparison between individual income taxes under present law, and what the taxes would be if the law was amended by increasing the exemption from $1,000 to $1,500 for married persons. I will ask that this table be incorporated in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[1] Entire income reported by husband on joint return.

[2] Less than 1 percent.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, this table also shows what the difference in taxes would be based on the present law if the other amendment which I presented, the one providing for what is known as the "splitting of incomes"—which is the Treasury term for it—should be adopted. These tables will show the picture of what we are trying to correct, so that Senators may make comparisons and come to an intelligent decision.

The next table I shall offer is one showing a comparison of individual income taxes payable under present law on specified net incomes by husband and wife residing in a community-property State, with the tax payable by a person with the same income in a non-community-property State, and I wish to make some comparisons based on this table.

Let us take the case of a man who has an income of $10,000, and is a resident of a community-property State. Under present law he would pay $1,843 a year Federal income tax. The American citizen living over the line in another State which does not have the community-property system, having the same income of $10,000, would pay $2,185 Federal income tax, based on present law. In other words, he pays $342 a year more than does the citizen with the same income living over the line in another State.

Mr. President, I will state why this is so emphasized in my thinking and so important to my State. It is because three community-property States border on my State. They are Louisiana, Texas, and Oklahoma. In Texarkana, a city on the line between the State of Texas and the State of Arkansas, many people have their businesses in Arkansas but move over the line into the State of Texas in order to get the advantage of this tax discrimination.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. HATCH. I wish to ask the Senator a question merely for information. It seems to me I have heard that at one time the Senator's State was a community-property State, and that the system was voluntarily abandoned. Is that correct or not?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am sure that is not true. It has not been the fact since I have known anything about the State, and I am familiar with its history.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I think the able Senator from Arkansas has already pointed out that any State which desires to do so might become a community-property State, or at least most of the States might, under their constitutions and under their laws.

I merely wish to point out, for the sake of the record, that for a State to adopt the community-property system has not been a method of tax evasion, by any stretch of the imagination, but it is something which has come down to a good many of the Western States from the Mexican law. As a matter of fact, it is something in which I am sure the women of the Nation have a vital concern, because in my State of California, which is a community-property State, the law considers that half the husband's earnings belong to the wife, not at the time of the husband's death but she is a copartner. As a matter of fact, if the wife dies prior to the death of the husband, she has full power of testamentary disposition of the community property created during the marriage; so that it is a factual situation facing us and not a method of tax evasion of any kind.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I have said nothing, so far as I know, implying that this is a practice for tax evasion on the part of community-property States. I recognize that what the Senator says is true. It is said that perhaps there should be a uniform community-property law for all States. In Arkansas, by a different kind of law, husband and wife are given the right to form a business partnership. While by law it may be done in California and other community-property States, in Arkansas a husband may not, by gift, bestow upon his wife a half interest in his property or his income and have it so recognized for the purposes of Federal income tax, although it is under the Arkansas law; but if the husband makes the gift and pays the Federal gift tax on it to the Federal Government, the wife still cannot receive the income from her half interest, though it is recognized as her property; the husband is still required to pay the Federal income tax on it, although his wife legally owns it. I submit that if the Bureau of Internal Revenue feels itself under moral or legal obligation to recognize community-property laws in a State such as California, it should likewise recognize the partnership laws of Arkansas and other States. If a man, as a matter of choice, not as a matter of legal requirement, forms a partnership with his wife and divides his income with her, as well as his property and business, then the Government, recognizing the community-property law of certain States, should likewise recognize the Arkansas partnership law. As long as the law exists as it now is, and as long as the ruling stands, with resulting injustices and discriminations perpetrated not only upon the people of my State but upon the people of 37 other States, I shall make every effort to have justice done, and this defenseless injustice removed from our tax system and laws.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment at this point?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Of course, in dealing with the problem of taxation, inequities are encountered which should be eliminated after hearings before proper committees of the Senate and House, where the full facts should be presented. But, while the able Senator from Arkansas is mentioning certain inequities, I merely wish to call his attention to one growing out of the 1942 Federal estate taxes. When a decedent in a community-property State dies, the Federal Government levies an estate tax on the entire community-partnership property, except, first, property received as compensation for personal services rendered by the surviving spouse, and, second, property derived originally from the survivor's separate property.

Suppose a husband and wife in California accumulate a community-partnership estate of $300,000. The husband does not own $300,000 of that partnership property; he owns only half of it. The wife owns the other half. For example, she may will her half as she pleases, free of her husband's control. In the event of a divorce, she is entitled to half the property, as a matter of right. The wife's power of testamentary disposition is not a fiction; it is a fact. The Federal Government cannot tell a divorced husband in California that his wife's community-partnership rights are unreal. He knows better.

Under the 1942 estate-tax law, if the husband dies first, the entire $300,000 is considered as forming a part of his estate. Half of that estate was his wife's, and subject to her right to dispose of it by will; but it falls into the decedent's estate. Thus, in California and other community-partnership States, but only in such States, a deceased husband's estate is taxed on property he did not own and had never owned, property not subject to his testamentary disposition, property not transferred at his death. In the community-partnership States a widow is compelled to pay an estate tax on property that legally belongs to her, has always belonged to her, and is subject to her sole testamentary disposition.

I merely mention that at this time, to show that there are other inequities in other fields which, possibly, when the permanent tax legislation is being considered next year, should be gone into thoroughly before the Senate Finance Committee, with ample opportunities for all sides to present their views for curing the inequities wherever they may exist.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Then the Senator agrees with me that the inequities ought to be corrected?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I think certainly that very careful study must be given to the whole problem, in order to iron out whatever inequities may exist.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I can agree with the Senator that certain other inequities exist that ought to be ironed out. If they affect community-property States, as the Senator related, and I feel sure the Senator would be doing his State and his people a service if he would undertake to have those inequities eliminated; just as I am trying to have removed this particular inequity, which affects the people of my State.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I should like to say that the Senate Committee on Finance was much impressed by the very excellent argument which the senior Senator from Arkansas presented to it on this subject. It was the opinion of at least a majority of the committee that, at this time, efforts should be concentrated on giving Federal income tax reduction relief. That necessarily precluded ironing out all the 15 or 20 group inequities for which there is much argument. The House Ways and Means Committee has started its hearings, and the subject which the Senator is discussing is one for top consideration by that committee. I assure the Senator it will be a subject for top consideration by the Senate Finance Committee in connection with the general revision bill.

A moment ago I mentioned that it was the opinion of the majority of the committee that we should not undertake to write a general revision bill at this time. The Senator's proposal would benefit 5,400,000 people. It would cost, I assume, perhaps $750,000,000.

Mr. McCLELLAN. To which amendment does the Senator refer?

Mr. MILLIKIN. The split-income amendment. That amendment would benefit a total of 5,400,000 married persons.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The Senator says it would benefit them; does he not mean it would remove the inequity to which I have referred?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Yes; by removing it, it would benefit them. The committee had the choice of whether we would go through all the group inequities and try to write a general revision bill at this time, or whether we would concentrate on a general income tax reduction bill. Of course, the general income tax reduction bill will benefit all the people who would be benefited by the Senator's measure; but, in some cases, not in the same degree. The Senator's proposal would not benefit people in low income tax brackets, nor would it benefit those in the very high income tax brackets. It would not benefit single persons. It would not benefit widows with children, or widowers with children. It would not benefit married couples, who have approximately equal income.

Mr. McCLELLAN. While the Senator says it would not benefit that class of people, I say it certainly would do them no harm. They would not be harmed by it.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I am not saying that they would be harmed, except that when we establish a benefit for a special group, the whole group must bear the cost of the benefit.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The Senator refers to them as "a special group." If we are in fact correcting a wrong, removing an injustice under which we are now suffering, we are the special group which is suffering, and we ought to have the relief.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I am not arguing against the removal of the injustice. I merely wanted to make it clear why the Senate Finance Committee did not accept at this time the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I appreciate that statement, and I appreciate the problem which confronted the finance committee. The able Senator from Colorado has been very kind, and I am sure he has given this matter the consideration he felt he could give to it at this time. But I do want to emphasize the need for correcting this injustice, and I say that whether the present Congress acts or not, some Congress is going to correct it. The people of 38 States will expect it to be done, and it will be done.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I was listening to the colloquy between the able Senator from Colorado and the able Senator from Arkansas. The Senator from Colorado pointed out that the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas would benefit a special group. As I see it, without the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas a benefit will be perpetuated in a special group, which is not rightfully an equal distribution of the burden of taxation. The Senator is attempting to put everyone on the same level whereas the law as it now stands favors a special group and we should not favor any special group in the levying of taxes.

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is the very point I was undertaking to make; that while those who would benefit by this proposal may be referred to as a special group they are also a special group which is now at a great disadvantage.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. I disagree with my distinguished and able friend, the Senator from Maryland when he says that the people of the community-property States are receiving special benefits. Later during the debate, when these amendments come up, I hope we may discuss the entire subject of community property.

I wish to point out some of the burdens that rest upon people under the community property relationship and law. It is not all benefit by any means. I desire to emphasize again what the Senator from California has just said, that our community property law is a law relating to property, one strictly and solely within the rights of each sovereign State. Both the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Maryland will agree that each State has the undoubted right to establish its own laws regarding property. I point out again that the community property law has been in effect for a long time in my State and in most of the other community property States, long before there was any income tax or any Federal estate tax of any kind. It was a rule of property which we deemed to be a wise rule, one relating to the marital relationship and property, and also covering certain social aspects of that relationship. Under that law the wife is the absolute owner of one-half of all property acquired during marriage by the joint efforts of husband and wife. Nothing the husband can do can divest her of that ownership.

As I said, I do not want to discuss those things now, but I wish to point out this one thing, that the greatest wrong and injustice that has ever been done under any tax law was the law to which the Senator from California referred, by which the Federal Government levies an estate tax upon the property of a widow which is her own property, title being vested in her by the provisions of the community property law, and title not passing by reason of the death of the husband. The law in question did a great wrong and injustice. It was in my opinion, before the Supreme Court passed on it, clearly unconstitutional, but that question is now foreclosed. The Supreme Court has passed on it. It does remain the right of Congress to correct that clear wrong and injustice.

Generally on the proposition of the right of the non-community-property States to secure any adjustment which they see fit, I will say that I have no objection to that. I think that the amendment as offered now should be improved. I think the whole subject should be considered and other injustices corrected at the same time. But certainly the people in the community property States are not seeking any advantage over the people in any other State. We do not want the Congress, however, at any time to interfere with and take from us that which by the laws of our own States we have determined is ours, and under which laws we have had long experience.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to say to the Senator from New Mexico that what he has said is accurate respecting each State having the right to pass laws affecting the ownership of and succession and other phases connected with property. I would be the last individual in the world to want to invade that field. What I am trying to say to the Senator is that in the levying of a Federal rather than a State tax—without reflecting at all on the system that may prevail in his State or in any other State—the Federal Government should devise its law so that people with the same income, or a man and wife with the same income, whatever the situation may be, will pay an equal tax to the Federal Government as differentiated from the State Government, whether they live in Maine or whether they live in New Mexico or California. I think it is our duty so to devise our tax law, certainly in line with the philosophy of the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas, as to make the burden of taxation equal on all the citizens of the country. Assuredly I did not intend, and do not intend now, to cast the least reflection on any of the community property States, which have only done what they have a right to do. Naturally the Federal Government in entering that field ought to be sensitive to the rights and the set-ups there. But I think that when we devise a law, if it is proposed to place less of a tax burden for the same income on the people of the community-property States, we should seek so to write the law that the burden shall apply equally all over the whole country. That was the point I had in mind.

I should like to say further that, while the Senator can very well point out and cite abundant instances of people in community-property States incurring liabilities and responsibilities which people in other States do not have, yet that should not deter us in the Federal field from trying to make our tax laws apply to all our people with as much equality as is humanly possible.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The only thing I wanted to suggest was that so long as the two systems prevail, the community-property system on the one hand and the common-law system on the other, there is going to be great difficulty in bringing about proper uniformity between the two systems. That is not the fault of the common-law States nor the fault of the community-property States.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true.

Mr. HATCH. Frankly, my own opinion is that the community property law is so far superior to the common law, that each State in the Nation should adopt the community property system. Of course, that is a matter for each State to determine for itself, but if each should adopt it, then all States would be on the same basis, and there would be no trouble about the enactment of Federal laws.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think there is a great deal to be said for the community-property idea. Like all good ideas, some unfavorable things are said about it. One of the reasons why it would be difficult for a common-law-property State to be converted into a community-property State is that such a conversion would entail not only the abstract idea, but the refinement of many laws and tax systems which would make it a superhuman undertaking if it were sought to avoid inflicting unintentional injustices, penalties, and liabilities on the people of such State. I believe that as time goes on such a system may evolve. I do not take issue with the statement that it has many good points of equity and justice as between man and wife, and as between the family and the State. My point is that within the limit of reasonable possibility, when we frame a national tax law we ought to try to frame it so that so far as the payment of Federal taxes is concerned, a man and wife, wherever they are situated, will pay the same amount on the same income, regardless of the locus of the family.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Of course, the general aim and objective which the Senator from Maryland has stated, with respect to having uniformity in all the States on the question of Federal taxation, is one which we all would like to accomplish. But in the relations between husband and wife, the situation differs in the various States. In some States they have separate estates. The wife has her estate and the husband has his, and the income is divided for income tax purposes, just as in the community-property States. The wife who has separate property under the laws of the State in which she lives has no greater title to that separate property than the wife in the community-property State has to her share of the community property.

I shall not press the argument at this time. The Senator wishes to proceed. There is much to be considered in connection with the entire question.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, from what the Senator from New Mexico says, I know that a problem exists. I am not as familiar with the laws of the community-property States as is the Senator, because he lives under such laws in his State. But if the inequity with respect to the inheritance tax which the Government imposes compares with the one we feel with respect to the difference in income taxes, I will say to the Senator that I believe that both Senators from Arkansas will join hands with him, and march together in trying to correct these inequities by enacting a law which will do justice to the Senator's State, to mine, and to all other States.

Mr. HATCH. I shall be most happy to cooperate with the Senator. I am sure that all of us from the community-property States will be glad to cooperate in as fair an adjustment as possible of the so-called inequities and discriminations.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, this is not an attack by me on the community-property States or the laws of those States. It is simply an effort on my part to focus attention upon a discrimination which exists. Let us find a way to right it as soon as we can do so.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks table No. 3, showing the situation of married persons with no dependents, and containing a comparison of individual income tax payable under the present law on specified net income by a husband and wife residing in a community-property State with the tax payable in a non-community-property State.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point, as a part of my remarks, table No. 4, which shows the amounts of individual income tax under the present law, under House bill 1 as reported to the Senate, and under the provisions of the bill as it is proposed to be amended by the two amendments which I have discussed today.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TABLE NO. 4.—Amounts of individual income tax under present law,[1] H. R. 1 as reported to the Senate for 1948, and plans to modify the reported bill by either (1) exemption increases to $750, $1,500, and $500, for single persons, married couples, and dependents, respectively, (2) income splitting, or (3) both the exemption increases and income splitting, for specified amounts of net income

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I have spoken longer than I intended. I wish to hurry through. I shall have an opportunity later to speak on this subject, when I present the amendments.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks tables Nos. 5 and 6, which are related tables, together with footnotes to tables 4 to 6, inclusive, showing how the two amendments would affect the present tax bill and the present tax law.

There being no objection, the tables and footnotes were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Total loss of revenue under present law with raised exemptions and community property split, $3,800,000,000.
Source: Joint Committee on Internal Revenue.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that the loss to the Treasury by reason of the community-property amendment which I shall propose would be $800,000,000. The loss from raising the personal exemption as I propose would be $3,000,000,000, making a total of $3,800,000,000, which is identical in amount with the estimated loss which would be sustained if the House bill were enacted into law.

I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks a letter from the Treasury Department, showing the effect which this bill would have in total losses and the effect of the amendments which I have discussed will have, if adopted.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 22, 1947.

Hon. JOHN L. McCLELLAN,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: This is in reference to your telephonic request of May 16, 1947, for estimates and tables showing the individual income-tax liabilities of married persons with no dependents under H. R. 1 as reported by the Senate Finance Committee further modified to allow: (1) An increase in exemptions of single persons, married couples and dependents to $750, $1,500, and $500, respectively; (2) income splitting; (3) the increase in exemptions and income splitting.

On a full-year basis, assuming income payments of $166,000,000,000, the first modification would increase the revenue loss under H. R. 1 as reported by the Senate Finance Committee by about $2,100,000,000, or from $3,800,000,000 to $5,900,000,000; the second modification would increase the revenue loss by about $800,000,000, or from $3,800,000,000 to $4,600,000,000; and the third modification would increase the revenue loss by about $2,800,000,000, or from $3,800,000,000 to $6,600,000,000.

I am enclosing tables which you requested, showing the tax liabilities of married persons with no dependents under these three modifications compared with the tax liabilities under present law and H. R. 1 as reported by the Senate Finance Committee.

Sincerely yours,

A. L. M. WIGGINS,
Acting Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. McCLELLAN. As evidence of how serious this question is to the people of my State, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a news article published in the Arkansas Gazette of May 11, 1947, dealing with this subject. It shows that our people are greatly concerned about it, and that my State is suffering because of the situation. There is urgent need for the correction of these conditions.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RICH ARKANSANS MOVE TO TEXAS, SAVE BIG SUMS—REDUCE FEDERAL INCOME TAXES

(By John L. Fletcher)

TEXARKANA, May 10.—Wealthy families on the Arkansas side of this city are pulling up stakes and moving a few blocks into Texas in order to save big chunks of tax money.

A dentist said he saves $75 to $100 a month.

A merchant admitted that his tax bill has been reduced $12 a day, or $360 a month, since he transferred his residence to Texas.

Any resident of Arkansas who nets $100,000 a year, and whose spouse contributes nothing to his income, must pay $12,996 more in Federal income tax than a Texan who earns the same amount.

Some Arkansas families are effecting similar savings by moving their homes to Oklahoma or Louisiana. These bordering States are among nine which enjoy community-property laws.

A community-property State permits husband and wife to divide their income equally when computing income taxes. If the husband were required to pay the high rate on his $100,000 income, his Federal income tax bill would be $63,954. When each spouse reports $50,000 income, the rate is reduced and the total tax is only $50,958.

Arkansas has no community-property statute. A husband whose wife does not earn a salary must pay the higher rate on the entire income.

Although this discrimination has been in effect for years, many residents of Arkansas did not know it until their incomes began to swell during the war.

COMMUNITY-PROPERTY STATES HAVE BIG ADVANTAGE

The following table shows the advantage held by community-property States:

Surtax net income	Non-community-property State	Community-property State	Difference in Federal income tax

BUSINESSMEN AGREE DISCRIMINATION IS UNFAIR

Among Arkansas business and professional men who have moved to the Texas side recently are Arthur Temple, president of the Southern Pine Lumber Co.; Dr. L. P. Good, Dr. George W. Parson, and Dr. Rowe Smith.

Dr. Smith, a dentist, said he moved only 8 blocks into Texas to save $75 to $100 a month.

"The discrimination is unfair," he said. "Every citizen of the United States owes an equal obligation to the Government. But none should be required to pay more taxes than others of the same income bracket.

"At our chamber of commerce meetings we have made it plain that Arkansas residents don't want to deprive community-property States of their tax laws but we want the same privileges.

"A businessman can remain on the Arkansas side and reduce his income taxes by giving his wife and children part of his firm's stock but a professional man or a wage earner has no stock to distribute and, therefore, must pay a higher rate than his neighbor across the State line."

Several former Arkansans said they will be able to pay for new homes in Texas with money saved from Federal income taxes in 2 or 3 years. The new North Texarkana residential area in Bowie County, Tex., was developed by men who desire to reduce their income taxes and escape the high ad valorem tax in Texarkana, Tex.

ARKANSAS SUFFERS, VALUE OF REAL ESTATE AFFECTED

The Arkansas side was known as the city's residential district until a few years ago. Now wealthy families are building new homes, including one that will cost $75,000 in Texas.

"The significant thing is that the trend is away from Arkansas," said President Steuart Wilson of the State National Bank. "Many of these beautiful new homes would have been built in Arkansas had the tax laws been equal."

Real-estate values have been affected. A banker, lawyer and realtor agreed that a house and lot on the Texas side will cost $1,500 to $3,000 more than identical property across the street in Arkansas. The difference in price becomes marked above the $6,000 class of homes.

C. E. Palmer, publisher of the Texarkana Gazette and a chain of Arkansas newspapers, has enjoyed the advantages of Texas laws for many years. He said he did not move to Texas to save income taxes.

"But the community-property law is an equitable one," he said. "I have seen the time, however, when the income tax rate made no difference in my business. Those were the lean years."

Texas has had a community-property law since it was admitted to the Union. It was an old Spanish right which it retained to itself. Texas has no State income tax, but this slight advantage over Arkansas is not great enough to cause a high fever.

Texas has no sales tax and its gasoline and cigarette taxes are lower than those in Arkansas. The latter State's legislature, recognizing this inequality, has enacted laws permitting merchants in a border city to collect a tax no higher than their competitors across the line.

Texas filling stations, however, take advantage of the higher gasoline tax in the rest of Arkansas. Signs on the Texas side warn tourists to: "Fill up before entering Arkansas."

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, when the parliamentary situation permits, I shall offer the amendments which I have discussed this afternoon.

APPLICATION OF CERTAIN FEDERAL STATUTES TO SPECIAL COMMITTEE COUNSEL

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, on April 28, Senate Joint Resolution 107, dealing with the authorization to employ special counsel for the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program was passed. On the same date the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] entered a motion to reconsider the passage of the joint resolution.

I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside so that we may consider the motion of the Senator from Michigan, and also that an amendment may be offered to the joint resolution. I think the question is susceptible of easy disposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 107) limiting the application of provisions of Federal law to counsel employed under Senate Resolution 46.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MILLIKIN. As I understand, the request of the Senator from Maine would not result in displacing the tax bill or preventing further consideration of it today, and would not interfere with the vote on Monday, as agreed.

Mr. BREWSTER. That certainly is not my desire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would not interfere at all with the status of the unfinished business.

Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, at the proper time it is desired to offer an amendment to the joint resolution, on page 2, line 5, after the words "shall be deemed to", to strike out "authorize such counsel" and insert "limit, curtail, or augment any existing authority in such committee or its counsel."

That amendment is the result of a discussion with the committee and with all concerned. It clarifies the picture which was presented by some doubts which were raised in the message from the President.

It is believed by the committee that this language will overcome any possible objections thereto and will fully clarify the situation, so that the authority of the committee and of its counsel will be in no way affected for better or for worse by the action of the Senate and the House if they shall concur in agreeing to the new measure which is here proposed.

The matter has been under discussion with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], senior minority member of the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, who, I think, can indicate his own views in the matter.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I think it is the same amendment which we discussed in the committee, and our general understanding is that the only purpose of the amendment is to make certain that whatever rights the committee may now have under existing laws shall not be changed, modified, or repealed by the adoption of this resolution.

Mr. BREWSTER. That is the understanding, and that was particularly true in view of the resolution which the Senate adopted by single action some 15 years ago, I think, on the motion of the late Senator from Missouri, Mr. Reed, which authorized the Senate to bring actions in behalf of the United States on its own motion. Whether that resolution is valid and what would be its effect we do not care now to discuss. We were not even conscious of it when the original measure was proposed, and we felt that we should leave the situation exactly as it is. If the resolution has validity and power, it is effective; if not, it is not effective. The purpose of the language proposed in the amendment was that there would be no question as to any change in existing law.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, I should like to ask one more question. The joint resolution which we passed several weeks ago did correct, did it not, the objections which were pointed out in the President's veto message?

Mr. BREWSTER. That is correct. As to whether it is valid or not we might argue here endlessly. It seemed better, in the interest of orderly action, that, rather than argue about the matter, we dispose of it, since none of us had ever contemplated that any of the difficulties which were anticipated would be the result of the legislation.

Mr. HATCH. I recall that the joint resolution was passed by the Senate, and later a motion to reconsider was submitted. Has that motion ever been disposed of? I am trying to clarify the parliamentary situation.

Mr. BREWSTER. Unanimous consent has been asked to have the motion taken up. I have submitted the matter to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], and I am glad he is now in the Chamber. Since he made the motion to reconsider, I understand that the proper parliamentary procedure would be for him to request that it be now considered by the Senate, and I understood he was ready to do that.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, on April 28, 1947, the joint resolution in question was passed. At that time I deemed it advisable to ask for a reconsideration, because I was of the opinion that the joint resolution as then passed was not properly worded and would not properly protect the activities of the committee in the future. Since that time we have prepared certain phraseology which is to be offered as an amendment to Senate Joint Resolution 107, if it is reconsidered. I do not think there will be any objection to the amendment.

When I moved to reconsider I felt that, rather than to allow Senate Joint Resolution 107 to pass, the Senate should vote to override, or not to override, the veto as the Senate might determine. At no time, as I understand, have any of the majority members of the committee or any members of it desired to take over activities of the Department of Justice or of the Attorney General of the United States. The executive branch of the Government has its job to do as well as has the legislative branch. If it had not been for the fact that the Senate had passed resolutions similar to the one which was vetoed, I would have felt that the Attorney General was trying to protect his particular office. It appears, since the Republicans became the majority party, the Department is more active to preserve its rights. I hope it will retain all its rights and that it will use very effectively those which it retains; but I feel strongly that the Senate of the United States, through its committees, should have full power to carry out the investigatory power lodged in it, because if that be not done we cannot properly perform our functions as the policy-making branch of the Government to determine what laws should be passed and what laws should not be passed.

So I want to say that should there be any wording in the resolution which would take from the committee one particle of power which it now has under the existing law, I would be the first to propose proper legislation by which we would be able to perform each and every one of our functions.

It is not my purpose to take away any rights from either the Congress or the Attorney General. I think their respective rights should be preserved. But should we find in the future that there is an attempt on the part of the executive branch to interfere with the rights of the committee to investigate the war effort, then, as a Member of the Senate, I would come back to this body and request that action be taken to assure that every power the Senate or the Congress could legitimately bestow be granted the committee so as to enable it to conduct a full and complete investigation. Time alone will tell whether or not there will be any attempts made to stifle the investigation by the committee. But should that be the case, and should any road blocks be placed in the way of the committee, I know that each member of the committee will feel that he should come back here and ask for full authority. As I say, should there be any further road blocks in the way of an investigation, I want the Senate to feel that I shall return to advocate the right to a full and complete investigation.

I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the motion which I entered on April 28 to reconsider the votes by which Senate Joint Resolution 107 was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan? The Chair hears none, and the question is on the motion to reconsider.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is again before the Senate, and is open to amendment.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed in line 5, on page 2, after the words "shall be deemed to", to strike out the words "authorize such counsel" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "limit, curtail, or augment any existing authority in such committee or its counsel."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON].

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan was not here when I propounded this question to the Senator from Maine. In order that he may have a thorough understanding, let me say that it is my understanding that the amendment which he has proposed is to strike out certain words, and the language which he seeks to add changes the resolution only to the extent of making certain that the committee or its counsel retain whatever authority they may now have under present or existing law?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes; under present existing law.

Mr. HATCH. It adds nothing to present or existing law.

Mr. FERGUSON. But it makes certain that there is no repeal of any existing law or authority inherent to the committee or previously given to it.

Mr. HATCH. That is simply stating the same proposition in the reverse.

Mr. FERGUSON. Nor does it provide an implied repeal of any existing authority or law, other than as stated therein.

Mr. HATCH. That is agreeable.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. But that is not all; it includes counsel.

Mr. FERGUSON. Oh, yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have no objection to what the committee does; but to authorize counsel, independently of the committee, to do a number of things, should not be permitted, in my opinion.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, the counsel has no authority which the committee does not have.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, if I may answer, let me say that the language the Senator has inserted does not authorize anything. It merely retains what may exist either in counsel or in the committee.

Mr. FERGUSON. That is correct; but it makes sure that nothing is repealed or taken away.

Mr. CONNALLY. I think there is a great deal of difference between a committee and its counsel. I do not object to giving a committee authority to do things, but I am not in favor of authorizing counsel to do many things independently of the committee.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I think the history of this matter indicates that the committee conducts the business of the committee, and has counsel as its representative, and he does the things he is authorized to do, and appears where he is authorized to appear. I think the chairman of the committee will confirm that statement.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I think I can clear up what is in the mind of the Senator from Texas. Counsel is mentioned here because this is a special act dealing especially with our counsel, a former distinguished colleague, under circumstances which the Senator from Texas knows. That is why the word "counsel" is included. However, under this joint resolution, he receives no power which he does not already possess.

Mr. CONNALLY. But why should we permit the counsel to do things on his own?

Mr. BREWSTER. Because this measure deals entirely with permission to employ counsel under circumstances in which the committee would not otherwise be authorized to employ such counsel. We wish to make it clear that although we make this exception to the general rule in respect to permitting the employment of counsel, for reasons which the Senator understands, yet such counsel will receive no power which he would not otherwise possess.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator for his unilluminating exposition of a foggy mind. [Laughter.]

Mr. BREWSTER. I certainly cannot agree with the foggy mind of the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 107) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That nothing in section 109 or section 113 of the Criminal Code (U. S. C., 1940 edition, title 18, secs. 198 and 203), or in section 361, section 365, or section 366 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 5, secs. 306, 314, and 315), or in any other provision of Federal law imposing restrictions, requirements, or penalties in relation to the employment of persons, the performance of services, or the payment or receipt of compensation in connection with any claim, proceeding, or matter involving the United States, shall apply with respect to counsel to the special committee of the Senate serving under the provisions of S. Res. 46, Eightieth Congress, first session, adopted January 22, 1947: Provided, however, That nothing contained herein shall be deemed to limit, curtail, or augment any existing authority in such committee or its counsel, to initiate, prosecute, maintain, defend, or otherwise dispose of any claim, action, proceeding, or matter, civil or criminal, on behalf of the United States.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I desire to advert to the discussion which has just taken place in regard to the joint resolution which passed the Senate. I wish to make it as clear as I possibly can that there is nothing in the measure which confers any authority whatsoever. All it does is to remove certain restrictions and limitations of Federal law; and the present language of the joint resolution only seeks to retain in the committee, and in its counsel, for that matter, whatever power they now possess under Federal law. It grants no authority or power whatsoever either to the committee or to the counsel.

I am absolutely correct in that statement; am I not? I propound that question to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I doubt whether our discussion after the passage of the joint resolution would be regarded as legislative history. I think the Senator is correct in saying that the joint resolution does not purport to grant any authority; it simply tries to restrict the taking away of any authority.

DESTRUCTION OF SURPLUS POTATOES

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, yesterday there was a discussion, inaugurated by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], concerning the disposal or destruction of certain potatoes in the State of Alabama. At that time I stated that I do not come from a State in which potatoes are produced on a commercial basis and I do not have much knowledge of the situation regarding potatoes. I did ask certain Senators who then were present and had some knowledge of the subject to make statements regarding it. The distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND], who now is in the Chamber, and the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, who also was present at that time, pointed out the existing situation with respect to the destruction and disposal of potatoes in the Southern States, and I think their statements clarify the situation.

However, today I wish to give a somewhat more comprehensive review of the entire potato situation. Let me say that the memorandum which I shall now read was furnished to me by the Department of Agriculture, and it clearly sets forth the entire program, and supplies information which I myself did not possess. The memorandum reads as follows:

MEMORANDUM ON POTATO PRICE SUPPORT 1946 PROGRAM

Under what is commonly known as the Steagall amendment, the Department of Agriculture supports the price of any Steagall commodity at not less than 90 percent of parity for two full calendar years after the formal declaration of the end of hostilities. A Steagall commodity is any farm commodity for which increased production was formally requested by the Department during the war. Potatoes are such a commodity. And so—with the end of hostilities formally declared by President Truman as of December 31, 1946—the Department is under statutory obligation to support the price of potatoes at not less than 90 percent of parity until December 31, 1948.

The fact that this obligation was causing the Department serious marketing problems in connection with the 1946 potato crop and might cause even more serious problems in connection with other crops in 1947 was called to the attention of Congress by Secretary of Agriculture Clinton P. Anderson in November 1946 and again in January 1947. In his statement to the House Committee on Agriculture on January 22, 1947, Secretary Anderson said: "In November I addressed a letter to the then chairman and ranking minority members of the Agriculture Committees in both the House and the Senate in which I discussed the whole question of price-support policy and the objectives of price-support legislation and urged thorough consideration of the problems that have arisen in this connection. Nothing has happened to make consideration of these problems any less urgent. In fact, the urgency has increased with the declaration by the President of the termination of hostilities and the certainty that price supports of the Steagall amendment will end after two full years."

Hence, the fact that large quantities of 1946-crop potatoes were purchased by the Department of Agriculture, and that some of them were "dumped," should occasion no surprise. Nor should we be surprised at the recent report that a small quantity of 1947-crop potatoes has been purchased by the Department and destroyed after futile attempts to find any possible use for them. The Department is merely carrying out sound support provisions, which require that American farmers be protected against unfairly low prices during the period of reconversion from the all-out levels of production required by the war.

Even though every conceivable step was taken by the Department to find some possible use for the surplus potatoes from the 1946 crop, waste of part of the surplus could not be avoided. Despite lowered production goals for the 1946 crop, a combination of many factors—the use of better seed, the employment of new and improved insecticides, and ideal growing conditions throughout the Nation—all coincided to produce a record potato crop of nearly 475,000,000 bushels. This was from ninety to one hundred million bushels in excess of the production goal set early in the year and nearly 50,000,000 bushels more than the large crop of 425,000,000 bushels in 1945 when there was considerable difficulty in marketing a crop even of this size.

The various steps taken by the Department to dispose of the 1946 crop with a minimum of waste and expense to the Government are described briefly in the following paragraphs:

DISTRIBUTION THROUGH NORMAL TRADE OUTLETS

The Department of Agriculture recognized early in the year that a bumper crop would be harvested and made immediate preparations to assist all branches of the distributive food trades in moving these potatoes through normal channels of distribution into human consumption. From the outset of the problem in 1941, the Department cooperated fully with the food industry in moving potatoes. This industry-Government cooperation is estimated to have resulted in a substantial increase in consumption of potatoes during at least part of the year.

DISTRIBUTION THROUGH SCHOOL-LUNCH PROGRAM

As the potato harvest progressed northward from the early producing Southern States, it became impossible for normal food-distribution channels to handle the enormous potato supplies. The Department followed an aggressive and continuing program of moving potatoes into its school-lunch program and to charitable institutions.

I digress here to state that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] raised the point yesterday about using potatoes for charitable, tax-free institutions, exactly what the Department of Agriculture did to a large extent, and as much as possible, with the surplus crop of 1946.

To these outlets potatoes were furnished free, as in past years. During the last year nearly 3,000,000 bushels of potatoes were so utilized.

EXPORT OUTLETS

Every effort was made to get these potatoes to hungry people abroad. They were offered at nearly token prices—as low as 4 cents per hundred pounds—for relief feeding abroad. In addition, a subsidy program was set up under which private exporters were able to send potatoes to South America and the Philippines, as well as other countries. By May of 1947 about 10,500,000 bushels, which was more than 10 percent of the total surplus, had been exported to points as widely separated as Italy and Korea, Germany and China.

DIVISION EFFORTS

When outlets to human consumption became clogged the Department pressed a program of diverting surplus potatoes to livestock feed, so that the potatoes would eventually take their place in the form of meat and milk in the human diet. Potatoes for use as livestock feed, for feeding dairy cattle, and for fattening beef cattle and hogs, were made available at prices that ranged from 20 cents per hundredweight f. o. b. at country shipping points to a penny a hundredweight. Through this program the Department moved approximately 11,000,000 bushels of potatoes.

The Department, in its efforts to find a practical utilization for the potatoes, also made another estimated 10,500,000 bushels available to starch mills manufacturing starch for use both in the United States and abroad.

The greatest diversion of potatoes that otherwise would have been completely wasted was to the distillers of beverage and industrial alcohol.

In this connection I will say that a distinguished Senator, who I believe is on the floor at this time, though I do not know whether he is giving heed to my remarks, asked me yesterday with regard to this very question. He said, "My goodness, I understand potatoes can be used in producing alcohol." That is exactly what has been done.

Then we come to export outlets:

Into these outlets the Department moved around 30,000,000 bushels of potatoes.

Thus, by exploiting diversion outlets to the fullest possible extent, the Department was able to find effective use for nearly 65,000,000 bushels of the approximately 90,000,000 to 100,000,000 bushel surplus.

ESTIMATED LOSS

The Department believes, according to preliminary figures, that in the course of handling this all-time record crop of potatoes, there was a resulting waste of something like 22,000,000 bushels. Roughly, this is about what Department officials had estimated earlier as a probable figure of waste and shrinkage. In view of the size of the crop, it was believed that no practical use could be found for some 20 percent of the surplus potatoes. Every effort was made, however, to keep this waste and shrinkage to a minimum and to confine it to low grade and inferior quality potatoes, which customarily would encounter difficulties in finding a market.

The over-all cost to the Government under the mandatory support program has been estimated at $100,000,000. Of this amount the Department will recover about $20,000,000, leaving a net cost to the Government of approximately $80,000,000.

1947 PROGRAM

Recognizing that a combination of better cultural practices and a pronounced shift of potato acreage from low- to high-producing areas promised continued high yields per acre, the Department tightened its potato program for 1947.

THE GOAL

The program called for a reduction in national acreage from 2,669,800 to 2,517,000 acres, and set up acreage quotas within which potato growers must remain in order to be eligible for price support. This was done after a study of data that revealed yields per acre had been increasing at a more rapid rate than had been earlier estimated—at a time when potato acreage has been declining nationally. The 1947 goal in production is 375,000,000 bushels.

Another significant factor is that per capita consumption of potatoes has been declining as national food habits turned from heavy breakfasts, and the potato at other meals competed with other vegetables readily made available both through better transportation facilities and the avenue of processed foods.

PROGRAM EMPHASIZES QUALITY

The 1947 potato price-support program emphasizes further that removal of potatoes from food channels will be limited insofar as possible to the lower grade and inferior quality potatoes which growers have historically found difficulty in marketing.

That corroborates what the Senator from Florida said yesterday. It also rather strongly refutes the statement made by the Senator from Colorado—and I am sorry he is not present—that the potatoes which were destroyed in Alabama were the same kind for which we pay 10 cents a pound in the city of Washington. That, I am sure, is clearly an error. The potatoes which were destroyed were only the lower grade, inferior quality potatoes, for which there was no market at all.

This will be accomplished by Government purchase of lower grades, and through marketing agreements and orders, and will result in the consumer obtaining better quality potatoes.

DISPOSAL EFFORTS

As distribution in commercial channels fails to handle all marketable potatoes, the Department will continue, under the 1947 program, to make available for school lunch, for charitable institutions and organizations, all the potatoes these outlets can handle. These potatoes will be furnished free.

Export operations will also continue, to the extent that supplies warrant such operations, as will diversion to stockfeed and manufacturing plants.

COMPLIANCE WITH 1947 GOALS

Farmers generally seem to be staying within their 1947 acreage goals, according to reports up to this time. It was anticipated that there would be, however, some local surpluses in the early and intermediate potato-producing areas, due to adverse spring weather. Because of delaying weather, potato harvests in these areas may tend to bunch up and overlap this year, instead of coming on in an orderly area by area manner.

DISPOSAL OF LOCAL SURPLUS

One such circumstance has been encountered this month in Alabama. There a supply of about 28,500 bushels of early potatoes beyond usual needs developed. Of this amount, 21,000 bushels were distributed to school lunch and institutions.

Mr. President, I call special attention to the fact that of 28,500 bushels, 21,000 have been distributed to the school-lunch programs and to charitable institutions. For the others, No. 2 and B grade potatoes, every avenue of possible practical use was explored. It was determined that there were no dehydration facilities available. The point was made yesterday that these potatoes should have been dehydrated, but unfortunately the facilities for doing that were not available. It was determined also—that farmers with good pasture did not wish to experiment with feeding these potatoes to their livestock. The potatoes are thin-skinned and of such high water content that export was not feasible. Freight charges precluded sending these potatoes north for use in starch plants. Alcohol plants were not interested in so small an amount of potatoes. Their use of potatoes is predicated upon a continuing supply.

All avenues of practical disposition having been explored, and no practical use being found for the 7,500 bushels of potatoes remaining, there was no recourse but to dump them. This ultimate, and seemingly wasteful, disposition of the smaller portion of the local surplus of Alabama potatoes is a practice historically followed by all potato producers. When the producer finds his market glutted, he ordinarily brings to market his best potatoes and abandons the lower grades, frequently leaving them in the ground to save the labor cost.

In other areas, as in Alabama, every effort will be made to get 1947 crop potatoes into human consumption. Following that, every avenue through which the potatoes may be put to some practical use, for stock feed or manufactured products, will be explored before a single bushel of potatoes is dumped. The only potatoes that will be so disposed of, if that is the only recourse, will be potatoes of low grade and inferior quality which would not ordinarily appear in food channels. These are the potatoes which have been showing up in news pictures. If there are more local surpluses which cannot be utilized, more of these "dramatic" pictures may appear.

Waste of these potatoes under the conditions of several years ago would attract little attention. Surpluses were normally used as livestock feed or were left in the ground, with the potato growers taking a financial beating. It is only the fact of a government operation which makes headlines. This, however, does not alter at all the fact that farmers are entitled to reconversion protection, on a basis comparable with the protection given industry. Such protection from price collapse is in the interests of the whole national economy, as well as that of the farmer himself.

Mr. President, I am happy to have obtained this information so that it could be made a part of the record; for, as I said yesterday, Secretary Anderson, who comes from my State, and with whom I have been intimately acquainted for many years, is a man who does not at all believe in any doctrine of scarcity or waste, especially wanton or willful destruction. I knew that when the potato question arose, Secretary Anderson had used every possible effort to put potatoes where preferably they could reach ultimate human consumption; if not, that they could be disposed of through other channels.

RECESS

Mr. WHITE. I know of no Senator who desires at this time to discuss either the motion to postpone, offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], or the tax bill itself. I therefore move that the Senate now stand in recess, in accordance with its previous order.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 13 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess, the recess being, under the order previously entered, until Monday, May 26, 1947, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 23 (legislative day of April 21), 1947:

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

Emmet O'Neal, of Kentucky, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of the Philippines.

IN THE ARMY

DEAN OF THE ACADEMIC BOARD, UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY

Prof. (Col.) Harris Jones, United States Army, to be dean of the academic board of the United States Military Academy with the rank of brigadier general, Regular Army, under the provisions of section 3 of an act of Congress approved June 26, 1946 (Public Law 449, 79th Cong.), vice Brig. Gen. Roger Gordon Alexander, United States Army, who retires August 31, 1947.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE REGULAR ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES

To be major generals

Lt. Gen. Alvan Cullom Gillem, Jr. (brigadier general, U. S. Army) Army of the United States, vice Maj. Gen. Wilhelm Delp Styer, United States Army, retired April 30, 1947.

Lt. Gen. Wade Hampton Haislip (brigadier general, U. S. Army), Army of the United States, vice Maj. Gen. Clarence Self Ridley, United States Army, who retired June 30, 1947.

Lt. Gen. Walton Harris Walker (brigadier general, U. S. Army), Army of the United States, vice Maj. Gen. Ira Clarence Eaker, United States Army, who retires July 31, 1947.

Lt. Gen. Hoyt Sanford Vandenberg (brigadier general, U. S. Army), Army of the United States, vice Maj. Gen. James Eugene Chaney, United States Army, who retires July 31, 1947.

Lt. Gen. George Edward Stratemeyer (brigadier general, U. S. Army), Army of the United States, vice Maj. Gen. Jonathan Mayhew Wainwright, who retires August 31, 1947.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, MAY 23, 1947

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, who art the hope of the world and our Heavenly Father, have mercy to forgive whatever is amiss in us, that with pure hearts and willing minds we may turn to Thee for guidance and succor. We pray that the will may defy all fear, and that the dignity and majesty of life may sweep our souls onward to an immortal destiny.

O may we learn from the book of ancient faith the duty and joy of righteous deeds:

"Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful. But his delight is in the law of the Lord, and in his law doth he meditate day and night. And he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season; his leaf also shall not wither, and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper."

Thus may we plant our souls, enriched by the flowing tides of the river of life.

We pray in the Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 236. An act to amend the Nationality Act of 1940 so as to permit naturalization proceedings to be had at places other than in the office of the clerk or in open court in the case of sick or physically disabled individuals;

H. R. 384. An act for the relief of W. H. Baker and Walter Baker;

S. 1022. An act to authorize an adequate White House Police force;

S. 1073. An act to extend until June 30, 1949, the period of time during which persons may serve in certain executive departments and agencies without being prohibited from acting as counsel, agent, or attorney for prosecuting claims against the United States by reason of having so served;

S. 1135. An act to extend for 1 year certain provisions of section 100 of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended, relating to the authority of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to enter into leases for periods not exceeding 5 years;

S. 1230. An act to amend sections 2 (a) and 603 (a) of the National Housing Act, as amended;

S. J. Res. 64. Joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim the 9th of October of each year as Leif Erikson Day;

S. J. Res. 78. Joint resolution designating September 17 of each year as Constitution Day;

S. J. Res. 92. Joint resolution designating April 5 of each year as Booker T. Washington Day; and

S. J. Res. 115. Joint resolution authorizing the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to continue and establish offices in the territory of the Republic of the Philippines.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 1288. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to grant a private right-of-way to Roscoe L. Wood; and

H. R. 3029. An act to provide for the acquisition of a site and for preparation of plans and specifications for a courthouse to accommodate the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia and the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 854. An act to amend section 502 (a) of the act entitled "An act to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3245) entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 7 and 13 to the above-entitled bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. COLE of Missouri asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial entitled "Timely Observations," from the St. Joseph News-Press of St. Joseph, Mo., written by Arthur V. Burrowes, editor of the News-Press.

STOP WASTING POTATOES

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Speaker, the present policy of the Agriculture Department in destroying potatoes on the pretense of the market being glutted is unjustified and unsound. My attention has been called to pictures appearing in the Arkansas Gazette and Memphis Commercial Appeal depicting the destruction of 50 tons of Irish potatoes in Baldwin County, Ala. Kerosene was poured over these potatoes to assure that they would not be edible. Not since the killing of the pigs back in the Wallace era as head of the Department of Agriculture has so much protest and condemnation come from an aroused citizenry. Their opposition to throwing away this food is well founded and they have a right to be concerned.

I do not believe that the officials of the Production and Marketing Administration of the Department of Agriculture have put forth sufficient effort to find a solution to this problem. It is unquestioned that food is badly needed the world over. People are suffering in many lands, including America, because of insufficient and proper food for the nourishment of their bodies. These potatoes can very easily be dehydrated and shipped to Europe where the starving peoples of many nations would make good use of them. There are sufficient plants to do this work.

There are many in our own land who would enjoy the opportunity of eating some of these surplus potatoes. I would suggest to the officials of the Department of Agriculture that they be made available for use in the school-lunch program. A hot lunch of potatoes for our boys and girls of school age would be most wholesome and energy building. These potatoes are needed for American children.

The wanton destruction of these fine potatoes should not have occurred and should not be tolerated again. I am asking the gentleman from Minnesota, Chairman ANDRESEN, of the Agriculture Food Committee of the House, to go to the bottom of this matter and put an end to dumping potatoes in a field and pouring kerosene over them. This committee should also find out whether the Department of Agriculture has plans for the destruction of other commodities. Action is needed to stop this outlandish waste.

TOWNSEND PLAN AND TAX REVISION

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, the time is long overdue for a revison of our tax structure. There has been much agitation for this, particularly so at this time. Our present tax structure is inequitable. There is no reason why people in low-income brackets should have to pay any tax. The struggle for a livelihood in these days of high living costs makes it an injustice for the Government to take one penny from this group.

I earnestly urge that the Ways and Means Committee, in its study of revising the tax structure, give thorough consideration to the features of the Townsend plan, the move to increase pensions for people who have reached the age of retirement, whether voluntary or involuntary. Their income should be sufficient to support them in dignity and comfort. There has been a crying need for such legislation, and it looms larger each day. The time has come when people are being discharged from their employment when they reach the age of 50 and 55, and many industries will not hire men over 45. Are these people then to be thrown on the charity of their friends?

To me this is one of our outstanding national problems, because the life expectancy of the individual has been increasing rapidly in the last years due to scientific and medical advances. If our older people were assured of security after retirement, it would mean greater opportunities for the younger group.

The question of raising funds for such a program of security through taxation is one which should be deliberated carefully. The plan offered by Dr. Townsend is worthy of consideration, but whatever plan is adopted, the paramount concern of the Committee on Ways and Means and the Congress should be the interest and welfare of people who have reached the age of 55 and who are now figuratively consigned to the scrap heap. Nothing could improve the social conditions of this country so much as this approach. I hope the Ways and Means Committee will take cognizance of the need of this group and of the resultant welfare of all of our people.

Security, which is a strong weapon against communism, is measured out in the Townsend plan in that it prevents apprehension at approaching 50 years of age. There are millions in this country who are alarmed and distressed as they reach that age, because they know they will be discarded by industry and will be victims of charity if they have been unable to build up a reserve for their later years. We frequently overlook the value of providing security for our people, though history will show that people will sacrifice their liberty for security. That is the condition in Russia today—there they talk about their security, not their freedom.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KELLEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. PATMAN (at the request of Mr. RAYBURN) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

PLANS FOR COURTHOUSE FOR COURT OF APPEALS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 3029) to provide for the acquisition of a site and for preparation of plans and specifications for a courthouse to accommodate the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia and the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 3, line 9, strike out "title" and insert "act."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ANSWERING HENRY WALLACE'S ATTACK

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, on last night the California speech of Henry Wallace attacking me, Martin Dies, Mr. Thomas of New Jersey, President Truman, and the Committee on Un-American Activities, was rebroadcast to the American public.

As I said on yesterday, I agree with the man who said he thought that what Henry Wallace needs is a mental examination.

When he attacks President Truman, assails the patriotism of Martin Dies, and lines up with the Communist Party to abuse the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. THOMAS]—when he lines up with the Communists who are trying to undermine America and attacks me because of my work in creating the Committee on Un-American Activities and keeping it alive—I say, when he lines up with the un-American elements and uses the radio to broadcast his un-American propaganda, it is time that the American Congress did something about the misuse of the radio throughout this country for that purpose.

One of the greatest services I have ever rendered my country was getting through the amendment to create the Committee on Un-American Activities, which is doing more to protect the American home, to protect American institutions, and to protect the Constitution of the United States and protect the country as a whole from the Communists, their crooks, cranks, crackpots, and fellow travelers than any other agency in America.

I am proud of the part I played in thus helping to protect my country against the enemies within our gates.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a radio address.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—EXTENSION OF SECOND WAR POWERS ACT (H. DOC. NO. 266)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

In March of this year the Congress passed and I approved a bill known as the First Decontrol Act of 1947, extending for 3 months a few of the powers originally granted in the Second War Powers Act. This extension was authorized to enable the Congress to make a further review of the specific controls needed during the coming year.

Since the enactment of this law, the interested departments have reexamined the need for continuation of these powers. Their review shows that it is still essential to maintain certain limited materials controls, in order to prevent harm to our own economy and give concrete support to our foreign policy.

Since VJ-day, American industry, agriculture, and labor have established notable production records. If production abroad had reached similar heights, no materials controls at all would be needed today. But the progress of world reconstruction has been necessarily difficult and slow. In a few respects the United States has been adversely affected by this delay, and therefore, in a few instances, controls over certain imported commodities are still needed. However, any adverse effects suffered by us are slight in comparison with the tragic conditions of life faced by most countries of the world today. It is primarily because of these conditions, with their enormously important political and social repercussions, that we must still retain a very limited portion of our wartime powers over materials.

The remaining powers which it is necessary to retain fall into two groups:

First. Allocation and priority powers to maintain the stability of our economy.

(a) While our economy is still hampered by the lack of a number of imported materials, there are only a few in which the lack is so serious and the importance so great that continued controls are required. The need in these cases is well known. Specifically, it is necessary to continue the power to allocate the following imported materials: Tin and tin products, manila and agave fibers and cordage, antimony, cinchona bark, quinine, and quinidine. Except in the case of tin products, where the allocation of tin plate is also essential to the solution of world food problems, the continuation of these controls is solely for the purpose of assisting our own industry and agriculture.

(b) As a corollary to the above, it is also necessary to continue the power to issue export priorities for materials needed to increase the production abroad of products that we urgently need in this country. This is a matter of direct and immediate self-interest.

Second. Allocation and priority powers needed to carry out our foreign policy and to assist in world reconstruction.

(a) Foods: Our own food production has reached great heights, and our own food supplies are excellent. In contrast the food situation abroad continues to be desperate. For that reason we are actively participating in the International Emergency Food Council, which is a noteworthy example of practical international economic cooperation. Our participation in this activity conforms with our national ideals and interests. But participation is not merely a matter of words. We must be able to take the steps necessary to make certain that we do not add to the hunger of other peoples by importing more than our agreed share of scarce foods. I recommend, therefore, continued authority to maintain import controls on fats and oils and rice and rice products.

(b) Fertilizer: The world fertilizer situation is similar to, and is directly related to, the world food situation. While our own fertilizer production and consumption have risen spectacularly since the prewar period, supplies available to foreign countries have fallen sharply. This has resulted in retarded agricultural recovery, loss of food production, and consequent malnutrition over widespread areas. The lack of fertilizer is particularly acute in the case of nitrates. It is, therefore, essential that there be continued authority to restrict imports and to issue priorities for export of nitrogenous fertilizer materials.

(c) Industrial materials: In general our supply of industrial products and materials has reached the point where delays in production and delivery are no longer crucial. The pipe lines are full, or are filling up, and no general use of allocation powers is needed. But economic and political conditions in many other countries are so critical that it is necessary to continue the power to issue export priorities in special cases for key industrial items that are vitally required for reconstruction and rehabilitation. In most countries, supplies of industrial materials and products are still far short of minimum essential levels. Entirely apart from the use of priorities, the United States is furnishing substantial quantities of industrial equipment and supplies so urgently needed to reactivate the economies of these countries. However, great damage can be done by inability to obtain an occasional machine, or machine parts needed to complete a program or project. It is in such cases that priority assistance is needed. The Congress has already recognized the importance of supporting our foreign policy with financial assistance. Financial assistance alone, without occasional priority backing, may be useless in instances where speedy aid in concrete form is essential. The use of the priority powers that I am recommending would be limited to cases certified by the Secretary of State to be of high public importance and essential to the successful carrying out of the foreign policy of the United States.

In this message I have not considered it necessary to discuss certain powers originally derived from the Second War Powers Act but now covered by separate legislation; that is, the Sugar Act, the Rubber Act, and the Patman Act. I have also omitted reference to the great importance of continued authority to allocate the use of transportation equipment and facilities by rail carriers. This matter is covered by separate bills, H. R. 3152 and S. 1297, now pending before the Congress. Prompt action on these bills is urgently needed. Similarly, the Congress now has under consideration an extension of the Export Control Act. It, too, is essential in implementing our foreign policy. I also urge prompt action on this bill.

The further extension of the Second War Powers Act in the limited form described above is of direct interest to our own economy and is indispensable in supporting our international policy. The powers that I have outlined are the minimum needed to accomplish these ends. I therefore recommend that the Congress enact legislation to extend these powers for a period of 1 year.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 22, 1947.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Evidently no quorum is present.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and forty-one Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

INVESTIGATION BY COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 166, Rept. No. 444), which was referred to the House calendar and ordered to be printed:

Whereas there has been a surplus potato crop each year for the past 5 years and this surplus is increasing each year due to more yield per acre because of new and improved methods of agriculture; and

Whereas the 1946 crop-year potato surplus was more than 100,000,000 bushels, which cost the Government more than $80,000,000 in subsidies, and these subsidy payments have become perennial and will increase year by year if some solution to the yearly surplus of potatoes is not found; and

Whereas the entire 1946 surplus potato crop of 100,000,000 bushels could have been consumed advantageously in baked goods alone through the use of potato flour, or culture, thereby resulting in the saving of an $80,000,000 subsidy payment, a direct saving to every State in the Union; and

Whereas scientific tests and bakers' experiences show that potato flour, or culture, made from commercial-grade potatoes, improves the flavor and keeping qualities as well as adds to the vitamin content of bread, rolls, cakes, doughnuts, sweet food mixes and filler for food products and family flour, a factor that will tend to increase the consumption of baked goods per capita in America; and

Whereas the elimination of these commercial grades, a figure estimated by the United States Department of Agriculture at 10 percent or more, will provide the consuming public with a finer grade of potatoes, thereby increasing the potato consumption per capita; and

Whereas potato flour can be processed the year around and can be stored for 3 years or more without spoilage, which factor results in a stabilization of yearly potato crops and potato prices; and

Whereas potato flour, or culture, processed from exceptionally large surplus potato crops, can be use in mixed poultry and cattle feed and for other purposes; and

Whereas there are at present only four small potato-flour processing plants in the United States, all working to capacity, but whose limited production cannot satisfy even 5 percent of the anticipated national requirements for potato flour; and

Whereas the United States Government has a definite stake in increasing the use of potatoes through the processing and use of potato flour, and whether the Government would find it to be economical, feasible, and advisable to own and operate such plants ought to be determined to help formulate public policy: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives is authorized and directed to institute studies and hold hearings immediately to determine the feasibility and advisability of carrying out a program designed to do away with the annual potato surplus and to report its findings and recommendations to the United States Department of Agriculture.

ELECTION TO COMMITTEE

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk a privileged resolution (H. Res. 216) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That GLENN R. DAVIS, of the State of Wisconsin, be, and he is hereby elected a member of the Standing Committee of the House of Representatives on Veterans' Affairs.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JUDD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances and in each to include an article.

Mr. JAVITS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an article.

Mr. HAGEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial from the Daily Metal Reporter.

Mr. POULSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

Mr. SMATHERS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an address.

SHORT SALES OF SECURITIES BETWEEN APRIL 15 AND MAY 15 AGGREGATED 1,314,000 SHARES, PLUS MORE THAN 60,000 SHARES IN ODD LOTS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, not being able to address the House at this time, I ask unanimous consent to insert my remarks in the RECORD, and include therein certain figures and certain articles.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, on September 4, 1946, I urged the New York Stock Exchange to prohibit short selling, and I again requested the Securities and Exchange Commission to strengthen and enforce strictly the regulations governing short sales. I particularly urged that short sales on margin or on stock borrowed from brokers be prohibited. At that time the securities of sound well-managed industrial companies were being hammered down in a manner which convinced me it was being done by short selling and by manipulation of odd lots. Since election day the market price of many leading stocks has fallen off 50 percent and even 75 percent.

On May 16 of this year by telephone, and on May 19 by letter, I again called the attention of the SEC and the New York Stock Exchange to what I consider an approaching danger to our economy and prosperity. On May 21 the Wall Street Journal carried an article showing the heavy increase of short sales from April 15 to May 15; giving a total short interest of 1,314,000 shares, which does not include odd-lot short sales aggregating over 60,000 shares in that period.

DEMANDS PROHIBITION OF DETRIMENTAL MANIPULATIONS

Consequently, I took the floor yesterday to criticize this growing volume of short sales, and also the lending of customers' stocks by brokers for the purpose of market speculations. Again I demanded that all such manipulations detrimental to the national welfare be prohibited. Last Monday I wired to Emil Schram, the former chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, now the president of the New York Stock Exchange, as follows:

MAY 19, 1947.

Mr. EMIL SCHRAM,
President, New York Stock Exchange,
New York City:

Nearly all corporations show increase in their business and profits above the banner years of 1945 and 1946 and country's income last year was one hundred and sixty-five billion and estimated one hundred and seventy-five billion for 1947 which will be four and one-half times greater than in 1932. Country is generally prosperous and production, employment, crops, and profits are at highest peak and, notwithstanding publicity given out by professional and short-selling groups and a few publicists that business is sloughing off, the record shows that retail sales for the first quarter of 1947 have increased from 5 percent to 14 percent throughout the country. Consequently, in view of all these favorable indications, the public cannot understand why the prices of many stocks have been hammered down almost one-half since November while nearly all companies are showing greater profits and paying higher dividends than ever before. I feel that the Board should immediately stop all wash transactions, broker stock loans, and short selling and if that cannot be done then the immediate raising of margins to 100 percent should be effectuated.

A. J. SABATH,
Member of Congress.

REPLY FROM SCHRAM

Last night I heard over my radio that Mr. Schram had answered me in a strongly worded telegram, and this morning I received the following message from him in which he tries to unload some of the blame for the slump in the market on the Federal Reserve System, which has restricted speculative loans on securities to help restrain the inflationary trends, and only with the greatest reluctance, just a short time ago, rescinded the no-margin rule and now permits operations on a 75-percent margin.

NEW YORK, N. Y.

Hon. A. J. SABATH,
Member of Congress,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

I have your telegram. You have made a serious allegation as to manipulative activities on this exchange. I deny them and I invite you to present any factual proof that you have to us or to the Securities and Exchange Commission which is the Government agency that regulates this market. If you do not have any factual information, I think that you should, in all decency, withdraw what you have said. Reckless statements of the character you have just put out are damaging to our public institutions. Prices on this exchange are established through open transactions which represent the composite judgment of the public. Short selling is rigidly regulated under our rules and those of the Securities and Exchange Commission. Copies of these regulations are available to you. Credit regulations are in the hands of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. You can, of course, address your complaints on that score to that agency. We feel here that one of the causes of recent weakness in our market is the discriminatory restraint upon loans to millions of people who own securities listed on the national registered exchanges.

EMIL SCHRAM,
President, New York Stock Exchange.

To that message I have made the following reply:

MAY 23, 1947.

Mr. EMIL SCHRAM,
President, New York Stock Exchange,
New York, N. Y.

DEAR MR. SCHRAM: On May 19 I wired you as follows:

"Mr. EMIL SCHRAM,
"President, New York Stock Exchange,
"New York City:

"Nearly all corporations show increase in their business and profits above the banner years of 1945 and 1946, and country's income last year was 165 billion and estimated 175 billion for 1947, which will be four and one-half times greater than in 1932. Country is generally prosperous, and production, employment, crops, and profits are at highest peak, and, notwithstanding publicity given out by professional and short-selling groups and a few publicists that business is sloughing off, the record shows that retail sales for the first quarter of 1947 have increased from 5 percent to 14 percent throughout the country. Consequently, in view of all these favorable indications, the public cannot understand why the prices of many stocks have been hammered down almost one-half since November, while nearly all companies are showing greater profits and paying higher dividends than ever before. I feel that the Board should immediately stop all wash transactions, broker stock loans, and short selling, and if that cannot be done, then the immediate raising of margins to 100 percent should be effectuated.

"A. J. SABATH,
"Member of Congress."

Not receiving a reply to my telegram of May 19, I requested information on short selling from the Security and Exchange Commission. On May 21 I received partial information from the Commission and on the same day observed a report in the press that short interests from April 15 to May 15 increased 295,000 shares, exclusive of odd lot dealers sales and public small lot interest sales which confirms my fears that the shorts are again hammering the market with still greater force. Consequently, not hearing from you, I took the floor on May 22 and called attention to the fact that the same manipulations which were responsible for the crash in 1929 are now being reenacted. You resent the allegations in my telegram and ask that I withdraw them. My reply is that I have nothing to withdraw and will elaborate more fully on the situation in the near future. May I ask to what part of my telegram you object or do you have reference to the remarks which I made on the floor?

I am, I assure you, more or less familiar with many of the regulations of the Securities and Exchange Commission and of the New York Stock Exchange. I note your statement that short selling is rigidly regulated, and that the regulations of SEC are available to me. I have those regulations, and also the rules of the stock exchange. I urged the Commission last September to tighten the regulations so as to make it impossible for a few professional traders to hammer down the prices of the shares of some of the most outstanding corporations of America through shrewd manipulation in spite of the rules. Last fall, and now in the first quarter of 1947, all financial reports show unparalleled industrial and business earnings, high employment levels and consequently high purchasing power, the payment of regular dividends, and that American business is in better position than ever before. There is nothing to justify the deep decline in market values.

You state that I should address my complaints to the Federal Reserve System which you claim, is responsible because of restrictions of loans on securities. I shall, of course, as rapidly as time permits, obtain all the information I can from every agency which has any jurisdiction, including the New York Stock Exchange, the Securities and Exchange Commission, and the Federal Reserve System. Pending advices from the Federal Reserve System, I can only conjecture that the restriction on loans is being taken advantage of by the professional sellers.

I feel satisfied that my charge that short selling is detrimental to the best interest of the country and does depress the price of securities is correct and is proven by what has transpired during the past few months. I am not in the habit of damaging public institutions. I merely maintain what all economists are agreed on—that the stock exchange is the most conspicuous barometer of business conditions, and any artificial fluctuations strongly affect the public interest.

In this connection, I call upon the Securities and Exchange Commission and the New York Stock Exchange for the names of all short sellers who have traded 100 or more shares since I first raised the issue last September 4, together with their short commitments.

Sincerely yours,

A. J. SABATH,
Member of Congress.

I do not know whether or not Mr. Schram is correct in his criticism of the Federal Reserve System, or whether the Federal Reserve is justified in restricting speculative loans. I can see how limiting such loans might aid short sellers.

BILLS INTRODUCED

I have today introduced two bills intended to discourage short selling. The first would produce revenue by placing a 5 percent transaction tax on each short sale. The second would prohibit the transmission of false information about securities which would, I hope, stop all the war scares aimed at changing the market. The text of the bills follows:

A bill to provide revenue from the short sales of shares of stock, grains, cotton, or other allied agricultural commodities

Be it enacted, etc., (a) That for the purposes of this act the term "short sale" shall mean sales at, or under the rules and usages of, any stock exchange, board of trade, or similar places, of shares of stock of any corporation, joint-stock company, association, or of grains, cotton, or other allied agricultural commodities of which the seller shall not have ownership or possession, actual or constructive, at the time of such sale.

(b) For the purposes of this act the term "seller" shall mean any individual, association, partnership, or corporation and/or any agent, factor, or broker thereof who sells shares of stock of any corporation, joint-stock company, association, or grains, cotton, or other allied agricultural commodities.

SEC. 2. There shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid by the seller on each short sale a tax equal to 5 percent of the amount of said sale, which tax shall, without assessment and without notice, be due and payable to the collector of internal revenue within 10 days after the consummation of such sale.

SEC. 3. Any seller hereunder failing to pay such tax on any such short sale shall be guilty of a felony and upon conviction thereof shall, if a corporation, be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 for each offense, and all other persons convicted shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment of not more than 2 years, or both.

SEC. 4. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall make all needful rules and regulations for carrying the provisions of this act into effect.

SEC. 5. This act shall take effect on the 30th day after the date of its approval.

A bill to prohibit communication of false information with respect to securities in certain cases

Be it enacted, etc., That no person shall transmit through the mails or shall communicate in interstate commerce any false information affecting or tending to affect the price of any security listed on any stock exchange if such person knows such information to be false and transmits or communicates it for the purpose of affecting the price of such security.

SEC. 2. Any person violating section 1 of this act shall, on conviction thereof, be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 3 years, or both.

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this act—

(a) "Person" includes a partnership, association, or corporation, as well as an individual.

(b) "Communicate in interstate commerce" means to transmit by any means of communication (other than through the mails) information from one State or the District of Columbia to another State or the District of Columbia.

(c) "Stock exchange" means a regularly established place under the rules of which securities are bought and sold.

(d) "Security listed on the stock exchange" means the stock, debentures, evidences of indebtedness, interest, or ownership of or in any corporation, association, or partnership authorized, under the rules of a stock exchange, to be sold there.

ASKS NAMES OF SHORTS

I have demanded the names and commitments of all short sellers whether they are professional traders or insiders who might be aiding or cooperating with the shorts, or others; and unless I receive the names and can make them public in a reasonable time I shall introduce next week a resolution directing the SEC and the stock exchange to produce the information so that the public may know the names of these manipulators. It is generally recognized that at least 90 percent of such sales are made by professional traders. Many are wash sales.

The fact remains, however, that the stock market is regarded by the people of the country, and especially by business and industry and all financial and commercial interests, as the principal barometer of our economic well-being and when market fluctuations are caused artificially by gamblers it is bound to have a bad effect on our prosperity.

I have started this crusade because of my thorough knowledge of the reasons for the 1929 crash and my bitter memory of what followed—the terrible destruction wrought upon the country in the wake of stock-market gambling and the slow recovery from those depths. I carried on the same crusade in 1929 and in the years following and my efforts were rewarded by the passage of the Securities and Exchange Act.

As I said yesterday on the floor, had President Hoover and those in power in 1929 heeded my urgent appeals the crash and the panic which followed would have been minimized. Not only did my efforts help bring about the SEC, but I also introduced in 1930 the first bill to establish the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in the hope not only of saving banks, insurance companies, and railroads but to aid and assist all legitimate companies of the country and to help refinance the victims of the havoc brought about by the crash. Unfortunately, its passage was delayed until 1932, a Presidential campaign year.

I am now compiling my correspondence with President Hoover and his Secretary of the Treasury, his Attorney General, the then Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, and the then president, vice president, and governors of the New York Stock Exchange, together with their replies. A reading of even the abstract of that correspondence should persuade all that my position then was justified and that I am equally justified at this time to continue my effort to put an end to a situation in which a few professionals can every 12 or 15 years destroy the Nation's prosperity and bring on recession and panic. Moreover, that large exchange of correspondence should be of great interest to every American who has the interest of our country at heart, and who resist the efforts of a small coterie to destroy our prosperity for their own selfish profits.

At the same time, I am consulting the Federal Reserve Board to ascertain their position and their reaction, and I am naturally urging the recent amendment changing the so-called 100 percent margin rule to a 75 percent margin rule be rescinded and stock trading again be placed on a cash basis. Brokers have been trying for a long time to persuade the Federal Reserve Board of Governors to reduce the margin requirements to 50 percent, and I, for one, am sorry they came even halfway.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes today following the other special orders heretofore entered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOLIFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a radio address.

Mr. BUCHANAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances and in each to include editorials.

Mr. REED of Illinois asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the State of Illinois.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include certain newspaper items regarding Lieutenant Colonel Halloren of the WACS.

Mr. KEATING asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial from the Rochester Times-Union.

PROVIDING SUPPORT FOR WOOL

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 814) to provide support for wool, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 814) to provide support for wool, and for other purposes, with Mr. HARNESS of Indiana in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose yesterday the first section of the bill had been read. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. (a) The Commodity Credit Corporation is directed, through loans, purchases, or other operations to support a price to producers of wool produced (shorn or pulled) in the calendar years 1947 and 1948 in the United States and its Territories at the price not less than that which the Commodity Credit Corporation has undertaken to support wool in 1946.

(b) Notwithstanding any other provisions hereof, the Commodity Credit Corporation may adjust support prices for individual grades and qualities of wool for the purpose of bringing about a fair and equitable relationship in the support prices for the various grades and qualities of wool; and may make discounts from support prices for off-quality, inferior-grade, or poorly prepared wool.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, strike out lines 4 to 10, inclusive, and insert the following:

"SEC. 2. (a) The Commodity Credit Corporation shall continue, until December 31, 1948, to support a price to producers of wool in the continental United States and Territories at the price it supported wool in 1946."

Mr. HERTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HERTER to the committee amendment: Page 2, line 3, after the word "at", insert "90 percent of the parity price as determined by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics."

Mr. HERTER. Mr. Chairman, I agree fully with the words spoken yesterday by the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE], that what we do here today with respect to wool is going to set the pattern for our future actions in regard to agricultural products in the first instance and perhaps many other products.

The amendment I have offered is offered in the hope that the pattern we set will be a pattern that this country can sustain. The bill as now drafted provides for wool a support price which is a fixed price, a price determined by the Congress at 42.3 cents. It is a price which will not alter regardless of any changes in our economic picture. That price is approximately 100 percent of parity—a small fraction over—but, as I say, it is a fixed price. In the Steagall amendment, commodities — we have throughout determined that a variable price at not less than 90 percent of parity should be the basis on which those commodities which for war purposes were increased in production in large measure—should be given support. Wool was never a Steagall commodity, designated by the Secretary of Agriculture, but the support price it received during the war period was a price set by the OPA on a fixed level and the present bill would carry the price at that level.

What is the practical effect of the amendment I am offering? We discussed at great length the tremendous cost of subsidies, the great burden on our Treasury and the difficulties that arise with respect to tariff protection which is given to these commodities. The amendment that I offer would put the support price at roughly 2 cents under the world market price as of the present time. It would mean that wool, as a commodity, would go into the free channels of trade; it would not become a burden on the Treasury; there would be no requirement on the part of the Commodity Credit Corporation to apply the support unless there should be a very substantial drop in world prices.

The price that is fixed in this bill is a price roughly 2 cents over the world market price which means that the Commodity Credit Corporation must buy the entire clip and must then sell the entire clip at whatever price it can get for it as provided for in another section of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we have got to determine today whether or not we are going to begin to set fixed prices on commodities here in the Congress and give them support. I think, as I said yesterday when this matter was being debated under the rule, that the producer of wool in this country is entitled to support. I am strongly for that. On the other hand, I feel that the price that is asked for is an excessive price and would inevitably mean a considerable burden to the Treasury unless, under the amendment that is going to be offered by the Committee on Agriculture, the tariff on wool should be increased by the President of the United States.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERTER. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. For the sake of the RECORD, I wonder if the gentleman concurs in my figures, that the support price as given by the gentleman is 42.3.

Mr. HERTER. Correct.

Mr. PACE. Parity being 42.1.

Mr. HERTER. Correct.

Mr. PACE. Ninety percent would be 37.8.

Mr. HERTER. Correct.

Mr. PACE. The effect of the gentleman's amendment will be to reduce the support price 4½ cents.

Mr. HERTER. Correct; roughly 10 percent.

Mr. PACE. Four and one-half cents per pound.

Mr. HERTER. The gentleman is quite correct.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERTER. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That would be under the present tariff, but if the circumstances change and the parity changes, why the price would be more or less than that amount.

Mr. HERTER. That would be quite true. It is quite possible if we get a slump in price in commodities during the coming year, that this fixed price might well be 130 percent of parity rather than 90.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERTER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JUDD. Under the gentleman's amendment the wool support price would be tied to our whole economy as are other commodities rather than fixed by statute of the Congress for a year and a half; is that right?

Mr. HERTER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. JUDD. Does not the gentleman feel that those of us who have opposed trying to fix or freeze our economy and price levels by Government order ought to support this amendment so that we give equity to the wool growers, but at the same time do not throw their product out of balance with the rest of the economy, knowing it will probably change either up or down, during the next year and a half?

Mr. HERTER. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERTER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Is there any other basic commodity that there is a fixed support price on at the present time?

Mr. HERTER. There are a number of prices that are fixed, but they are fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture and not by the Congress.

Mr. McCORMACK. I meant by the Congress.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERTER. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MONRONEY. Is it a fact that most of these prices on commodities under the Steagall amendment and other Acts range around 90 percent of parity?

Mr. HERTER. That is true of a number of them. There are some where they go considerably above, where they were set by the Secretary of Agriculture, in order to stimulate production, where there was a shortage.

Mr. MONRONEY. For instance, flaxseed and other things that we had to have for world consumption.

Mr. HERTER. Yes.

Mr. MONRONEY. Is is not true that if we support wool, which is a large crop, at 100 percent of parity, as this original bill proposes to do, then we will be called upon to support every other agricultural commodity and give them the same kind of treatment?

Mr. HERTER. The gentleman is giving emphasis to the very thing I am trying to point out, that here we are setting a pattern that every other agricultural producer would have a right to insist on for his own commodity.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERTER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. OWENS. When the gentleman says, "Every other agricultural commodity" does he include truck farming also?

Mr. HERTER. It depends on which particular element of truck farming the gentleman is talking about.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERTER. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. That parity is based on the prices from 1909 to 1914, is it not?

Mr. HERTER. That is correct.

Mr. RANKIN. That was during the Taft administration, when the tariff was such a burden upon the American farmers that they revolted in every State of the Union except Vermont and Utah.

Mr. HERTER. Mr. Chairman, another phase of the economics in this picture was not brought out in the general debate at all. The income of the grower of wool, the sheep raiser, runs from 60 to 65 percent—I think I am correct in these figures—from the meat that he sells, and 35 to 40 percent from the wool that he sells. He is attempting in this bill to get his full protection on the wool, but no mention whatever has been made of getting protection on the meat prices. The studies that were brought out yesterday with respect to the economics of the wool group showed that the wool grower was losing money on each sheep that he produced. Those figures were arrived at at a time when there was a ceiling price on meat. At the present time the wool grower is getting a very much larger price for the carcass of his animal than he did at the time those figures were prepared. Further, the figures stated by the Tariff Commission were figures taken entirely from questionnaires which were sent to governmental banking and lending institutions to which the grower at the time was in hock, and did not represent a cross sample of the entire industry. I say this not in derogation of the industry itself. The industry certainly during the war period had a very difficult time with the ceiling prices on both the meat and the wool, but now the ceiling price has been lifted off the meat. The price which the wool grower is getting for his meat is an extremely good price at the present time. It seems to me that this small variation I have suggested in the support price on wool is not going to be a major factor in the economy of the wool grower.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERTER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Is it not a fact that the price of wool today is 140 percent of what the wool grower was receiving previous to 1941, while the price on the lambs is about 250 percent?

Mr. HERTER. That is correct, 250 percent for the fattened lamb. The wool grower, the ranchman, however, is not getting as good a price as that.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERTER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman feel that the sheep farmer is entitled to support for the meat, for the mutton and lamb that he produces?

Mr. HERTER. I see no reason why, if he should get support on one part, and the minority part of his product, he should not get support on the other.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. The fact that a subsidy was paid on certain classes of lamb during the war is an indication that it is entitled to support after the war.

Mr. HERTER. I am not quarreling with support for the wool grower, I am quarreling with the price at which we are setting that support.

Mr. Chairman, I hope very much my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment and ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts says he is not opposed to protection for the wool grower, but the amendment he offers, if adopted, would deny the wool grower any protection under this legislation. The figures were put in the RECORD yesterday covering the cost of producing wool in this country. These figures were compiled by the Tariff Commission over a period of years from 1940 to 1946. They are carefully worked out, authentic figures. They show that for the year 1946 the wool producers of this country lost 9½ cents a pound on an average on every pound of wool they sold.

They show that in 1945 they lost 12 cents a pound on every pound of wool that they sold.

Reference has been made to the fact that under the Steagall amendment the rate of support is 90 percent of parity. Of course, that is not correct. Under the Steagall amendment the rate of support is not less than 90 percent of parity. At the present time there are a number of commodities upon which the support price is not only in excess of 90 percent of parity, but far in excess of 90 percent of parity.

Some of the figures I am going to give are for 1946 and some are for 1947. In the cases where I use the 1946 figures the programs for 1947 have not yet been announced.

In the case of dry edible beans the support price equals 95 percent of parity.

Dry edible peas had a support price of 94 percent of parity in 1946.

Flaxseed for 1947, 154 percent of parity.

On hogs the support price for last September 15 was 94 percent of parity. On October 15, it was 91 percent of parity. The figures for this year have not yet been announced.

On soybeans the 1946 figures were 107 percent of parity.

On alfalfa seed for 1946 it is 228 percent of parity for uncertified seed and 276 for certified seed.

On Alsike clover for 1946 it was 148 percent and on red clover 163 percent for certified seed and 135 percent for uncertified seed in 1946. Other types of clover were also supported far above parity.

On sugar beets in 1946 the growers received 125.1 percent of parity. In 1947, assuming the same parity as in 1946, the growers would receive 135.9 percent of parity, and based on the present parity calculations it will be 115 percent of parity. In 1946 Louisiana sugarcane received 105.4 percent of parity and Puerto Rican sugarcane 119.5 percent of parity.

So that there is plenty of precedent, I may say, for a support price higher than 90 percent of parity.

I also want to call attention to the fact that the support price for wool under this legislation is not necessarily 42.3 cents. That was the figure for 1946, but the figures for April 1947 were 40.2, and the figures for the various years from 1943 down to date have varied by the year due to the quality and condition of the wool and the amount of shrink. So that while the support price for 1946 was 42.3, up to date this year it is only a little over 40 cents, which at the present time is 95 percent of parity.

Mr. Chairman, the wool dealers in Boston and the wool manufacturers in this country are perfectly willing for the wool producers of the country to produce wool at a loss of 9½ cents per pound while they themselves are making the greatest profit in their history.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. Not right at this point. I will yield to the gentleman a little later.

Mr. Chairman, let me cite some actual figures from Moody's Manual for Industrials. The American Woolen Mills net profit for 1940 was $3,153,500. For 1941, which was a good wool year, it was $6,944,000; and for 1946 it was $20,098,000. Pacific Mills had a deficit of $348,310 in 1940. In 1946 they had a profit of $9,502,000.

Botany Mills had a profit in 1940 of $527,481. In 1946 they had a profit of $3,802,545, at a time when the wool producers of this country were producing wool at a loss of 9½ cents per pound.

I also have some figures indicating the earnings of workers in the woolen and worsted goods industry for the period 1941 to 1947. They show that from December 1941 until February 1947 the percentage increase of average hourly earnings was 66.1 percent. The average weekly earnings showed an increase of 70 percent. The workers in the woolen industry had that increase during the time when the wool producers of this country had their prices frozen at December 1941 levels were producing wool at a loss of 9½ cents or more a pound.

I have already mentioned the great increase in profits of the specific woolen manufacturers.

Let me also call attention to a statement from the National City Bank of New York City, Study of Economic Conditions, which shows the increase in corporation profits of woolen-goods manufacturers generally. I am giving you this in terms of percentages.

In 1941, which was a good year for profits, the percent return on the net worth was 11.8 percent. Not bad. But in 1946 the percentage return on the net worth was 25.2, at a time when the wool producers were suffering a loss of 9½ cents a pound upon their wool and when they were selling at prices frozen in December 1941.

I have not been able to get any detailed figures as to the profits of the woolen merchants in Boston who are opposing this legislation, but in the Senate hearings there was placed in the record, proceeding from the Tax Court of the United States in the case of Draper & Co., one of the big wool firms in Boston, where the Government was trying to collect back taxes, which showed that for the year 1941—I am sorry I do not have later figures, because I am sure that for 1946, judged by the general trend of profits they would have been much larger—but Paul A. Draper, president and treasurer, received a basic salary of $30,000 and a bonus of $102,000 and premiums paid on annuity contracts of $29,350—a total of $161,350.

Robert W. Dana, vice president, received $18,000 basic salary, a bonus of $72,000, and $17,000 premiums paid on annuity contracts, or a total of $107,000.

Malcolm Green, vice president, who is an official in the Association of Boston Wool Merchants, which sent every Member of the House a letter saying that the wool producers should still produce wool at 9½-cents-a-pound loss—Mr. Green had a basic salary of $18,000, a bonus of $72,000, and premiums on annuity contracts of $17,579, or a total of $107,579 compensation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. George W. Brown, assistant treasurer, received total compensation of $50,000. For those four officers there was paid out total compensation of $427,268.41.

That is one company in Boston dealing in farmers' wool and vigorously opposing this bill. I have reason to believe that this statement represents no more profitable operation than those generally of the wool dealers in the Boston wool market.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman has been speaking of the income of these manufacturers during the last year. Wool was like any other commodity, the demand was so great that those who produced any kind of product could sell it; and those who wanted to take advantage of the people the way some of these companies did certainly made money. I do not believe it was wise or good business to do it. Today, however, conditions are such that about one-third of the woolen mills of the country are not in operation. Today there is a buyers' market where the people manufacturing woolen goods must go out and find a place to dispose of their products.

Mr. HOPE. As I understand, the mills are in full operation at this time.

Mr. RICH. No; they are not. The worsted mills are in full operation, but that does not apply generally throughout the woolen industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has again expired.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I suppose I have not a flock of sheep over a hundred in number in my whole district; nevertheless, I have listened to a lot of testimony on this bill and am convinced it has merit.

I think it is time the sheep growers, or shepherds, or whatever you want to call them, had a chance to be heard. They ought to receive consideration. Nevertheless, since I have served on it, this committee has voted to help everybody, all the groups and sections of agriculture in the entire country except to the best of my recollection the dairymen of the Northeast; and I think Congress ought to get busy to try to help them in the dilemma they now find themselves.

I received a letter the other day from a group of representative dairymen from home who told me that 35 percent of the income of the Northeast milk producers 100,000 of whom are in the New York milkshed and supply the metropolitan districts of New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Rochester, Albany and as far east as Boston has been cut and all the other cities up-State. Yes; 35 percent of their income has been taken away from them.

More power to the wool growers. They are getting consideration here today. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] mentioned some of the other groups yesterday which were being favored. Since I have been here this committee has voted to help the tobacco tycoons, the cotton kings, the big butter-and-egg men from the West, and a lot of others. I cannot for the life of me see why we should not be assisting farmers up there in the Northeast. Why does the Department of Agriculture keep cutting to the bone what the milk producer is receiving for his products up-State. This includes not only New York but all the other States that are connected with the New York milkshed, and they are Pennsylvania, New Jersey and some of New England. Speaking as a consumer I want to go on record as saying that the Department of Agriculture, under the leadership of the present Secretary, must do something about the spiraling prices the farmers are having to pay for their dairy feed in the New York milkshed. The millions of consumers, who live in the Northeast, compose more than one third of the population of the United States and they are served by this milk shed. Those millions of consumers are going to have great difficulty in meeting the prices which must be asked for milk and other dairy products as the result of present production costs.

I think it is only fair that we look into the forgotten section of the land, the Northeast, where all those millions of men and women need dairy products as part of the necessities of life—they should have consideration.

A friend of mine came to me the other day. He asked me how I stood on this wool bill. I replied that I am for it. He parried a little and said: "I do not know why you should be for it because it is log-rolling legislation." And he said, "A lot of these other sections will come in for their share of the grab bag if you pass this." My answer was that thinking is not applicable to the point at all. The point is that we want to help all sections of agriculture so that the great majority of the American people can enjoy a higher standard of living. By the same token as the Representative of one of the greatest dairy districts of up-State New York, I expect consideration to be given by the Department of Agriculture, not to cutting producer prices for fluid milk any further than they have been cut so far. The prices of feed are going way beyond any conception, way beyond the ability of the producers to pay. The Department ought to promise that cuts will be made in relative amounts in dairy-feed prices so that the production of dairy products, which reached an all-time peak at the time of World War II will continue on in order to feed the increased city populations. I speak as a consumer, not as a farmer; I speak as one who is interested in the price of milk to the consumer and in prices that the producers receive, because unless one is taken care of certainly the other cannot be.

If the Secretary of Agriculture has the power to lower the prices dairy producers receive for fluid milk, I say he has authority to control the costs of dairy feed so the dairyman of our section can stay in business.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pending amendment.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Chairman, as I said yesterday, we are talking now about the very heart and substance of this bill. If the pending amendment is adopted—and I speak with some knowledge of it because I have worked on the matter for 2 years—we might just as well strike the enacting clause of this measure because it certainly will not bring any relief to the wool growers. As a matter of fact, it would turn loose tomorrow all the wool the Government has on the market, and certainly it would break every wool grower in the country. It simply means—this is not a guess, it is a fact—that the adoption of this amendment would immediately drop the price of wool tomorrow by anywhere from 4½ to 6 cents a pound. I do not think the Congress of the United States wants to treat any agricultural commodity in that fashion. I hope therefore that the membership of this committee will vote against the pending amendment because it will destroy everything we are trying to do.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRANGER. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOBBS. There is one important point, it seems to me, I would like to get clearly in the RECORD one way or the other. Is it or not a fact that the base period for the calculation of the so-called parity price was exceptionally low as regards wool?

Mr. GRANGER. I thank the gentleman from Alabama for raising that question. He has stated what is the fact. Ever since the parity formula was adopted, in the years designated as a basic period for wool, a part of the period at least, it was free trade. That was in 1914, when wool was on the free list. That was part of the time when the years for the parity formula were used.

It has always been the contention of wool growers, and cattlemen for that matter, that they had a parity period that was absolutely disadvantageous to them. We have been trying to get it changed. I think the Committee on Agriculture realizes that, too. If it were not for that fact, if it had a comparable period with other prices, the parity price would be much higher.

Mr. HOBBS. So that when the gentleman speaks of the percentage of parity that is now being fixed it is of a very low parity, and, therefore, apparently increases the percentage, although, in fact, it really does not on a fair price basis?

Mr. GRANGER. That is exactly right. It would be the same thing as having foreign commodities away down in price and then putting a percentage on them, and when they are away up, there is a big percentage increase.

I trust that the committee will vote against this amendment, because it certainly would be disastrous. As I said before, and I say it honestly, that if you vote for this amendment you might just as well strike the enacting clause of this bill and not waste any more time on it.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRANGER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Did I understand the gentleman to say that in his opinion if this amendment is adopted it would forthwith reduce the price of wool to the producer 4 or 5 cents a pound?

Mr. GRANGER. Yes; that is exactly right. As a matter of fact, one of our distinguished colleagues in this House, who has a few sheep, told me only this morning that he had sold his wool at 39 cents, because of the situation we are in now. As a matter of fact, under the support program wool did sell at 45 cents, and yet he lost 6 cents a pound.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GRANGER. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. In my State we do not have a great many sheep, for we have family-sized farms. Many of those farmers have small flocks. We feed many lambs from the range and produce some sheep, but we sell much wool. Our flocks are clipped in the spring, as is usual. The spring clip of wool is in the farmer's barns, or in the storehouses. The local wool buyer who sells to, or buys for Boston, refuses to give a bid on the wool to the farmer who needs the money now, until something is done down here about the present uncertain wool market.

Mr. GRANGER. That is exactly right. Let me say this: This is not a western bill entirely. Every State in this Union has a considerable number of sheep. Take Ohio and Indiana. They have hundreds of farms with small flocks of sheep, and they are mighty good sheep, too.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Utah has expired.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, there is just an idea or two that I would like to give to the House this afternoon in opposition to this amendment that has been proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts. First of all, I think regardless of whether we live in the West, South, North, or East of this great Nation of ours. We all agree wool is undoubtedly a war casualty. I did not say "wool producers," I said, "wool" and I say that because—and I wish you would listen carefully—on December 9, 1941, 2 days after Pearl Harbor, the price of domestic wool in these United States was frozen by the administration, and it has remained under that program ever since. If you adopt this amendment that has been proposed to this House, you might just as well wipe out the whole program that we have been trying to carry on for the wool producers in this country, and in my opinion it might even go further than drop the price 4 cents per pound, because on my desk this morning is a wire from one of our—let us not call them wool producers, because they are not, they are men who buy lambs in the fall and fatten those lambs out for the market in the spring—which says that the drop in the price of wool, according to his wire, is now 16 cents per pound.

If you want to create chaos in the wool industry, pass this amendment—and that goes for the gentlemen's territory in the East as well as the West—that chaotic condition in any market, whether it is East or West or whether it is wool or whether it is wheat, absolutely affects every part, every segment of our economy, whether it is the producer, whether it is the middleman, whether it is the commission merchant, or whether it is the manufacturer. Long, long ago we passed from that position where you think you can affect one segment of our industrial machine and not affect every other interrelated segment.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman make clear to the House this 16.5-cent drop? Is that on wool or the meat?

Mr. HILL. That is on wool and has no relation to the lamb whatsoever. I wish we could distinguish here this afternoon so everyone would understand. There is no particular relation between the lamb chops and the wool when they go on the market, because the lamb is sold as a fat lamb, and this wool is a different thing altogether. We must keep those two things in mind. Of course, there has been no price ceiling on the lamb, but there has been and is a ceiling on the wool, and every one of us should understand that. Now, let us go a step further and say this: I think behind this whole plan to wreck this bill is this: We must recognize the fact, and I wish we could keep this in mind, that for 40 years we have been importing wool. We have not produced enough wool for domestic consumption. And in my personal opinion there is no possibility that we will for many years to come. In the 40 years we have been shipping wool into this country, 24 times in that 40 years we have failed to import over 100,000,000 pounds of wool. The wool producers are in a chaotic condition, and they will be much worse if you adopt this amendment. Listen to these figures: In 1946 over 819,000,000 pounds of wool were imported; in 1945 over 704,000,000 pounds; and in 1944, 582,000,000 pounds. I will not bother you with more figures, but in 1938 only 18,442,000 pounds of wool were imported. How in the world can anybody reconcile those figures and stand in the well of this House this morning and say to me that I should support a bill that would entirely wipe off the map of this country all the great wool-producing sections of the United States, and that is exactly what you will do if you adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts. This is the situation in a nutshell. The wool growers of this country and all during the war have lost from 9 to 12 cents a pound on every pound of wool that they produced. The effect of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts will be to increase that loss from 9½ cents per pound to 14 cents a pound. We have liquidated over one-third of the sheep industry during the past 4 years. If the gentleman wishes to put the wool growers of this country out of business, his amendment will accomplish that purpose.

We ought to be fair about this matter. As the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. HILL] has stated, the price the wool grower received for his wool all during the war and the price that he will receive if this bill is enacted is the ceiling price established by the OPA on December 9, 1941. I call your attention to the fact that while there has been no increase whatsoever in the price of wool from the day after Pearl Harbor until the present time, on the other hand, most every other farm commodity increased in price. Let me quote some increases: Rye, 233 percent; corn, 144 percent; cotton, 101 percent; and peanuts 100 percent. Wool increased 13½ from September 15, 1941, to December 9, 1941, but none since. The commodity that received the next lowest increase to wool all during the war is veal, 37½ percent.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARRETT. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BONNER. I should like to get this clear in my mind. Which is the by-product, the wool or the lamb?

Mr. BARRETT. I am glad the gentleman asked that question. The information the gentleman from Massachusetts gave the House on that point is just as wrong as it can be.

For many years our growers have found that the income from wool represented about 48 percent of the wool grower's income and the income from lamb about 52 percent. The Tariff Commission has studied that question for 40 years.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARRETT. I yield.

Mr. BONNER. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him, I began to ask a question but did not finish it. You are here dicussing the wool grower's plight. I would like you to discuss what the income of the wool grower, that is, the sheep farmer is, taking into consideration his wool and mutton jointly and not separating them. You are discussing what he makes on wool or what he loses on wool, but the picture I have in mind is that the two things go hand in hand. Then, I am told that much of our imported wool comes from an area where they do not pay any attention to the carcass of the animal and the sheep are merely raised for the high quality of wool. So, in answering this question, put both of them together—the meat and the wool—and let us see how the wool farmers stand as compared to the peanut, the sugar, and tobacco farmers, and other farmers. Put the income from both sources together and do not separate the wool.

Mr. BARRETT. I will be glad to answer the gentleman's question. The fact of the matter is that the United States Tariff Commission after a long and extensive study has reported that the wool growers of this country last year lost $1.18 per head of sheep. They lost more than that in 1945 and more in 1944. The effect of the gentleman's question is very important. We cannot possibly compete with the wool growers of Australia. They run many thousands of head of sheep in a band. They pay very little in taxes and have very little other expenses.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARRETT. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Wyoming a question which would answer the question of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BONNER]. Some few years ago I heard a gentleman on the right-hand side of this aisle make this statement. I do not know whether he remembers it as I will quite it, but he said:

> You could shear a sheep several times, but you could skin a lamb only once.

What I want to say is this. We forget here that these lambs you are talking about that go to market are only sheared once, and most of the wool is pulled while these mother—shall I call them—ewes back home that produce these lambs are sheared year in and year, and that is where the income on wool comes from.

Mr. BARRETT. I thank the gentleman.

I want to call the attention of the Committee to the report made by the Tariff Commission a month ago. They report that for the year 1940, 48 percent of the income of the wool grower is from wool, and 52 percent is from lambs. In 1941, it was 45 percent from wool. In 1942, it was 44 percent. In 1943, it was 49.8 percent, which is nearly 50 percent. In 1944, it was 48.7 percent. In 1945, it was 49.3 percent.

Now, what is the situation with reference to the income from lambs? We grow feeder lambs in the West. The people who produce wool do not fatten the lambs. We sell our lambs as feeders and ship them to Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois, Ohio, and Indiana, and other States for fattening purposes. The fact of the matter is that during the war the Tariff Commission states that lamb increased 60 percent during the entire war period. That is the fat lamb. That is not the feeder lamb. The fact of the matter is the feeders did fairly well, but the producer or grower did not do so well. The gentleman from Massachusetts said there was a 250-percent increase in lamb, but that is sheer nonsense. The fact of the matter is that last year and all during the war we sold our lambs in the West around 15 cents a pound. That is about 30 percent over the price that we received before the war.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARRETT. I yield.

Mr. BONNER. We have had all types of statistics here with respect to various farmers. What do the statistics show as to the income of the sheep raiser as compared with some other farmer, for a period of years?

Mr. BARRETT. The records show this, that if you take 24 different other commodities——

Mr. BONNER. No. I want to keep it all together. I want to keep his entire income together, the income from his sheep and his wool and everything else, and all the byproducts from raising sheep. How does that compare in income with the other farmers?

Mr. BARRETT. Well, the grower's income from wool and lambs has been low, in fact he has received the smallest increase since September 15, 1941, of any other farm commodity produced in America. I think that ought to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARRETT. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does not the report show, taking both those into consideration, that he lost $1.26 per head of sheep?

Mr. BARRETT. That is right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. You are raising an accounting question. When the Tariff Commission goes out it has to take into consideration the wool and the sheep. They came to the conclusion that $1.26 per head was lost for sheep running on the range.

Mr. BARRETT. That is precisely what the Tariff Commission has reported.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARRETT. I yield.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. If the wool grower is not allowed to keep his ewe sheep and shear them, then the feeder will have no lambs, and both will be out of business?

Mr. BARRETT. That is right.

Now, the question is simply this: Do we want to protect the sheep industry of this country? Do you think it is important to have a sheep industry in this country? We have 800,000,000 acres of land in the West. The only use we can make of that land is to take the grass off of it, and if you destroy the sheep industry you will destroy the usefulness of that great area. There is no other use for it except to run livestock. We simply cannot increase our cattle population in this country because we have 10,000,000 excess cattle at the present time.

Now, the records show that we have liquidated the sheep industry in this country 35 percent in the last 4 years. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER] says he wants to help the wool growers, but the effect of his amendment will be to liquidate the entire sheep industry in double time. That is the effect of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has again expired.

Mr. BARRETT. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARRETT. I yield.

Mr. GOFF. Is it not true that as a result of the loss of income for the wool growers, we actually have in this country now less sheep than we have had since 1867?

Mr. BARRETT. That is precisely correct.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARRETT. I yield.

Mr. HILL. For how long a time does this 1946 price in this bill prevail?

Mr. BARRETT. It will run until December 31, 1948. When the Government instituted this support program in 1941, they promised the wool growers of this country that the program would be continued during the war and for 2 years thereafter. Now then the price was frozen and remained frozen on December 9, 1941. We did not get any increase of any kind on our wool all during the war. I think it is manifestly unfair to say to the wool men of this country, "You did not get any increase during the war while the price of other commodities were increased up to 200 percent. Notwithstanding all that we are going to knock your price down at this time."

It is manifestly unfair. I trust the Herter amendment is defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has again expired.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I think we all agree that there is no industry over which the Government had such full and absolute control during the war as the wool industry. Even under rent control, which is considered as the most rigid, the landlord was not so completely under control as the wool grower. In one way or another rent adjustments were brought about in individual cases as well as in certain classes to permit some increase. Not so with wool. As has been stated here, the price of wool was frozen at the beginning of the war and kept that way through the purchase by the Government at the peg price throughout the war. We do not complain of this but on the contrary the wool industry with every other item of expense going up, never complained. They felt that our armed forces came first.

In view of those circumstances, the least that the Government can do now is to provide a cushion for the wool men to soften the fall during the reconversion period from war to peace economy. This is all that this bill is designed to do. It is not intended as a permanent policy. It is an emergency measure.

What I have said is borne out by statistics which speak louder than words. Whereas cotton increased 101.4 percent from 1941 to 1946, wool only increased 13.2 percent. In the list of 24 basic commodities, wool increased the least by a large margin. The next lowest increase was that with respect to calves, which increased 37.7 percent.

In the course of the debate it has been pointed out that the support price program covered by section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act deals with and is designed to support the price of commodities with respect to which there is a surplus because of overproduction, whereas it is stated that production of wool has fallen so low that there is no surplus. This argument overlooks the fact that although there is no surplus of domestic wool, nevertheless there is a tremendous potential surplus through the flood of foreign wool which will completely destroy the wool market.

The bill before us is not altogether to my liking. It seems to me that a proper quota on imports would have been more effective. But the fact remains that we are faced with an emergency and that we must act and act promptly. I sincerely hope that this House will rise to the occasion, and that the bill will be passed with or without the House amendment, so that the conference committee of the House and Senate may present to us a composite bill acceptable to both the House and Senate at the earliest possible date.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I assume that the gentleman favors the amendment the committee will offer.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. No; I do not believe I will favor it. I have been trying to make up my mind, but I do not think I can favor that amendment. I followed the arguments presented by the committee on the matter of import fees and I appreciate their force. I am not an expert on that nor am I a member of the Committee on Agriculture which has been studying this problem, but I will say that the Senate did not seem to think that provision was absolutely necessary, and I value the judgment of that body particularly when a matter of foreign policy enters into the question.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Does the gentleman favor the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER]?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Yes.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I do not favor that amendment for the reasons stated here a while ago to the effect that the parity price of wool is not a true parity price but is below comparable parity prices for other commodities. Otherwise I would.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman has made a very splendid statement. He has expressed my thought exactly. In our southwestern country there is a vast area fit only for livestock production. If we kill the sheep industry much of that area will be virtually barren.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I thank the gentleman; and may I say in reply to a statement made awhile ago that to the wool grower, lamb is a byproduct and wholly a byproduct. It is wool that he produces and wool that keeps him in business. If he has to look to the sale of lambs to keep him going instead of keeping them to build up his wool flock, then he will have to go out of business; and, as a matter of fact, that is exactly what is happening today.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I yield gladly.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. This program goes through 1947 and 1948. What will the gentleman do in 1949 unless there is tariff protection to keep his wool growers busy?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. By 1949 I believe we shall be in a period more normal than we are in now. We will face that when we come to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Mexico has expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the Herter amendment close in 35 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I have been very much interested in this debate. It is a very splendid debate on a very important subject. There are a few realistic things I want to mention without going into technical details.

We all know that the sheep industry throughout these United States, especially the northern part of the country, is a very important industry to the farmers. All through my district there are farms with small flocks which mean a great deal to the farmer. He needs that income. This land is only adaptable to the raising of sheep; it is hardly usable for anything else.

Let us take a little look at the character of the competition that we have. Australia is ideal for sheep raising. They have made it a scientific industry. They have developed the industry purely for export purposes. They have established a system of taxation in Australia which makes it possible for the sheep raisers in the most remote part of Australia to move their product to the ports for export at just as low a railroad rate as those who live close in to the city or to the ports. That is a great advantage. Not only have they a climate that is ideal for sheep, but the sheep over there can run out-of-doors the year around. Their sheep do not have to be sheltered from the snow or cold.

They have also developed the raising of turnips in Australia. They sowed thousands and thousands of acres of turnips, which grow quickly, and they are luscious. They turn the sheep into these fields of turnips. The sheep will eat the tops, then they will eat the part of the turnip that protrudes above the ground, then later on the sheep will dig them out of the ground until they have eaten the last part of the turnip, root and all.

This turnip feed produces the very finest kind of mutton and also produces a very superior quality of wool. They have their export factories for the mutton, which goes all over the world. As the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. BARRETT] said a few minutes ago, they can move their products into this country cheaper than he can move his mutton and wool from Wyoming to New York. That also applies on the movement of mutton products from western New York to New York City. They can move their products over 9,000 miles into the Liverpool and London markets cheaper than we can move our products from the West to the markets of the East.

Mr. Chairman, I mention those things because there is a great deal of foreign competition, and, as has been pointed out, which if unrestrained can wipe out a great big industry of this country, one that we cannot afford to sacrifice.

Now, we know from experience that if any country gets control of the production of a crop, why they can immediately raise the price, a monopolistic price, and the American people have to pay that price, because the product is essential to the welfare of the people of this country.

I wanted to bring out these few facts here because I want the people of the country to know that we cannot go into this great program, this international program of being a good neighbor, and letting these countries, where they can produce more cheaply than we can, take over our production here. It means creating a monopoly abroad. It means injury to a great segment of our economy, and we just cannot afford to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE].

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I hope I may be helpful in some measure in the consideration of this amendment, which I am not able to support. Of course, the committee gave consideration at what level wool should be supported. I presume you all understand that wool has been supported for the last 5 years, and the present proposal is merely to continue that program at the same level for this year and next year.

I hope that you also understand—and I think this should be very clear to everyone—that the support price for wool in the past and the support price proposed in the pending bill is the OPA ceiling for wool as established in 1941. I believe Mr. Henderson was the head of OPA at that time. This is the ceiling price OPA fixed on wool-basic-Boston, and that is all that is requested now. That is what the support has been in the past and that is what the committee is asking the House to continue. That is one of the things the committee considered in passing on this question.

Secondly, the proposal made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER] was considered, to reduce the support to 90 percent of parity. The committee thinks that would be unfair, because every Steagall commodity—and there are about 25 or 26 agricultural commodities under that act—is supported at not less than 90 percent. Not a one of them is restricted to flat 90 percent as proposed by this amendment. Certainly the least the gentleman from Massachusetts could do would be to treat wool as the other 25 or 26 Steagall commodities and support wool at not less than 90 percent of parity.

The committee further considered, in trying to arrive at what the support level should be, the report of the Tariff Commission that has been read to you, that last year the average wool producer in this country was losing money. The figures have been given you.

The committee further considered the fact that in 1943 there were approximately 49,000,000 head of sheep in this country and that on January 1 of this year there were only 32,500,000. Does that mean anything to you, that this industry is rapidly going down and down?

The committee further considered the fact—and here are the official figures—that in the period 1935–39 85 percent of the wool used in this country was domestic wool, and that in the good year, 1946, only 22 percent of the wool used in this country was American wool.

I am not directly interested in the wool producers but I do regard the production of wool in this country as an essential industry. We may have another war when the wool of foreign countries will not be available, and we should maintain and encourage our wool production.

I hope the amendment will be rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FISHER].

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] has clarified this issue very well. I wish more Members could have been present to hear that and have a full understanding of it, because I am convinced that if the Members have a full understanding of the implications that would be involved in the adoption of the pending amendment it would be overwhelmingly defeated. If the Herter amendment is adopted, as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] very well said, it means that this Congress does not favor a support program for the wool industry. That is exactly what it means. The Herter amendment, which has the support of the Boston wool trade, would reduce the support price of wool to a level that would be below the world price, and therefore would not be any support at all.

Let us see whether the wool price in this bill is too much. That is the issue. The amount proposed in this bill is the 1946 price, which is the same price that was fixed by OPA on the 9th day of December 1941, and it is the same price that was paid during the war. Is that too much? Do you want to lower the level that has been paid during the past 4 years or do you want to keep it that way during the next 18 months, during the liquidation process that will be carried on in connection with this great stock pile?

Let us see if that is too much. It has been pointed out here that from the standpoint of parity, if you are going to put it on a parity basis, wool is at a relative disadvantage compared with other agricultural commodities. That is a historical fact, and it is a fact. It has been recognized universally. I heard O. V. Wells, with whom most of you are acquainted, down in the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, make that statement publicly in a hearing, that wool is at a relative disadvantage with other agricultural commodities covered in the base period of 1909 to 1914. That fact is further evidenced by a communication from President Truman himself to the chairman of the Senate committee investigating wool last year. Let us see what he said, and I hope all of you who are interested in this subject will listen to me. It shows the position of the administration on the issue involved in the Herter amendment. The President said:

Specifically, in view of the large-scale decline of sheep numbers in the United States during recent years, the large wool surpluses now hanging over foreign and domestic markets, and the present and prospective marketing problems confronting wool growers, it would seem desirable for Congress to enact special wool legislation. Such legislation should provide that—

1. The parity price of wool be revised or established at the so-called comparable level—

Why?—

so that wool parity prices will be on a level equivalent to parity prices for other farm products.

The President recognizes and everybody who is familiar with this subject from the historical standpoint recognizes that the parity price of wool is entirely out of line with the parity price of most other products. There is no question about that.

Mr. Chairman, I earnestly hope that the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct an inquiry to the distinguished gentleman from Texas who just spoke. The gentleman referred to this in his remarks, which is what prompted the question. I presume from the studies of Dr. Wells, of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, that 42 cents a pound for wool would mean between 40 and 50 cents per hour for the labor that went into producing that wool. May I ask the gentleman if he thinks that is a fair statement, based on his experience, and since Texas has about one-fifth of the sheep in the United States?

Mr. FISHER. I regret to say, in answer to the gentleman, that I am not familiar with the basis of the investigation which resulted in that conclusion. But the study of the comparable prices as compared with other farm products show that wool is at a relative disadvantage, to use his own words.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. In those studies I know they did not select wool farmers in particular. The study that they made of wool and these other studies that have been made would show that labor engaged in producing sheep and wool get somewhere between 40 and 50 cents an hour.

Mr. FISHER. I think the gentleman is exactly correct. Will the gentleman yield for an observation?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. FISHER. If the comparable prices which can be justified and which the President of the United States says are proper in lieu of parity prices were in effect, the prices would be about 3 cents above the 1946 prices even though only 90 percent of comparable prices were paid.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I thank the gentleman.

The point I wish to make is that anyone who wishes to vote for the so-called Herter amendment, and I might say that I am sorry the gentleman offered it, is saying in fact that he does not believe in the wages-and-hours law so far as the labor on the farms is concerned. In other words, Massachusetts is one of the leading States so far as supporting wages-and-hours legislation and the Walsh-Healey Act. It is a rather progressive State, but, of course, it is a little behind Wisconsin as a rule. But now it comes here and the gentleman from Massachusetts says, "We believe in the Walsh-Healey Act. We believe in a minimum wage. We do not want 40 cents minimum wage. We are going to raise it to 65 cents or 75 cents, but we would like to put the farmers who are producing wool in this country in a different group. We will give your boys and girls banquets when they come down here, and we will contribute some money to your boys' and girls' clubs, but we cannot pay more than 36 cents an hour for the labor that goes into this product known as wool." It does not make any difference if the fellow who makes the cloth gets $1.20 an hour, but the fellow who put the labor into producing the wool gets only 36 cents an hour.

I yield to my friend the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION. I do not blame the gentleman from Boston offering and urging the adoption of his amendment. As I understand it, they do not raise many sheep in Boston unless they have a few black sheep there just as we have in other parts of the country. But if I understand this matter, and I listened to the debate with a great deal of care, under the present prices the American wool growers in 1946 lost on an average 9½ cents a pound, according to the findings of the United States Tariff Commission, recently. Is that correct?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. The Tariff Commission has already followed that up. They will lose 3 or 4 cents more per pound.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the bill as it was reported by the Committee on Agriculture and I am opposed to the amendment of our distinguished colleague and friend [Mr. HERTER], of Massachusetts. I have read the bill, the report, and have heard quite a lot of discussion of this bill and have also listened with interest to the debate on yesterday and today. I think the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. RIZLEY], as well as others, have stated the question fairly.

We must pay to the wool producers of this country a substantial subsidy out of the Treasury of the United States, or place a tariff or fee on imported wool sufficient to make up the difference between the cost of producing wool in this country and the cost of the wool being imported into this country from Australia and various other countries of the world, or, sit idly by and see the American wool industry destroyed, and taxpayers suffer millions of loss on 450,000,000 pounds of surplus wool held by the Government.

These observations are based on facts. When World War II came on, our Government froze the price of wool and took over the wool market here and that control has continued until very recently. In buying up all the wool of the American farmers over a period of several years, our Government accumulated a surplus of wool. Today, the Government owns about 450,000,000 pounds of wool. It cannot sell a pound of this wool to the American manufacturers or anybody else because, under the law, it cannot be sold for less than the support price paid for it by our Government.

Great Britain and her dominions produce the greater part of the world's supply of wool. When the war ended, Britain and her dominions had a great stock-pile of wool. Britain and others formed an organization to take care of about 2,000,000,000 pounds. This organization controls 80 percent or more of the world's supply of wool. They can lower or raise the price of wool while the American Government cannot lower the price on the 450,000,000 pounds of surplus wool it has in stock. This association of Great Britain, her dominions and others has fixed the price on their wool below the price fixed by the American Government with the result that great quantities of this foreign wool are being dumped on the American market to American buyers. They are disposing of their surplus stock pile of wool and new wool. We have been increasing our surplus. There has been and now is very little demand from any source for American wool. The American Government and the American farmers must charge more for their wool than the world price. We will soon be confronted with a new wool clip in this country. This will add to our surplus by reason of the lower-priced foreign wool.

Let us bear in mind that our Government has already paid for this 450,000,000 pounds of wool and we have paid about 10 cents more than the price of foreign wool and we stand to lose more than $50,000,000 at this time. Some plan must be worked out whereby the Government can dispose of its 450,000,000 pounds of surplus wool and the American farmers must dispose of their wool produced this year. That the American wool growers are in bad shape is clearly shown by the facts. The United States Tariff Commission, after a thorough investigation, found that in 1946 the American farmers lost 9½ cents a pound on their wool. They will still lose that much or more this year under the heavy pressure of foreign competition and they lost even a greater sum than that in 1944 and in 1945. This country must find some way to dispose of our Government's surplus wool and protect the American wool grower this year and next year. If we permit the heavy importation of foreign wool at present prices, or even lower, the Government will lose tens of millions of dollars on this surplus wool and the American wool growers and sheep producers will be driven out of business.

Some have suggested that we dump this 450,000,000 pounds of wool on the market and some have suggested that we, by appropriate legislation, authorize the Commodity Corporation to dispose of this surplus wool and the Government take the loss. I prefer the legislation proposed in the bill before us and that is for the Government to continue its price-support program until December 31, 1948, and fix such a fee or tariff on foreign wools as will prevent the flooding of our country with foreign wools, and this will mean, of course, that this American wool will be sold to American processors, perhaps at the price the Government paid for the wool and, of course, it will save the taxpayers of our country these millions of dollars.

This tariff or fee being fixed at a sum making up the difference of cost of production of wool in this country and in foreign countries will take care of the sheep and wool growers in our own country. If this action is not taken, nothing short of ruin faces our own American farmers producing wool. This fee or tariff will be paid by the foreign producers of wool and this money will go into the Treasury to help take care of any loss on the 450,000,000 pounds of wool that we now have and also to pay the cost and expense of the price support program for American wool producers until December 31, 1948.

SHEEP AND WOOL DECLINE

The records of the Department of Agriculture show that the stock sheep population of this country has dropped from 49,807,000 in 1942 to 32,542,000 as of recent date and this is the lowest sheep population in the United States since 1897. Our wool production has dropped from approximately 460,000,000 pounds in 1942 to approximately 300,000,000 pounds now. There has been a tremendous increase in the population of this country and its meat requirements since 1897 but here we find one of our fine meat and wool industries the lowest it has been in 50 years. To me, this situation is alarming. It is high time that the Congress take action to preserve this industry. The sheep and wool industry are not only important to the economic life of this Nation but they are, and especially wool, among the critical materials of this Nation in time of war. More than 800,000,000 acres of land are devoted to wool growing. It provides employment to a great army of American citizens. It pays enormous sums in taxes to sustain district, county, city, State, and the Federal Government. This industry is confronted with a threat to destroy the capital investment, throw hundreds of thousands of people out of employment and dry up this source of revenue to maintain the various units of Government.

Let us not forget that every shipload of wool brought into this country at this time takes away that much of market for the American people and wool growers. Why should we sit idly by and permit the sheep and wool growers in foreign countries, by reason of their low wages, lower standards of living and lower cost of production, to take away the American market and destroy this great industry? If this business is taken away from the American people and American sheep and wool growers and their workers and turned over to the sheep and wool growers and their workers in foreign countries, then this money will be spent in foreign countries and cannot be spent for the products of American workers.

Under section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act as amended and reenacted in 1940, cotton, wheat and other farm commodities have been taken care of but the sheep and wool growers were omitted from this act. These other farm commodities have increased in price 90 percent or more since 1941. This bill fixes the support price the same as it was in 1946 and the support price of 1946 was substantially what the support price was in 1941. All groups in this country have received an increase in prices, profits, wages, and other commodities since 1941 but the wool prices have remained practically what they were in 1941 and that is why the sheep and wool industry has declined so rapidly and the American wool growers have been and are losing 9½ cents a pound or more on their wool and unless we take action to prevent hundreds of millions pounds of wool being dumped into this country every year, the price of wool will continue to go down and the sheep industry will continue to decline.

Something must be done and done now. This bill, by continuing the support price until December 31, 1948 and to fix the price as of 1946, which in effect was the same as 1941, and fix a fee or tariff on imported wool, will bring some relief not only to the sheep and wool growers but relief to the taxpayers of this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY].

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, the point was raised in the debate yesterday by the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] that the alternative to the present bill was the elimination of the wool growers of the United States. That statement beclouds the issue. No responsible official has made any such suggestion. The President on March 12, 1946, pointed out in a letter to Senator O'MAHONEY and placed before the Congress a sound and comprehensive wool program. In that statement Mr. Truman spoke of the decline in sheep numbers and cautioned that "care should be exercised not to take action which would place additional handicaps on the industry so long as the decline continues."

The President then set forth six points of a well-rounded wool program and concluded:

> The above program will, in my opinion, afford domestic wool growers the protection and assistance to which they are properly entitled under this country's general trade and agricultural policies. The program will tend to encourage wool consumption in the United States, and will be consistent with our general foreign economic policy. In accordance with the views you have so frequently expressed, this country also should cooperate with foreign producing and consuming countries in efforts to encourage wool consumption abroad.

More than a year later the President in his Waco speech set forth the basis of his foreign policy in summary as follows:

> 1. The Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act has been on the books since 1934. It has been administered with painstaking care and strict impartiality. Some 30 agreements with other countries have been made. And trade has grown, to the great benefit of our economy.
> 2. This Government does not intend, in the coming negotiations, to eliminate tariffs, or establish free trade. All that is contemplated is the reduction of tariffs, the removal of discriminations, and the achievement not of free trade but of freer trade.
>
> 3. In the process of negotiations, tariffs will not be cut across the board. Action will be selective; some rates may be cut substantially, others moderately, and others not at all.
> 4. In return for these concessions, we shall seek and obtain concessions from other countries to benefit our export trade.

I challenge anyone to find any basis for the charge that wool growing is to be sacrificed in those statements.

Everyone on either side of the aisle interested in a bipartisan foreign policy ought to reflect on these matters before he votes for a bill which the President will be forced to veto.

Mr. HARLESS of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I am unalterably opposed to the Herter amendment. This amendment would place the wool growers of America in a worse condition than they are today. It is evident that we must have relief for the wool producers; otherwise we will liquidate an industry which means so much to the welfare of this country. To adopt the Herter amendment would mean an immediate reduction in the price of wool instead of an increase.

If we review the wool industry during the war it is plain to see that we must do something now in order to save the producers of wool in this country. Immediately after Pearl Harbor the price of wool was frozen and that price has not been increased to this day. The costs have mounted, but the prices have remained static. From 1942 to 1946 the population of sheep in this country dropped from 49,000,000 to 32,000,000 which represents a reduction of 35 percent. And the amount of wool produced dropped from 450,000,000 pounds in 1942 to 300,000,000 pounds in 1946 and that is a reduction of 35 percent.

The report of the United States Tariff Commission indicates that the wool growers of this country lost 9½ cents on every pound of wool produced in 1946. This report further indicates that the wool growers lost $1.18 per head of sheep in 1946.

In view of the fact that wool is considered by the War and Navy Departments as a strategic and critical material we have reason to be alarmed at this tremendous reduction in the production of wool. Unless we pass this legislation in a form which will encourage and protect the wool growers of this country, in effect we will liquidate it within the next few years. We are spending tremendous sums to keep this country prepared for any eventual emergency. The world is in a critical state. It is just as important to maintain a healthy wool industry in this country as it is to maintain a prepared Army and Navy. We must vote down the Herter amendment and then pass this bill as it came to us from the Senate. If we do, we will be creating a thriving and prosperous wool industry.

The price of wool will not be too high, but by stimulating production we can forego the possibility of cartel arrangements and any other emergency which we may face in the future because we know that our country is capable of producing enough wool to take care of most of our needs if we give our wool growers a chance to prosper.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, the quantity of wool produced in the district which I have the honor to represent in Congress is not large in comparison with the great wool-producing sections of the West. We have family-sized farms with a well worked out formula of crop rotation, and on many of these farms small flocks of sheep are maintained. In addition, our farmers purchase many lambs directly from the range in the fall. These lambs are fattened with our home-produced grain and alfalfa and sold to the packer in the spring. Meantime the wool is clipped and is an important factor in the farmer's economic operation in the handling of the lambs. Many of my farmers are, therefore, vitally interested in this proposed legislation.

There are comparatively few woolen mills in Michigan; however, I have at least one in my district and its operators are opposed to this legislation, which position is directly contrary to the position taken by my farmer constituents. As has been pointed out in this debate, the use of wool is essential in the everyday life of every one of us and occupies an important place in productive America. It is conceded that this country only produces about one-third of the wool we consume; therefore, the importation of foreign wool is essential and brings to the front the old question of cost of production at home and abroad. Under the American way of life, with our standards of living, it costs more to produce a pound of wool than it does in some other countries.

A few years ago when he was Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Henry Wallace, in referring to sugar, insisted that foreign countries should be permitted to produce the things they could produce most efficiently, and that our own people should confine their production to things which they could produce most efficiently. The question of price of course enters into the all-inclusive word "efficiency."

Now that theory sounds all right, but we have just learned anew that in case of war it is essential that our country be sufficient unto itself so far as strategic materials are concerned. Wool is a strategic material and we cannot live or carry on a war without it. It is just foolish to kill or permit the domestic wool industry to be liquidated on the Wallaceonian theory.

As a matter of fact, the day after Pearl Harbor the price of wool was frozen at OPA ceiling and large quantities of wool were shipped to this country to form a stock pile for a prospective war when lines of ocean-going transportation might be cut off. Then by order of the Congress the Commodity Credit Corporation purchased all the domestic wool, paid for it, and controlled its distribution. The domestic producer was protected and encouraged to continue to produce by a mandate that the Commodity Credit Corporation could not sell any wool below the parity price. Now it is conceded that the parity period which determined the parity price was unfavorable to wool as compared to other agricultural products; nevertheless, the Commodity Credit law is still in force and, as a result, this Government corporation has a little less than 500,000,000 pounds of wool in storage. Not a pound of this can be sold for less than parity and the world price is less than parity. As a consequence, almost a half billion pounds of wool are hanging over the market which, if it were released to be sold at war prices would ruin the present market, destroy the wool producers, and severely cripple many manufacturers who have stock piles acquired at parity prices.

Mr. Chairman, this bill will simply continue support, until December 31, 1948, of the present guarantee to the wool producer of the parity price. It will not raise the price to the farmer. It will not provide for a new subsidy. If the Commodity Credit Corporation is able to sell the wool it now has and which it will purchase at parity price, then there will be no loss to, or subsidy paid from the Federal Treasury.

We all realize that the reciprocal trade agreement law is in force and that the Secretary of State is continuously negotiating trade agreements with other countries. This bill directs the Secretary to follow the terms of the reciprocal trade law, make an investigation through the Tariff Commission, and whenever he finds officially that the parity price of wool is higher than the import price of wool, then he is directed to require the payment of an import fee or tariff on imported wool, which will equalize the import price and the parity price. To me it is just a form of the protective tariff applied through reciprocal trade machinery. The fee will only be sufficient to protect American labor and American industry in the wool production business against cheap foreign labor and lower standards of living which make that cheapness possible.

Now we must not forget that the wool producer and the farmer naturally want the best price they can get for their product. The processor of foreign wool wants cheap foreign wool so that he will have more foreign wool to process. The manufacturer who uses wool wants his raw material at the lowest price possible, and the importer is not interested so much in the price as he is in the business and, if domestic wool is available at the same price, his business will not be so great. As a result, the producer of domestic wool favors this legislation while the manufacturer, following the human instinct for profit, is often too selfish and forgets the essentiality of the wool industry in a well-balanced economy.

Mr. Chairman, I shall vote against the Herter amendment which is entirely in the interest of the wool processors, importers, and manufacturers. I shall vote for this bill which, in my opinion, is not only in the interest of business but is essential to the well-being and a continuance of a sound wool production in the United States. We must not forget that the sheep population has steadily decreased during the last few years—35 percent between 1942 and 1947. It is an astounding fact that there are less sheep in our country today than there were in 1867. In other words, the industry is being gradually eliminated because sheep producers will not continue at a loss or will not continue when the production of sheep does not yield a fair return compared with other agricultural products.

It has been feared that the President will veto this bill because it might prevent the Secretary of State entering into an agreement with other countries who market their wool through the British cartel.

Great Britain, with her dominions, produces most of the world's supply of wool. At the war's end, faced with a tremendous stock pile of wool, they formed the Joint Organization—JO—in order to protect their wool industry by an orderly liquidation of their stock pile of over 2,000,000,000 pounds. The Joint Organization controls 8[illegible] percent of the world's apparel-wool supply, and it has the power to lower prices at will.

During 1946 over 1,000,000,000 pounds of wool was consumed in this country. More than 80 percent of it was foreign wool. Last year 819,253,000 pounds of foreign wool was imported into this country. During that year, and as of today, the Commodity Credit Corporation has a stock pile of over 450,000,000 pounds of wool. Foreign producers dumped their products on the American market, because domestic producers are wholly unable to compete with low-cost producing countries. The Commodity Credit Corporation is prohibited by law from selling at less than parity. This restriction must be removed, so that the United States can dispose of its stock pile while wool consumption is high.

If we are assured that the President has no intention of doing the things which some fear, then there can be no reason why the Congress, which gives the Secretary of State the authority which he now has to enter into these agreements, should not be given specific direction. There comes a time when patience ceases to be a virtue when the Congress is delegating power to the executive branch. The purpose of this bill is not to provide a subsidy out of the Treasury. Indeed, it is just the opposite. It is intended to protect our industry and our way of life and permit those who enjoy the benefits afforded by this industry to pay out of their own pockets for what they purchase.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the Herter amendment. The author of the amendment has virtually admitted that the effect of his amendment would be to decrease the price of wool by as much as 4 or 5 cents a pound. That would be a very severe blow to the wool industry of the West and I cannot in good conscience approve of such result, even if other effects of the amendment were known to be beneficial. It has been pointed out that American wool growers have lost money on their recent production and the effect of this amendment would mean still greater loss without any compensating advantages that I can see.

As the gentleman from Wyoming pointed out, there are many millions of acres of land in the West fit only for livestock production through grazing. This is true because such land cannot be farmed with cultivated crops, and forage, aside from timber, is its only natural production. Perhaps half of this vast area can be used only for grazing sheep, although some of it may be used for cattle and sheep together. But I will take the word of the gentleman from Wyoming that of such vast acreage suitable only for grazing, about half of it as he says can be used for cattle and the other half, as he thinks, can be used only for sheep, therefore, there are millions of acres in the far West which can be made productive only by grazing it with sheep. This vast region would be adversely affected without support-price for wool and might be economically ruined by wrong provisions in this bill.

I believe there is a greater area which would be rendered useless by destroying the wool industry than he indicated. There is a misconception about the relation between cattle and sheep on the western ranges. It is supposed by some that cattle and sheep cannot exist on the same general area. That notion has gotten abroad and is embedded in our literature because of so many historic and bloody feuds between cattlemen and sheepmen throughout the West. However, I think it is recognized today that cattle and sheep of the same owner can get along fairly well together on the same range if it is diversified.

Perhaps it is fairer to say that cattlemen and sheepmen cannot, or do not, get along together in their economic business. Many cattlemen are also sheepmen in these later years and run both cattle and sheep over their big ranges, the cattle requiring one kind of pasture and the sheep doing quite well on a different kind of forage on the same spotted area. Such being the case, there is even a larger proportion of the western ranges useful for sheep than the gentleman from Wyoming may have had in mind as suitable only for wool and lamb production.

Immediate steps must be taken to safeguard wool producers from the present situation, but the Herter amendment will not do it. Our country's prosperity in the West depends upon full utilization of all ranges up to their proper limits for maximum benefits, and it also depends upon stabilizing the wool grower's market and affording him proper protection.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. RUSSELL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I also am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER].

The adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusets would defeat the purpose of the bill and the amendment should be defeated.

I support the wool bill and the amendments offered by the committee for without continued aid to the wool growers the industry will face a serious situation. The Department of Agriculture report shows that the sheep population of this country has been reduced 35 percent since 1942, a drop from 49,807,000 to 32,542,000 head today, and there are fewer head of sheep now than there was 50 years ago.

This general situation relative to sheep prevails in Nevada as in other parts of the Nation. We are faced with a fast-dwindling industry unless it is protected. At the rate of decline in the numbers of sheep since 1942, unless the industry can be aided and stabilized, this Nation will be forced then to depend upon foreign sources entirely, not only for wool, but also for lamb and mutton.

A study of the sheep industry shows that the wool growers of this country lost 9½ cents on every pound of wool produced in 1946 and sustained a loss of $1.18 per head of sheep on the average.

American producers of wool are unable to meet the low-cost production of foreign countries, and last year, 1946, 819,253,000 pounds of foreign wool was imported into this country. Great Britain with her dominions produces most of the world's supply of wool, and at the end of the war to protect their wool industry they formed the joint organization. This organization controls 85 percent of the world's apparel supply and has the power to lower prices at will. If, then, the American production of wool can be virtually wiped out by that organization, through the control of the price of wool and the wool shipped into this Nation at less than it can be produced here, in time our industry will be lost and we will be dependent upon the foreign sources for wool and those sources will control the price, and that is what is being done. The probable result in the end would be much higher prices for foreign wool as soon as the American wool industry is wiped out or forced to be curtailed to where this country would grow but a very small percentage of the proportion of wool needed.

Sheep in one way are a national resource of this Nation. They graze on and utilize the forage on the public ranges and national forests. To destroy that industry would be to destroy one of the greatest industries in the West, to destroy taxable units and to make this Nation dependent upon foreign supply and production.

This bill would continue support for wool until December 31, 1948. It would continue the support at a time when there is a surplus of foreign-produced wool. It is estimated that the joint organization has some 2,000,000,000 pounds of wool stored, and that under normal consumption in this postwar period it will take about 10 years to assimilate that amount in industry, along with present production. Why then should an American industry be made to suffer? Why should wool growers be forced, in many cases out of business, to protect foreign wool production? That is what will be done unless this bill is passed.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I wish to supplement the remarks I made yesterday on this bill a little more along the line of the question of national defense.

Wool is one of the few agricultural commodities that appears on the list of critical and strategic materials compiled by the Army and Navy Munition Board. It has very peculiar properties that make it impossible to stock pile it in the way we would stock pile minerals and other strategic materials. They had to give it special treatment in their consideration of stock piling strategic materials. For that reason I think it is entitled to special treatment in such legislation as is now included in the bill under consideration.

I consider the action of the Agriculture Committee of the House on Wool as well justified, in going out of the usual course of treatment of agricultural commodities and support the Committee on Agriculture and oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER]. I desire also to mention the fact that we are still behind in our work on strategic materials. Back in 1941 we found that too little emphasis was given to the matter of stock piling strategic materials. That is again the case as we enter the post-World War II period.

In the case of wool, we have an example of a critical material that cannot be stock piled in large quantity and the stock pile must be rotated at relatively short intervals. The best possible program for wool that can be built up in the name of national defense is a good source of domestic supply, and that is my interest in this bill primarily. We must give wool different consideration than we give minerals. For instance, wool must be rapidly rotated. The domestic source of supply is more vital in wool than in most of the critical materials, and that is the point I desire to emphasize at this point.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. JENNINGS. Would not the effect of the adoption of the Herter amendment mean that from $12,000,000 to $15,000,000 the wool might bring if that is adopted would go from the wool producers pockets into the pockets of the manufacturers of woolen fabrics?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Representing a wool-producing area I know that it will go out of the pockets of the producers, and they need it very seriously. I have letters from home indicating that they are having difficulty in keeping their flocks going; in fact, a slight reduction in the price they have been receiving for their wool will have a very serious effect; many wool producers will not be able to stay in business.

Mr. JENNINGS. And in that connection the fact that flocks have been reduced in the last 3 years to the extent of 17,000,000 head is unanswerable proof that the ranchers quit raising sheep because they were losing money.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I agree with the gentleman, and it is a dangerous trend, in the name of national defense especially.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Do I understand correctly that at the present time the stock of wool owned by the Government is really in excess of the annual domestic production of wool in this country?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I cannot give the gentleman the exact figures, but I understand the quantity in the hands of the Government is very large.

Mr. BATES of Massachuetts. Does it not necessarily follow that the higher these prices go, later in the form of manufactured products there will be public resistance against the purchase price of these clothes which in turn will be reflected back on the manufacturer and the wool grower if we do not find some way of bringing about an equalization of the price?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I was quite impressed by the remarks of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. BARRETT] yesterday when he showed how very few cents difference in the price of a suit of clothes the difference in price of wool involved here would make. I thought that point was well worthy of our consideration, especially when we consider also the great importance of the support in keeping the production of wool here at home in America on a sound basis.

I sincerely hope the committee position prevails and the Herter amendment is defeated, and I hope the bill is adopted as recommended to the House by the Committee on Agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the Herter amendment. I expect to support the bill in the form reported by the committee. As reported by the committee this legislation is designed to give some degree of justice to the wool growers of America but if you adopt the Herter amendment I am afraid you will make of it largely a wool-dealers' bill.

Mr. Chairman, our sheep population has reached a half-century low mark of 32,542,000 head. During the past 4 years, our wool production has dropped to below 300,000,000 pounds—a reduction of 35 percent from the 1942 production. There has to be a reason for this tremendous and alarming decrease in the production of sheep and wool. That reason is not hard to find, Mr. Chairman. It is due to low prices and long-continued uncertainty in the sheep and wool industry. This legislation, S. 814 as substantially and wisely amended by the House Committee on Agriculture, eliminates the handicaps which have so sharply curtailed our domestic production of sheep and wool. I urge you to support the legislation, as it is now before you, and to reject the Herter amendment as well as an amendment which will be offered later by one of our Democratic colleagues to deny wool the tariff protection now enjoyed by other farm products for which it has been found absolutely necessary. Let us approve this legislation as it is.

A recent report of the Tariff Commission shows that the wool growers of this country during the past few years have been losing money annually on both sheep and wool. These losses have run as high as nearly 10 cents per pound on wool and over $1 per head on sheep. Such losses cannot continue unless America is to become completely dependent upon foreign producers for the wool required, not only for clothing and fabrics but for our national defense as well. The legislation now before you will comprise a real step toward the rebuilding of our domestic sheep and wool industry.

Mr. Chairman, what would be the effect of the Herter amendment? It is simply designed to defeat the purposes of this legislation to the extent of perhaps 4 or 5 or 6 cents per pound. It is devised to take away from the sheep producer a generous portion of the assistance and protection this legislation is intended to provide. Let us defeat the Herter amendment so that we can then vote upon the program provided by this legislation, on its own merits, unhampered by crippling amendments.

Mr. Chairman, the United States is taxing its citizens heavily and necessarily to provide funds to extend aid to the starving and diseased people of war-stricken areas; we are reaching far down into our pockets to provide money for aiding other countries to rehabilitate their war-torn economies; we are confronted by a gigantic national debt of our own and with serious domestic economic problems and adjustments. We can ill-afford in times like these to destroy a great basic industry such as the sheep and wool industry through short-sighted policies or through listening to the siren song of those who urge us to let our own industries die so that those of other countries might live. Mr. Chairman, that argument is neither sound nor sensible. If America goes bankrupt or spins itself into a devastating depression, there is no hope for the rest of the world. For our own security, as well as for the hope of all humanity, we must maintain a solvent America and a sound economic base for our fundamental economic activities. By supporting this legislation, we can give a measure of security and stability to the sheep industry of America and to that degree contribute to world stability as a whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to direct some questions to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER], to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE], and I believe to one other gentleman.

In the first place, if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER] is on the floor I wish to ask him in view of the debate on this amendment what is the real purpose of the Herter amendment? What is the machinery back of it? In other words, what is he driving at? Because many of us are considering as to how we shall vote.

Mr. HERTER. I tried to make that clear at the time I offered the amendment.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Here is the reason I asked the question that way. It has been argued that it will cut the price of wool anywhere from 4, 5, or 6 cents per pound. That is one important item involved from the processors' standpoint. The processor of basic raw materials, of course, is always interested in obtaining his material at the lowest price possible, no matter what it does to the primary producer; but it is difficult for me to believe that the gentleman would offer an amendment for that purpose.

Here is another purpose. If it is true that wool dealers as such have not been permitted to participate in the wool trade since we took over wool control, perhaps 90 percent of the parity price or 80 percent of parity price or 60 percent of parity price would bring the dealers back into the picture. That may be one of the objectives back of the Herter amendment.

Then the third proposition might be that perhaps somebody wants to get rid of the Commodity Credit Corporation control of wool.

I advance those thoughts to give the author of the amendment a chance to explore those three things and I will be glad to yield to him because I cannot believe that the gentleman wants to destroy the wool industry. At the same time if the effect of the amendment will be a 4-, 6,- or 9-cent drop in the price of wool, certainly I cannot support the amendment. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HERTER. I tried to make that clear. The price support called for in this bill is 42.3 cents. The price at 90 percent of parity is about 37.9 cents, a difference of 4.4 cents. That will be the support price. The world price as of the time that the Commodity Credit Corporation ceased buying was 40.1 cents.

The purpose of my amendment is to have for one thing a flexible price, not a fixed price. The second is to put it just under the world price so that wool would not have to be bought by the Government at this price and continue the Government buying the entire clip, but put it in a free market so that it will not cost the Government anything on support unless there is a considerable drop in general commodities.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If there is a considerable drop that is another thing.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. It is quite obvious that the gentleman who offered the amendment stated it would bring the price down 2 cents under the competitive world price.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Since we set prices throughout the world, in all probability it would mean a 2 cents lower price.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It seems to me I am forced to the conclusion that the amendment will point prices down. Whether they will drop 4 cents or 40 cents I do not know. However, any act on the part of the Congress that starts prices down on basic commodities, in other words a great economic force, and these commodities are a great economic force, it becomes a terrible thing for the people of this country who gather their livelihood from producing that raw material. Therefore, I cannot support the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

All time having expired, the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER] to the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HESELTON) there were—ayes 56, noes 110.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Agriculture shall establish monthly (commencing with the month of January 1947) a comparable price for wool and the comparable price so established shall be used for the purposes of all laws in which a parity or comparable price is established or used. The comparable price for wool shall be that price which bears the same relation to the average parity prices of the other basic agricultural commodities, cotton, corn, wheat, rice, tobacco, and peanuts, as the actual price for wool bore to the actual average price of such basic commodities during the period August 1934 to July 1939. Such comparable price for wool may be adjusted for grade, quality, season, and location.

Committee amendment:

Page 2, line 11, strikes out lines 11 to 23, inclusive.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. The provisions of sections 385, 386, and 388 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, shall be applicable to the support operations carried out pursuant to section 2 of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 24, strike out "4" and insert "3."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. The Commodity Credit Corporation may, without regard to restrictions imposed upon it by any law, dispose of any wool produced prior to January 1, 1949, at prices which will permit such wool to be sold in competition with imported wool. The disposition of any accumulated stock under the provisions of this section, however, shall be made at such rate and in such manner as will avoid disruption of the domestic market.

Committee amendment:

Page 3, line 3, strike out lines 3 to 10, inclusive.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. Wool is a basic source of clothing for the people of the United States, and, as such, is deemed a basic agricultural commodity.

Committee amendment:

"SEC. 4. Section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended and reenacted (U. S. C., 1040 ed., title 7, sec. 624), is hereby amended by adding a new subdivision as follows:

"'(f) (1) Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture finds that any article or articles are being or are practically certain to be imported into the United States under such conditions and in such quantities as to render or tend to render ineffective or materially interfere with any loan, purchase, or other program or operation undertaken by the Department of Agriculture or any agency operating under its direction with respect to wool or any product thereof or to reduce substantially the amount of any product processed in the United States from wool or any product thereof while any such program or operation is being undertaken, he shall, by order, impose such fees not in excess of 50 percent ad valorem on any article or articles which may be entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption as he finds and declares to be necessary in order that the entry of such article or articles will not render or tend to render ineffective, or materially interfere with, any program or operation referred to above, or reduce substantially the amount of any product processed in the United States from any wool or any product thereof. In designating any article or articles, the Secretary may describe them by physical qualities, value, use, or upon such other basis as he shall determine.

"'(2) The fees imposed by the Secretary by order under subdivision (f) and any revocation, suspension, or modification thereof, shall become effective on such date as shall be therein specified, and such fees shall be treated for administrative purposes and for the purposes of section 32 of Public Law No. 320, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 24, 1935, as amended, as duties imposed by the Tariff Act of 1930.

"'(3) Any order or provision thereof may be suspended or terminated by the Secretary whenever he finds that the circumstances requiring the order or provision thereof no longer exist or may be modified by the Secretary whenever he finds that changed circumstances require such modification to carry out the purposes of subdivision (f).

"'(4) Any decision of the Secretary under subdivision (f) shall be final and any finding, order, or rule under subdivision (f) may be made by the Secretary without a hearing, formal or informal.

"'(5) Whenever any fee is imposed initially on any grade or quality of imported raw wool pursuant to subdivision (f), there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid upon all such imported raw wool which on the date of the imposition of such fee is held in the United States by any person for sale or other disposition, other than wool held in customs-bonded warehouses, a floor-stocks tax at a rate equal to the amount of the fee imposed with respect to imported raw wool of the same grade and quality.

"'(6) Under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, every person required to pay any floor-stocks tax shall make a return within such time as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and pay such tax within 6 months after the imposition of such fees.

"'(7) Any person required to pay a floor-stocks tax or file a return hereunder, who willfully fails to pay such tax, or make such return, shall, in addition to other penalties provided by law, be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both, together with the costs of prosecution.

"'(8) The term "person," as used in subdivision (f), includes an officer or employee of a corporation, or a member or employee of a partnership, who, as such officer, employee, or member, is under a duty to perform the act in respect of which the violation occurs.'"

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a substitute for the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOPE as a substitute for the committee amendment: On page 3, line 14, strike out all of section 4 and insert in lieu thereof a new section 4 as follows:

"SEC. 4. Subsections (a) and (b) of section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended and reenacted (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 7, sec. 624), are hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(a) Whenever the President has reason to believe that any one or more articles are being, or are practically certain to be, imported into the United States under such conditions and in sufficient quantities as to render or tend to render ineffective or materially interfere with any program or operation undertaken, or to reduce substantially the amount of any product processed in the United States from any commodity subject to and with respect to which any program is in operation, under this title or the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, or section 32, Public Law No. 320, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 24, 1935, as amended, or the Wool Act of 1947, he shall cause an immediate investigation to be made by the United States Tariff Commission, which shall give precedence to investigations under this section to determine such facts. Such investigations shall be made after due notice and opportunity for hearing to interested parties and shall be conducted subject to such regulations as the President shall specify.

"'(b) If, on the basis of such investigation and report to him of findings and recommendations made in connection therewith, the President finds the existence of such facts, he shall by proclamation impose such fees on, or such limitations on the total quantities of, any article or articles which may be entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption as he finds and declares shown by such investigation to be necessary to prescribe in order that the entry of such article or articles will not render or tend to render ineffective or materially interfere with any program or operation undertaken, or will not reduce substantially the amount of any product processed in the United States from any commodity subject to and with respect to which any program is in operation, under this title or the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, or section 32, Public Law No. 320, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 24, 1935, as amended, or the Wool Act of 1947: Provided, That no limitation shall be imposed on the total quantity of any article which may be imported from any country which reduces such permissible total quantity to less than 50 percent of the average annual quantity of such article which was imported from such country during the period from January 1, 1929, to December 31, 1933, both dates inclusive: And provided further, That no limitation shall be imposed on the total quantities of wool or products thereof which may be entered or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption.'"

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment has been explained in connection with the general discussion on the legislation. It has been approved unanimously by the Committee on Agriculture. It follows the lines of section 22 of the AAA which has been on the statute books since 1935 and which has been a part of the recognized agricultural policy of this administration and the Nation for the past 12 years. What this amendment does, as far as section 22 is concerned, is to include wool as one of the commodities upon which the President may take action if the circumstances justify it. In addition to that, it provides that in the case of wool, if action is taken, that action must be limited to the imposition of import fees rather than giving the President a choice between the quota and an import fee.

The reason for that provision is, as everyone acquainted with the woolen industry knows, that it would be difficult if not impossible to administer a quota upon wool imports. That is because wool is imported from a number of different countries. There are hundreds of different grades. There are many importers, and it would be almost impossible to apportion a quota to those who would wish to import particular types and grades of wool.

For that reason, by agreement of everyone, it was decided that the powers given the President as far as wool is concerned should be limited to the power to impose an import fee.

Not only has this legislation been on the books for many years, but there has been action on it under this administration and the preceding administration on a number of occasions. On May 29, 1941, a wheat quota was imposed limiting imports to 800,000 bushels per year. At the same time a quota was imposed limiting imports of flour to 4,000,000 pounds per year. On April 13, 1942, that order was amended excepting wheat and flour for experimental purposes, registered seed wheat, and distress diversions of wheat and wheat flour from the quota provisions. Again on April 19, 1943, amendment was added excepting wheat purchased by the War Food Administration for livestock-feed purposes. In the case of cotton, there was a basic order imposed on September 20, 1939, on long and short staple cotton. On December 19, 1940, an amendment was made to it excepting certain staple lengths. On March 31, 1942, the order was again amended. On July 29, 1942, the order terminated country allocations for long staple cotton. On February 1, 1947, an amendment was imposed on short, harsh, or rough cotton giving those grades a quota of 70,000,000 pounds.

So that all we are doing today as far as wool is concerned is to bring it within the provisions of this legislation which has long been recognized as part of the agricultural policy of this country.

It also is in harmony with the request which came from the Department of Agriculture in a letter to the Speaker of the House on February 4, 1947, in which was recommended that section 22 be amended and expanded to include other commodities upon which price-support programs were in effect.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the substitute amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered to the substitute amendment by Mr. COOLEY: At the end of the substitute amendment offered by Mr. HOPE add the following language:

"No proclamation under this section shall be enforced in contravention of any treaty or other international agreement to which the United States is or hereafter becomes a party."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, the language contained in my amendment was taken bodily from the bill H. R. 1825 introduced on February 10, 1947, by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE], chairman of the House committee on Agriculture.

The bill H. R. 1825 had the approval of Secretary Anderson, and I understand it had clearance by the Bureau of the Budget, but it never would have had the approval of Secretary Anderson or the Bureau of the Budget without the language to which I have just referred.

I am certain the distinguished chairman of my committee has no desire whatever to leave erroneous impressions upon the minds of the membership of this House, but unintentionally or otherwise I am afraid his last statement is well calculated to leave the membership of the House under the impression that Secretary Anderson in his letter of February 4, 1947, to the Speaker of this House advocated and approved the thing he is now attempting to do on the floor, that is, to secure the passage of a bill which will have the effect of placing wool under section 22, without language which would protect reciprocal-trade agreements.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. Yes; of course I will yield.

Mr. HOPE. Does the gentleman say now that the Secretary of Agriculture is opposed to the amendment that the gentlemen from Kansas offered a short time ago?

Mr. COOLEY. I have no right to quote the Secretary of Agriculture. I have not consulted him about the amendment, but I venture the assertion that he is definitely opposed to it unless it contains the language I am now attempting to add to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. HOPE. Does the gentleman know that the bill, H. R. 1825, which was drafted in the Department of Agriculture in its original form when it left the Department of Agriculture, did not have the provision in it to which the gentleman has made reference and which he has offered as an amendment to the substitute?

Mr. COOLEY. I am perfectly willing to accept the gentleman's statement with regard to the matter, but I do know what was stated in the letter of February 4, 1947, in which the Secretary of Agriculture discussed the matter. I would like to read for the benefit of the committee just what he said with respect to this provision.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further before he goes to that point?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. The gentleman knows also, does he not, that Mr. Dodd, Under Secretary of Agriculture, appeared before the Committee on Agriculture when this bill was under consideration and urged a quota upon wool imports?

Mr. COOLEY. My recollection is that Mr. Dodd made some such statement before the Senate Committee on Agriculture. I am not sure what statement he made before the gentleman's committee, but, regardless of what Mr. Dodd said about it, I want the House to hear what Secretary Clinton Anderson had to say about it. I can read it very hurriedly:

Certain limitations on the scope of action permitted under section 22 are involved in the agreements with foreign countries concluded under the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. Thus, all but one of our reciprocal-trade agreements prohibit the levying of new fees, duties, or other charges connected with imports against products included in the agreements;

Most of the agreements require consultation with the other country, except under exceptional circumstances, prior to the imposition of quotas on products given duty concessions in the agreements. The exercise of the authority granted under section 22 has not in the past conflicted with any of our international undertakings, and presumably this will also be the case in the future. It would, however, be of advantage to the United States in the conduct of its foreign policy if this were to be specifically required by section 22. Accordingly, the proposed amendment would prohibit any enforcement of a proclamation under section 22 that would be in contravention of the international obligations of the United States.

The amendment referred to is the amendment which I have just offered.

Commenting further, the Secretary said:

In view of the need for broadening the applicability of section 22 to furnish the protection to programs of the Department of Agriculture which the Congress apparently intended, it is respectfully requested that consideration be given to amending that section as proposed in the enclosed draft. It is believed that the amendment is urgently needed, and that its enactment will be a definite contribution to the welfare of American agriculture.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. Does the gentleman contend that the passage of this legislation, if amended as proposed by the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Kansas, would be in conflict with any existing reciprocal trade agreements?

Mr. COOLEY. I am not sufficiently familiar with existing trade agreements to know whether it does or not, but I will say this: That I have before me a letter from the Under Secretary of State, Mr. Clayton, to the effect that if we adopt this bill as now proposed to this House we will stand before the world convicted of insincerity. Now, that is Mr. Clayton's statement. Whether or not it is true, I do not know. I also know that Secretary Marshall is in complete accord with Under Secretary Clayton in this respect. It is easy to see just the effect of what we are about to do. First of all, as a member of the House Committee on Agriculture, I never thought I would be called upon to consider writing a tariff bill, and that is exactly what we are doing. No question has been raised with respect to the jurisdiction of our committee. If the Congress wants the great Committee on Agriculture to take over these important functions, I am, for one, perfectly willing to assume the responsibility.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield briefly.

Mr. GROSS. If this was cotton would you not feel different about it?

Mr. COOLEY. No, sir. You cannot start running rabbits. I am running a fox. I am talking of something of world-wide importance. I want it understood by the membership of this House, particularly the friends of reciprocal trade agreements, that now there is before this House the proposition whether or not we are going to repudiate reciprocal trade treaties under which we have operated for the past several years, or whether we are going to approve them by defeating the Hope amendment now before the House.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. RIZLEY. I want to ask the gentleman frankly this question: It is my understanding that, under the present international agreements or under the present trade agreements that we have, the Hope amendment, of course, does not violate any existing agreement, but the gentleman's language not only covers any existing agreements, but it says "any agreement that shall hereafter be made." Now, if we make any future agreements under the Reciprocal Trade Act, which we might say would lower the duties on wool, then, of course, this bill is out of the window, as the gentleman knows. This amendment, in effect, kills this bill, does it not?

Mr. COOLEY. The amendment, in effect, is compatible with the reciprocal trade treaty policy of this country and the amendment without the language which I am attempting to annex is thoroughly and utterly incompatible with such policy. How is it possible for our State Department to negotiate trade agreements and pledge the good faith of this great country of ours when the contracting parties know at the very moment that they undertake to enter into an agreement there is a sword at the White House with which we have armed the President to carve the heart out of any agreement that is there made?

Mr. RIZLEY. Let us assume for the sake of argument Mr. Clayton goes back over to Geneva and effects some other international agreement in respect to wool and the agreement he effects would prohibit the President from doing the very things this bill provides for. Then this amendment, of course, kills this bill, does it not?

Mr. COOLEY. I am not optimistic enough to believe Mr. Clayton will ever be able to negotiate another agreement and I doubt very much if he will undertake to go back to Geneva with this sort of a bill hanging over his neck to embarrass him when he goes to the conference table.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LECOMPTE. I want to ask the gentleman what the parliamentary situation is. Did not this bill come out by a unanimous vote?

Mr. COOLEY. Yes; and I made my full confession yesterday on that.

Mr. LECOMPTE. There is no minority report?

Mr. COOLEY. There is no minority report, and no hearings.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Were not hearings held?

Mr. COOLEY. Hearings were held but not printed.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. They were held.

Mr. COOLEY. They were held but not printed.

Mr. LECOMPTE. The statement from the Secretary of State was there?

Mr. COOLEY. No; the statement of the Secretary of State was not considered by the committee. It was handed to me yesterday. But here is the proposition as I see it: You cannot go out of this House and say you did not understand that you are here cutting straight across the reciprocal trade treaties of the past, those that are now in existence, and giving a weapon to the President of the United States to carve to pieces any that may hereafter be made. If you are going to attack our international economic policy, our reciprocal trade treaties, why not approach the problem boldly and courageously? You are attempting to sabotage every agreement that is now in existence and to hamstring the State Department so that it cannot make new ones.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Would the gentleman favor placing wool under a quota system?

Mr. COOLEY. I do not know that I would be in favor of placing wool under a quota system. I think that is a subject that could well be considered by our committee and I would be perfectly willing to give it my time and attention.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. We have done it for certain types of cotton?

Mr. COOLEY. Yes; and I am not so sure I am for the quotas we have on Egyptian cotton. It seems to me we ought to be buying a little of it if we expect to trade with Egypt. The point is: Why should we approach this matter by the backdoor method? This is one of the greatest problems confronting this Congress and the country.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. Speaking of a back-door approach, the gentleman admits his amendment would in effect destroy section 22. So why not just vote on section 22?

Mr. COOLEY. No; I do not agree with that. I read from Secretary Anderson's letter that section 22 had never embarrassed any department of the Government, that they had operated effectively in the interest of our own economy. He does say that he wants the language that I have in my amendment.

Now, there is the proposition. Are you as Democrats, and I will be a little bit partisan about it, going to follow your own Secretary of Agriculture, your own Secretary of State, and your own President, or are you going to let a subcommittee of the steering committee of the Republican Party write legislation for you?

I want to say that as a Democrat I am unwilling to repudiate Mr. Anderson, Mr. Marshall, Mr. Clayton, and Mr. Truman in this way and make it impossible for them to proceed with their plans to rebuild our world trade and to start the wheels of world commerce turning once again.

On May 9, 1947, Secretary of State Marshall in a communication addressed to Mr. Philip D. Reed, United States Associates, New York City, stated:

> Since becoming Secretary of State I have spent most of my time in international political negotiations. This experience has reenforced my conviction that enduring political harmony rests heavily upon economic stability. A lasting peace demands international economic arrangements, whereby natural resources, plant and equipment, and manpower are fully and productively employed. The goods and services produced must flow through domestic and international trade channels. In no other way can we create an economic and social environment free from the unrest in which political instability is bred.
> Mr. Clayton, head of a United States delegation, is now working in Geneva with the representatives of 17 other nations to remove excessive barriers to trade and to write into the charter for an International Trade Organization a code of good conduct for international trade relationships. This is a basic part of our general foreign policy. The success of these meetings will have a direct relation to the success of our peace efforts.
> The roots of this policy reach far down into the basic interests of all of our people. Its benefits will redound to all. Our immediate job is to assure its effectuation. That is the challenge and the responsibility of all of us who earnestly seek an enduring peace.

May 18, 1947, on the occasion of the observance of World Trade Week, May 18–24, 1947, Secretary of State Marshall made the following statement:

The keynote of World Trade Week in 1947 is "World Trade Unites Nations;" a theme particularly appropriate for a time when the need for unity among peoples is more vital than ever before in history. National leaders are urgently seeking unity in all the fields of international relations—political, security, and economic. Economic conflict and trade wars invariably set the stage for political disunity.

Representatives of 18 trading nations are meeting now in Geneva in a concerted effort to achieve unity through expansion of world trade and the resulting increases in production, employment, and improvement of living standards in all countries.

Although the United States Government has taken a leading part in bringing about this meeting, a successful conclusion can only be realized through the cooperation of all participating nations. At Geneva these countries are seeking to lower excessive trade barriers and are engaged in drafting a charter for an International Trade Organization, to insure international cooperation in commerce. Agreement on this charter will mark a great step toward economic stability and the common security.

If there is doubt in anyone's mind as to why Mr. Clayton left Geneva, I suggest that you might communicate with him directly in an effort to obtain accurate information concerning his return to this country. I am sure that he would welcome an opportunity to discuss the situation with Members of either House of Congress. I only regret that he was not invited to speak to our committee before this controversy was brought to the floor of the House.

I hope, gentlemen, that I do not exaggerate the importance of the matter now under consideration. I sincerely believe it to be of great importance and worthy of the careful consideration of the elected representatives of the people. I believe that I know that the destiny of America depends upon our ability to solve the problems of world trade. I am convinced that this cannot be done by the method of retaliatory tariffs and trade barriers and by isolating ourselves from the rest of the world.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has again expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. Chairman, before we get too far into this argument, perhaps we better stop and consider just how far reaching the results would be if the gentleman's amendment were adopted. The gentleman's amendment does not apply just to wool; do not let that confuse anybody. It applies to any action that may be taken by the President under section 22 as it stands on the books now. If we adopt the Cooley amendment, it means that the State Department would have the authority and the power to override and overrule this law, that Congress has enacted to protect the cotton producer, and the wheat producer, and the producers of other commodities in this country which are under price support programs.

If this amendment is adopted, it means that the State Department—not the Congress, and not the President—is going to say whether or not this protection will be afforded. It means that the Secretary of State may have more to say about the price policies affecting agriculture, than the Secretary of Agriculture. I believe that Members representing districts in this country whose products have the protection of section 22 should think rather carefully before they vote to adopt this amendment which nullifies all of the protection under section 22 if the Secretary of State wishes to take such action.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. Did not the gentleman introduce H. R. 1825 with exactly the same language in it that is in my amendment?

Mr. HOPE. Yes.

Mr. COOLEY. Why did the gentleman then think that the language was so good and now it all of a sudden is so bad?

Mr. HOPE. Well, the gentleman from Kansas introduced the bill H. R. 1825 as a departmental bill sent up to the Speaker of the House and transmitted to the committee.

Mr. COOLEY. Then it is simply in the nature of a plea of confession and avoidance, as I mentioned yesterday.

Mr. HOPE. If that is what the gentleman wishes to call it. The Chairman, as he frequently does, introduced this bill in order to get the matter before the committee. Of course, the committee has not acted on the matter as yet, and the committee very likely will make amendments to the measure before it is acted upon.

Mr. COOLEY. May I ask the gentleman one other question? Is it correct that the Secretary of Agriculture, or the Bureau of the Budget, the administration, I will say, would not have approved H. R. 1825 with the language out?

Mr. HOPE. Well, that is something that the gentleman from Kansas cannot answer definitely because he does not know. He has been told that the bill, when it left the Department of Agriculture and went to the Bureau of the Budget, did not contain that language, and he has been told also that the State Department insisted that the language go in the bill.

Mr. COOLEY. That was the statement I wanted the gentleman to make.

Mr. HOPE. And that is, as far as I know, the history of the legislation before it came to the Speaker of the House.

As far as governmental policy is concerned, I do not think there is any question but what there is some conflict between the reciprocal trade agreement policy and section 22 policy. It is just another illustration of the fact that during all this period the administration apparently has not been able to make up its mind which way it did want to go on these conflicting matters of domestic and foreign policy. However, I submit that as far as the administration is concerned that this section 22 policy, is just as respectable, has had just as much administration support behind it and is just as important from the standpoint of carrying out administration policy as any other policy that has been in effect during the past 12 years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas be permitted to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. The gentleman from Kansas has no desire to take up an undue amount of time on this question but it seems to him that we might just as well strike out this section 22 provision from the bill; in fact, we had better strike it out if we adopt the Cooley amendment, because when we do that we put in the hands of the Secretary of State the power and the authority to go to Geneva, meet with representatives of other nations and log-roll and trade away the protection the Committee on Agriculture, the Congress, and the President have tried to set up for agricultural products during the last 12 years.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. GRANGER. It is not clear in my mind, but as I understand, when the agitation was on in the beginning of this session of Congress to do something about reciprocal trade agreements, the President directed a letter to the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs or some other committee in the other body stating that he was for an escape clause being put in every one of these treaties that were negotiated where it was shown that the trade would be disadvantageous to American agriculture. Is not that true?

Mr. HOPE. I understand there was an agreement between the President or the Secretary of State, I am not sure which, and certain Members of the body at the other end of the Capitol, that agreements reached at Geneva would contain an escape clause provision which would protect American producers of Agricultural products. But if we pass this legislation we are repudiating that; we are saying that as far as Congress is concerned we are overruling that agreement and that understanding.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. What I should like to understand is this: If the Cooley amendment is adopted and hereafter concessions are granted in respect to the tariffs on wool, then, the support program provided for in this bill being in effect, would not that involve the payment of tremendous amounts in subsidies out of the Federal Treasury?

Mr. HOPE. I am afraid that is what would happen.

Mr. HALLECK. In other words, future concessions given on wool would have to be compensated for out of the Federal Treasury, insofar as the support program is concerned.

Mr. HOPE. That would no doubt be true.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. The effect of adopting the amendment offered by the gentleman without the language contained in my amendment would be to strike out the reciprocal trade treaties clear across the board, would it not?

Mr. HOPE. Certainly not.

Mr. COOLEY. Does the gentleman think our State Department would be able to negotiate a solemn agreement with some other nation knowing that this power was in the possession of the President of the United States?

Mr. HOPE. We have had section 22 in the law since 1935 and many reciprocal trade agreements have been made during that time. I do not see why the situation would be any different now. As to existing agreements I asked the gentleman a while ago whether he knew of any existing reciprocal trade agreements which would be interfered with by the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas, and the gentleman said that he did not know of any. I can say this: I do not know of any reciprocal trade agreements covering the importation of raw wool which would be affected. We have reciprocal trade agreements with Uruguay and with Argentina on raw wool, but those agreements cover types of wool that we do not produce in this country, so this legislation would not be in conflict with those trade agreements.

Mr. COOLEY. As I say, I do not know whether or not it would be in conflict with trade agreements, but I do believe that the gentleman will agree that the effect of this language contained in the gentleman's amendment will be to make it difficult for our State Department at this time to negotiate future trade treaties.

Mr. HOPE. It will undoubtedly make it difficult to negotiate a trade treaty lowering the tariff on wool.

Mr. COOLEY. Yes; that is true.

Mr. HOPE. If the gentleman's amendment is adopted, the Under Secretary of State, Mr. Clayton, can go back to Geneva and reduce the tariff on wool 50 percent if he wants to and there is no way on earth of preventing it. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina should be voted down.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words, and ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, no matter what argument might be made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE], the fact remains that the adoption of his amendment, and I am addressing myself to the amendment the gentleman has offered, will be construed, and, in fact, will be a direct attack upon the reciprocal trade legislation that this Congress has passed and which is now on the statute books.

It will have an effect indirectly upon every existing agreement in that every country with which we have an agreement will be sensitive to the adoption of this amendment and will govern their actions in the future accordingly. It will certainly have an effect upon any future negotiations.

As Under Secretary of State Clayton said, or the inference might well be drawn from his letter, it will practically mean the dissolution and the termination of the Geneva Conference that is now going on.

There are people in this country who think all we can do is sell to every other country and not buy anything and that we are going to prosper by that. Anyone who thinks that situation can exist is living in a dream world. We had that in the 1920's and it was a contributing factor to the depression of 1929 to 1933. We have learned by hard experience that in order to have prosperity in America we have to depend upon at least 10 percent of our production and farm products being sold and exported abroad. In order to have that situation, we must buy from other countries. There must be some kind of a balance of trade.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. BARRETT. Will the gentleman admit that we have purchased 80 percent of the wool that we have consumed each year for the last 5 years from foreign countries?

Mr. McCORMACK. Not 80 percent. I will not argue with the gentleman on that point, but my understanding is that we produced about 30 percent of the domestic consumption. I will not quibble with the gentleman over whether the figure is 70 percent or 80 percent, but the fact is we do not produce enough wool in America to meet the domestic consumption. That is an indisputable fact.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to my friend from Pennsylvania. I thought you were interested in oil.

Mr. GAVIN. I am interested in oil and wool, too. Very much so. But in view of the fact that we do not produce enough wool, why not get into this stock pile of some 480,000,000 pounds that we have here in the United States and use that up? There is another question I would like to ask the gentleman while I am on my feet.

Mr. McCORMACK. All right. That is question No. 1.

Mr. GAVIN. Are we legislating on the wool industry and for the protection of the wool growers, or is this debate on the reciprocal trade treaties? I think we are getting a little off the beam here.

Mr. McCORMACK. Does the gentleman know how he is going to vote on the bill yet?

Mr. GAVIN. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. It is the first time I have heard the gentleman admit before the final vote that he knew how he was going to vote on any bill pending in this body.

Mr. GAVIN. The gentleman usually knows how he is going to vote.

Mr. McCORMACK. At least I make up my mind.

Now, the basic proposition in this bill is a support price for wool. The proponents of this bill started out with that proposition. As I said yesterday, when it went through the Senate so quickly and so easily, then avarice came in, and they conceived of section 4. Now section 4, and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] is designed for no other purpose than to have the consumers, the American public, pay the subsidy to the wool producers. That is the new policy of the Republican Party. That is what this bill includes.

The proponents of this bill started out with the theory of a support price. The Senate bill shows that. It would necessarily follow, in order to carry out the provisions of the Senate bill, that the subsidy, if any, would have to be paid by the Government. Somewhere along the line they said, "We cannot stand for that, because that conflicts with the $6,000,000,000 cut in this body and $4,500,000,000 cut in the other body." They said, "Oh, we cannot do that." Then they conceived section 4 to slip it over onto the public and to have the public pay the price. Then, section 4 was too severe. It encountered too much opposition, and then they conceived of this very artful amendment to bring it under section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. But they still were in a box. They had Republican wool growers, and they had Republicans in the industry. In the industry they were divided. Those who purchased domestic wool were for anything. They would destroy all kinds of reciprocal trade agreements or anything else to get it through, because they have been threatened by the wool producers that if they did not support the bill they would not sell wool to the Boston market. I know, because they have tried to use that argument on me. I received a letter from a man in Boston, and I am going to answer him, because it is the most selfish letter I ever received, where a man puts his own pocketbook and his own interest above the national interest. I name him. He is in town now. I have not seen him yet. I hope that one day I shall see him so I can tell him what I think of his letter. The Republican Party does not want to displease the wool industry or any part of it, because up in Boston—I will tell my friend the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE]—I do not have any political or social connections with them, because they are the backbone of the Republican Party. They did not want to offend the wool growers. They did not want to offend any part of the wool industry, because they are the backbone of the Republican Party; and they gave an escape clause. The escape clause in this, applicable to no other commodity, that no import quotas can be applied. They are trying to ride two horses. That is what is happening. And the public is made to pay.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] has expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes in view of the fact that my time was taken up answering questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. I also advise the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] in his artful attack on the wool industry in Boston and the profits that they made——

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HOPE. Does the gentleman deny the statement that the gentleman from Kansas made as to the profits of the wool dealers in Boston and the wool manufacturers generally?

Mr. McCORMACK. I have no knowledge and therefore I cannot deny, but I will say this much, that in 1946 all corporations made much more than they did in 1945 or 1944. You must remember that the excess-profits tax did not apply to 1946 profits. All corporations, in fact, and all industries showed greater net profit in 1946, where they had a net return, than they did in 1945. That is my recollection. Then, there is the carry-over provision. I might also say that that tax bill was conceived by a Democratic-controlled Committee on Ways and Means, and passed by a Democratic-controlled Congress. There is no question but what that entered into the 1946 net corporate profits. All business benefited, and I say that against the artful attack made upon the wool industry of Boston or elsewhere—and politically they are Republicans—it is a little strange that a Democrat must defend them in their political capacity. I think the attack upon the wool industry in Boston was unnecessary because of profits made in 1946.

Now we have the situation where a subsidy of some kind is necessary to carry out the support program. There is no question about it. The majority leader admitted it yesterday; admitted it also today. It is a subsidy, but instead of doing the right thing and paying the support price, which is the main purpose of this bill, and have it come out of the Government where it would cost less, they are passing this on by this amendment to the consuming public. It will pyramid and pyramid until in the end it will have cost the public two or three times the amount of the subsidy that the Government would pay if intellectual honesty were followed in the enactment of this bill, and the subsidy necessary to maintain this support price is paid by the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, that we may arrive at an understanding as to a limitation of time on this amendment, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 45 minutes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will not the gentleman modify his request and make it apply to this amendment? There may be other amendments to be considered.

Mr. HOPE. The gentleman from Kansas intended to limit his request to the Cooley amendment and amendments to the Cooley amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] asks unanimous consent that all debate on the Cooley amendment and all amendments thereto close in 45 minutes.

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. May we learn how the time is to be divided and who is to be recognized?

The CHAIRMAN. The following Members were seeking recognition at the time the request was agreed to: Messrs. MURRAY of Wisconsin, RIZLEY, Mrs. DOUGLAS, Messrs. CASE of South Dakota, JENNINGS, AUGUST H. ANDRESEN, GRANGER, PACE, RANKIN, HOFFMAN, CRAWFORD, and RAYBURN.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. If I relinquish my time will it be divided amongst the others?

The CHAIRMAN. It will.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Then I will not use my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN] is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I am sure the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts would not be making his plea here today if the views of his Republican wool-selling constituents had not coincided with his own views on free trade, for some of the industries in this country. I am just wondering what his attitude will be when Mr. Clayton gets to operating on woolen cloth over at the Geneva Conference, proposing to reduce the duty on woolen cloth. Of course, I know some of the manufacturers up in the Boston area want free wool and a high duty on the products that they produce. That is only natural. I would not even say they were selfish to ask that because they are trying to protect themselves and their industry just as the producers of wool are expected to do here today.

There is not a great deal of wool produced in my district, but, as I see it, wool is one of the vital and essential commodities in this country. It is produced in the interest of the general welfare of the country. If we follow the State Department's argument and policy the wool industry in this country will be gradually liquidated until we will be left at the mercy of the British wool cartel that controls 85 percent of the wool production in the world.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Would not the effect of the adoption of this Cooley amendment be to make the Agriculture Department a little bobtail on the State Department dog?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I do not think there would even be any bob left on the tail if they follow the State Department's philosophy.

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. CHENOWETH. In connection with this larger question, may I ask whether or not the State Department or the Congress of the United States is going to write the basic legislation in this country?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I always thought that the Congress should write the policy, but having lived through the experience of 14 years of a New Deal administration I found that most of the policies were dictated and written down in the State Department or some other agency of the Government, and if the Congress did not pass a law according to what they wanted down there, whatever we did pass here would be interpreted any way they wanted to.

Mr. CHENOWETH. Then is it not about time to put an end to that policy and write language that even they can understand?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That is what we are here for. We are supposed to write the policies and the officials in the State Department and in the other departments are supposed to carry out the intent of the Congress, because we are presumed to represent the people.

We had a Mr. Nichols, an economic adviser to Mr. Clayton, before our Committee on Agriculture. We discussed in particular the attitute of the State Department on the subject of wool and on the subject of other products produced in this country. The only thing we could gain out of Mr. Nichols' argument was that in connection with small industries like the wool industry, the pottery industry or the glassware industry, these should undergo gradual liquidation on the theory that in other countries, where cheap labor and a low living standard exists, production would be cheaper.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina should be defeated, and I hope that the Committee will overwhelmingly approve the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Utah [Mr. GRANGER].

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Chairman, this is simply an amendment that gives the committee the opportunity to say how this subsidy, or whatever it is called, is going to be paid. The question is whether it is going to be paid by the consumers or by the taxpayers.

It has always been the argument of my colleagues on this side that they did not want any subsidy. We want the price of the product paid in the market place. We have always—I will say most of us have—opposed a direct subsidy. Now, that is the question that is before us today and it is a very simple one, too, whether or not we want to put some restraint on commodities that are going to compete directly with wool or whether we are going to permit wool to come in, as it now does, for the next 2 years and let the Federal Treasury pay for it.

Now, it seems to me that our country has made a great contribution to the world. I have always voted for things that have been helpful to our neighbors, but inasmuch as we have made the contribution we have in American blood and materials, we certainly cannot be accused of taking a selfish attitude when we merely want to get rid of an emergency stock pile of wool, namely, 500,000,000 pounds.

Now, that is simply the question that is before the House, and I think we should support the committee. I want to say here for our distinguished chairman, if there have been any Republican politics in this thing so far as he is concerned, I have not been aware of it, and I have been working with him very closely. The wool industry of the United States will owe the gentleman from Kansas a great debt of gratitude if he is able to get this bill passed for them.

Now about the question that has been raised as to what this might do to the trade agreements. There is no trade agreement that will be abrogated or that is involved in this question. True, it might have some effect in the future. I think we might just as well be frank about this matter and say that the Department of State was actually engaged in lowering the tariff on wool when this legislation was brought to the Committee on Agriculture. There is no question about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Utah has expired.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman my 4 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah is recognized for 4 additional minutes.

Mr. GRANGER. It is true that there are negotiations on reciprocal trade agreements. But, where can you trade? As I told you yesterday, one-third of all the revenues we get from tariffs comes from wool. Sure, it is a question that is vital to Mr. Clayton. I think if there had not been some stop made to these negotiations, the wool industry would have been traded clear out of the picture. I do not think there is any question about that, and I assume that is the reason that Mr. Clayton is so exercised over this problem. Now, we might just as well be fair and frank about it.

But, I want to say that if there is a lowering of the tariff, certainly you are going to destroy this industry. If it is of as little consequence as some people seem to think it is, go ahead and destroy it, because that is all it will take—another lowering of the price of our domestic wool. As has been said here time and time again, it is a very important commodity in our economy. The War Department has said and still says it is a critical material needed for our security. Suppose we kill the industry entirely. Do not be fooled by thinking the world is going to come to our rescue if we need wool in an emergency. When they get control of it we will be at the mercy of importing countries, such as the British Empire. We have been pretty decent with Britain, it seems to me. For the last 2 years at least we have given them our whole domestic market. They have had it in its entirety. It does not seem to me we are being selfish or doing anything that would disturb anybody in this matter because this is a temporary measure, primarily for the purpose of disposing of 500,000,000 pounds of wool that we have that we cannot sell. These are the issues.

I say to those people who are such great followers of the administration: Through all the dark days of the war and during our preparation, no one followed the administration then more than I. It is easy to be a great follower of the administration when you agree with what they are trying to do, but it is a different thing when you disagree with them just a little. I have not often disagreed with the administration. I do not agree with the gentleman from Minnesota; I am pretty much of a new dealer myself, as everybody knows.

Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment is rejected, and that every other crippling amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JENNINGS].

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, let us get this argument back on a nonpartisan basis. I am always partisan in a nonpartisan way. I am very happy that this discussion has partaken of that character. I see favoring this bill my good friends the gentleman fror Wyoming, FRANK BARRETT, the gentleman from Colorado, J. EDGAR CHENOWETH, and the gentleman from Kansas, CLIFFORD HOPE, and over here are my distinguished friends the gentleman from Georgia, STEPHEN PACE, the gentleman from Utah, WALTER K. GRANGER, and other fine Americans who happen to be of the Democratic persuasion. This is not a Republican question or a Democratic question, it is a nonpartisan American effort to take care of the men and women who are engaged in the production of wool and mutton in this country. That is what it is.

Let us look at this amendment here and just see what we are undertaking to do to the Congress and to the President and to this bill. Here is the Cooley amendment:

> No proclamation under this section shall be enforced in contravention of any treaty or other international agreement to which the United States is or hereafter becomes a party.

That means that we tie the President's hands, we nullify this proposed act of Congress, and we give a blank check of power to this man Clayton to scuttle the sheep and wool industry in this country. What does he say in this letter in which he challenges the sincerity of this Congress? He says that the sheep and wool production in this country returns less than one-half of 1 percent of the income of our farmers and growers of livestock. Then he stresses the great importance of the international agreement he claims he is about to sponsor. Just what does he mean? It means that Mr. Clayton in his thinking is prepared to finally destroy the growing of sheep and the production of wool on the farms and ranches of the United States. There are fewer sheep in this country today than there were in 1867. In that year the population of this country was 40,000,000. Today there are 142,000,000 people in this country. In the past 5 years our number of sheep has fallen from 49,000,000 to 32,000,000. This has happened because it is no longer profitable to raise them.

Will Rogers once said that this country never lost a war and never won a conference. Clayton is in a conference. He wants to make goats out of our sheep growers.

Mr. Clayton, from my reading of his activities in international finance and trading, has done well for Will Clayton, but if he has ever done anything for this country it has escaped the publicity that has attended this self-aggrandizement and self-enrichment.

He says we must sacrifice this important source of food and clothing for our people to make the people of Australia, New Zealand, and South America feel good toward us. The Australians and New Zealanders should love us for what we have done for them. Had it not been for our sailors, soldiers, marines, and air forces, they would be Jap provinces today.

This talk about protection for our wool industry increasing the cost of clothing is bunk. There are four pounds of wool in an average suit of clothing. This costs the manufacturer less than $2. The cost of the wool that goes into a man's suit of clothes, a boy's suit, or a woman's dress is not what increases its cost. The high price is the result of the high cost of its manufacture. What would the price of wool be and what would lamb chops cost if we were dependent on foreign countries for these commodities? America, so far as is possible, must be self-sustaining. And the craziest thing this Congress could do is to destroy the growing of sheep and wool on the farms and ranches of our country.

Do we wish to give this man, Clayton, this international trader, this fellow who challenges the sincerity of this Congress, the men who represent our people back home, this unlimited power? It does not lie in his mouth to challenge the sincerity of Congress. We have ample grounds for doubting his. Let us defeat the Cooley amendment and adopt the Hope amendment and take care of the American men and women who on farms and ranches all over this country are growing sheep and wool. It will be a black day for the people of our country should they ever become dependent on any foreign country for food and clothing which can and should be produced on our own farms and ranches.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I am in sympathy with the purposes and objectives of the pending bill. I favor giving wool and all other agricultural commodities comparable consideration. I have high regard for the Committee on Agriculture, and I know of no man who has contributed more to agriculture in the United States than the distinguished chairman of this committee the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE]. I want to be sure that we are not putting wool in a preferred class insofar as this program is concerned in the pending bill.

The substitute of the gentleman from Kansas amends existing law to include the Wool Act of 1947. That is not as simple as including wool with the basic commodities, in existing law. That substitute includes the terms of this act, and the terms of this act call for a program for 2 years. If section 32 funds are continued, then programs may be continued or be made available for cotton, corn, wheat, and other basic agricultural commodities. But I am alarmed at the reports that the Subcommittee on Agricultural Appropriations intends to provide for the fiscal year 1948 that section 32 funds be paid into the Treasury and not be made available for support programs. If that is true, then, while there is other legislation authorizing import quotas and export subsidies, that legislation cannot be invoked because the basis of the other legislation is the programs that are authorized now only by section 32 funds.

The chairman of the committee said that he had under consideration H. R. 1825 in his committee to provide for agricultural programs. I call attention to the fact that the substitute under consideration so far as the cotton, corn, and wheat growers and growers of other agricultural commodities who are interested are concerned, covers, and I read from the substitute:

> Under this title, or the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act as amended, or section 32, Public Law 320, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 24, 1935, as amended.

The word "title" does not cover the acts of 1938 or 1942.

There is not a word about the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 or the Stabilization Act of 1942. So I respectfully suggest to the chairman and committee that, while I am in sympathy and am agreeable to their continuing and studying the matter of amending section 22 in fairness to the corn, wheat, cotton, and other basic agricultural commodities, it was an oversight that the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, are not included. Why include section 32 of the act of 1935 or the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, when the authority for implementing other programs authorized by section 32 are the said acts of 1938 and 1942? I call attention to this significant statement that in the pending bill under section 3, certain sections of the act of 1938 are made available to wool. The failure to include discriminates against other products or commodities.

I submit, therefore, and I urge the chairman of the committee and the members of the committee while I am agreeable to their procedure in committee or conference and while I rely upon them in the reporting of the bill H. R. 1825, with amendments, as to commodities and programs in general, in all fairness in view of the threat as to the repeal of section 32 funds or their being paid into the Treasury, unless you want to place wool on a preferred basis because under the terms of this bill if section 32 funds are not made available wool will still be provided for but not so with corn, cotton, wheat, and other basic agricultural commodities, these two acts should be inserted, which were previously passed by Congress and for which the Congress stands. There should be inserted in the pending substitute these two acts in substantially the following language, to wit: "or the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended," before the words "or the Wool Act of 1947" in paragraphs (a) and (b) of the amendment.

I extend to summarize by saying that, while the distinguished chairman and other members of the committee have stated that the pending bill will not take from corn, wheat, cotton, or other basic agricultural commodities any existing rights or benefits, the pending bill by amending section 22 to include the Wool Act of 1947 would give wool a program if section 32 funds were paid into the Treasury and not made available for programs. The pending bill gives to wool a preferred status for it will not be dependent for the next 2 years on section 32 funds. I suggest to the distinguished chairman and to the members of the committee handling the bill that the substitute should be amended by inserting before the words "or the Wool Act of 1947" the provisions of H. R. 1825, amending section 22 (a) and (b) substantially as set out in said H. R. 1825. Such an amendment would cover: "the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, or any loan, purchase-price support, or other program or operation undertaken by the Department of Agriculture or any agency operating under its direction with respect to any agricultural commodity or product thereof." I took the matter up with the chairman during the general debate when his substitute was proposed and suggested that it be amended to provide for other programs than wool. He responded that he did not want to open up purchase-price support or other programs or operations in connection with the pending bill, as wool was entitled to relief, but he stated that he was in sympathy with the definite provisions for other programs and that his committee would either report H. R. 1825, as amended, or a similar bill to provide for other support programs.

The question involves not only giving wool comparable treatment to corn, wheat, and cotton but unless clarified, in the event section 32 funds are not available for such other crops, it involves a preferred status for wool. Neither the committee nor the advocates of the pending bill ask for a preferred status. They want wool, cotton, corn, and other basic agricultural commodities to have similar and comparable programs.

I respectfully suggest to the chairman that he offer, after conferring as I have with a number of members of the committee, an amendment to his substitute, as follows: In paragraphs (a) and (b) of his substitute, before the words "or Wool Act of 1947", insert a comma and the following: "or the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended." This will not provoke any controversy. This will not be going into other programs. It is a matter of clarification. If the Wool Act of 1947 is to be included, surely the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, should be embraced. If it is necessary to embrace the Wool Act in the substitute, it is necessary to embrace the said two acts in the substitute so that if section 32 funds are not made available, support programs can be inaugurated so that export quotas, or for that matter export subsidies, may be maintained by the Commodity Credit Corporation. If my suggestions are not included by way of amendment to the substitute, I urge the committee, in conference, to give further consideration, as a matter of clarification, to including at least by way of amendment the language that I have suggested which is substantially the language of H. R. 1825, or to include the said two acts of 1938 and 1942. This will be possible under the rules of the House, as the substitute will be involved in conference and any clarification or modification of the substitute could be made under the rules. I am content to rely upon the chairman and his committee and the members of the conference, for wheat, corn, and other basic agricultural commodities are as vitally interested as cotton. I know the committee, as stated by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] in my colloquy with him yesterday, is of the opinion that the purpose of the substitute is to place wool in the same, but in no better, category than cotton. If the Subcommittee on Agricultural Appropriations is successful in requiring section 32 funds to be paid into the Treasury, there will be no support program for any commodity, without a modification of the amendment as I have suggested, except wool, and I make this statement after having given careful consideration to the legal questions involved in amending existing legislation, and in passing the pending bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman from California [Mrs. DOUGLAS] is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposite to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] and in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY].

We ought to help the wool growers. I feel that the bill that came from the Senate, S. 814, does just that. In giving help to the wool growers, in meeting the emergency with which we find ourselves confronted at the moment, in that we have a stock pile of wool, we should be very careful that we do not frame our help to the wool growers in such a way that it will jeopardize the efforts which we are now making to establish an International Trade Organization.

We know that we cannot have a stable and lasting peace in the world that is based only on political cooperation. It also must be based on economic cooperation. The main factor in economic cooperation is trade. In the last session of this Congress we voted to join the world bank and the monetary fund. Neither the world bank nor the monetary fund has yet been able to operate fully. They will not be able to operate fully until world trade is again healthy and moving in an orderly and equitable fashion. Our country has taken leadership in the establishment of orderly and equitable world trade regulations. At this moment in Geneva we are meeting with 17 other nations to establish an International Trade Organization.

Why is wool so important in the negotiation? Because some of our best customers have nothing to sell us but wool. It is important for the healthy trade relations of this country that they do so. As a result of stock piling in the war we have an excess of wool at the moment, but this is a temporary condition. Ordinarily we must import two-thirds of the wool we need. Surely, we will not let this temporary condition blind us and wreck the Geneva Conference.

Although wool amounts to but one-half of 1 percent of the farm income in this country, the imports into this country from Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa are primarily imports of wool.

Wool makes up more than 95 percent of the dutiable imports into the United States from Australia. About 40 percent of our imports from New Zealand and 37 percent from South Africa are wool.

Unless these countries can get dollar balances by selling us wool, they cannot buy from us automobiles, refrigerators, and the products which we wish to export. We know that after the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act was passed, imports into this country fell off and in direct relation our exports went down, and our national income went down, too.

The United Kingdom and the Dominions are tied together by a system of tariff preferences. It is to the advantage of this country to try to reduce empire preferences. If Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa are unable to carry on trade with us, then Great Britain cannot make the same arrangements with us which she would otherwise make. The United Kingdom cannot reduce or abolish its preferences unless the Dominions agree.

British Empire countries normally buy about 40 percent of total United States exports. And the United Kingdom alone normally buys 33 percent of the United States exports of farm products.

Without American dollars obtained by selling their wool in this country, the British Dominions cannot buy and pay for American agricultural and industrial products.

What we really have here are two bills. One bill to aid the wool growers and an amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas which is the beginning of the Republican attack upon the trade-agreements program.

There is supposed to be bipartisan support of our foreign policy. Trade agreements are basic to the economic peace of the world. If the Republicans propose again to lead the country back into economic isolation, they should bring a bill to the floor that clearly states this purpose.

We ought to help the wool growers. We ought to help them by a direct subsidy and not by erecting tariff barriers that will again isolate us economically in the world.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from California has expired.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY] is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, not being a lawyer, I would just like to address myself to about half of the Members of this House. I wish to ask them two questions: I would like to ask whether this world joint organization we have heard about that controls 85 percent of the wool of the world could set up shop in the United States and not be subjected to the provisions of the Sherman Antitrust Act?

Now, if there is a lawyer on either side who feels qualified to answer that question I yield for him to do so. I would like to have any lawyer in the House answer that question. [Pause.]

I have given everyone plenty of time to answer the question but I have heard no answer. In other words I think the Members agree with me that the mere fact they do not answer indicates that any group that controls 85 percent of any commodity makes them automatically a monopoly or cartel and they would not dare operate within the confines of the United States of America without being subject to the provisions of the Sherman Antitrust Act.

My next question then is this: I would like to know how in the name of common sense Mr. Clayton or any other American citizen has any business to be going over to Geneva and conniving with a foreign monopoly that does not dare set up shop in the United States of America. Will you answer that question?

Now for many years we have heard much about this bad Smoot-Hawley tariff bill, so bad it caused the ladies to blush and the children to break out in a heavy rash, but I have noticed that under the New Deal they have implemented the Smoot-Hawley set, if you please, time and time again by putting embargoes in operation. When it pleased the New Deal to erect embargoes they have done so. The New Deal paid export subsidies when it suited them to pay export subsidies. They are paying an export subsidy this very hour. What other administration ever indulged in an export subsidy? The time has arrived when the New Deal and their brand of reciprocal trade treaties have been demonstrated as being, if you please, honeycombed with deceit and dripping with deception. The American people know the facts and they are entitled to know that while the New Dealers talk about good-neighbor policy and reciprocity they have in fact erected more trade barriers than any administration in the history of our country. The New Deal has continually deceived the League of Women Voters and women's clubs with their false and fake propaganda. While they were talking about good neighbors they were erecting embargoes. While they were talking about reciprocity they were erecting sectional trade barriers.

If anyone wishes to defend the New Deal brand of reciprocity allow me to ask him to defend and justify the following: How can you defend a law maintaining the 42-cent duty on wheat as provided by the Smoot-Hawley Act and then turn around and implement this duty by an embargo? How can you defend the embargo placed upon the export of tobacco seed? How can you defend the export subsidies indulged in by the New Deal? These trade barriers, I repeat, have never before been erected in the history of our country. Then to think we have to listen to the deceitful talk and propaganda about the New Deal reciprocity program.

How in the name of common sense can the administration shed crocodile tears about a good-neighbor policy when it passes a bill, as I mentioned before, which prohibits the exportation of tobacco seed from this country and have the effrontery, the nerve, to pass such a bill when the Secretary of Agriculture's office states in black and white that it was done so that China and other countries cannot grow tobacco in competition with American tobacco. Is this your idea of reciprocity?

They are shadow boxing; they are and have been two-timing the American people. But the time has come when this administration, as all administrations, must answer for their sins. The sun is shining through the clouds now and the American people are finding out that they have been deceived. The American people have found out that the administration's propaganda about the New Deal brand of reciprocal trade treaties is not in keeping with the facts.

No living person can defend and justify the New Deal domestic and foreign agricultural program and anyone that knows what has taken place will even try to defend or justify it.

The American farmer has been used as the trading stock so that monopolies and big automobile corporations can amass greater profits.

The American wool grower today should not be sacrificed on the altar of a foreign agricultural policy that will ruin his business. The American farmer wants to electrify the other 50 percent of the farms of our land. He wants the other 90 percent of the farms to have the bathtubs and running water that are now available in the average city home. He wants only comparable equality with other groups, and he can rightly be tired of the do-gooders with their patent leather shoes and striped pants. American youth want a "piece" of America and they want equal opportunities with the other groups of our society. They are rightly deserving of no less.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, 14 years and 10 days ago section 22 was enacted into law. It was enacted upon the recommendation of a report submitted by the late President Roosevelt. It has been on the statute books from then until now. It was a part of the original Agricultural Adjustment Act. It is a farm section and was intended to help the farmers.

I hope the amendment submitted by the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina will not be approved, for the simple reason that in my judgment it will in effect repeal section 22. The gentleman's amendment provides that no action, no proclamation can be issued under that section without the prior approval of the Secretary of State or the Department of State. Inasmuch as Mr. Clayton, the Under Secretary of State, is in charge of the foreign economic affairs of our Government, that means, and can only mean, that it would place Mr. Clayton to a considerable extent in charge of the farm program of this Nation. The farm program should be in charge of the Secretary of Agriculture, but when you enact an amendment saying no action can be taken upon section 22 relating to farm programs without the prior approval of Mr. Clayton, in effect we have placed the farm programs in this country, to an extent at least, in charge of Mr. Clayton. If that is not true I do not know the purpose of his amendment. As I read to you yesterday, and I shall read again, the following line which is a part of section 22. It is subsection (d) of section 22:

> Any decision of the President as to facts under this section shall be final.

Therefore unless it is an effort to put the Under Secretary of State in charge of the farm program I can see no reason for the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina, because as the law is today before any import fee may be put on any agricultural commodity, it must in the first instance have the approval of the President of the United States and I assume that there is sufficient collaboration between the President of the United States and his Under Secretary of State to have a uniform program as to international negotiations.

Mr. Chairman, for these reasons I must earnestly urge that the amendment submitted by the gentleman from North Carolina be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I wish to supplement what the gentleman from Georgia said and carry the thought just a little bit further. The Hope amendment proposes to amend section 22 principally by the insertion of references to the Wool Act of 1947. Along comes the Cooley amendment which does not propose to limit itself to the Wool Act of 1947, but with respect to everything covered by section 22 says that no proclamation under this section shall be enforced in contravention of any treaty or any international agreement that the United States is or may hereafter become a party to.

All that the Hope amendment does is to say that the protection afforded by section 22 for other agricultural commodities will be extended to wool. The Cooley amendment says that in all its ramifications section 22 shall become subordinate to any treaty or other international agreement. Do you want to establish that principle? Do you want to do that on the brief debate this amendment has had?

I submit to the members of the committee that the Cooley proposal to subject all commodity programs to the terms of unknown treaties and agreements raises a very far-reaching question. I see the gentleman from Mississippi present, who was worried about what might happen in the agricultural appropriation bill with respect to section 22 funds. He should have been much more concerned with what the Cooley amendment will do to all programs that come under section 22 if that section becomes subordinate to any treaty or international agreement. The all-inclusive character of the Cooley amendment is enough to defeat it.

After all, this matter before us is not as complicated as it might sound.

First of all the issue is as to whether or not you want to handle the situation by taking money out of the Federal Treasury. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas seeks to let wool stand on its own bottom. Of course, it was one of the favorite methods of the New Deal to take money out of the Treasury. If you think that wool should stand on its own bottom and that you should not try to handle the situation with a check drawn on an overworked Federal Treasury, you ought to be in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The second question is the relationship of the proposal to trade.

The gentlewoman from California and many others talk about the inability of this country to have export trade unless we also have import trade. That is true, of course. Trade is a two-way street. But that is also true here in the United States of America. The wool growers who, by the statement and testimony of the Tariff Commission, lost over $1 a head per year for the last 2 years on sheep, also will lose their ability to buy automobiles and refrigerators and Boston-made shoes and other things unless they can have a fair return on their product.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. HILL. Right along that line, I have one county in my district in which we, a few years ago, checked on the possibilities of selling trucks, and there were more possibilities to sell trucks in Weld County, Colo., than in half a dozen countries in South America that year.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman's observation is very much in point. The best market for the American manufacturer is the home market of the American farmer. Why destroy it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

The Chairman recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to subscribe to the statement made by the distinguished chairman of the committee the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE], and by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE], a member of the committee.

Certainly, I am against the Cooley amendment. There served in this body for a number of years a great American, recognized so by the people of the country as well as the people in the other parts of the world. He served in the other body for a number of years with a distinguished career. He served as Secretary of State for a number of years, and I refer to the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. Cordell Hull. For years he advocated to the people of this country that his reciprocal trade-agreement program was the big factor operating in the world to prevent wars between the nations. It did not prevent World War II, and so far as I have been able to find out it did not have the least influence whatsoever in preventing that war. The war moved on just as if there had never been a reciprocal trade-agreement program. The reciprocal trade-agreement program of the State Department, sponsored by Mr. Cordell Hull, has never saved the economy of any nation as evidenced by the fact that practically every nation on earth of any consequence at all sits on our doorstep 24 hours a day begging for our substance in the form of raw materials, manufactured goods, dollar exchange, moral support, military and naval defense and every other thing the American people can provide for the nationals of the other countries of the world. So when it comes to the cold-blooded question as to whether or not I shall support a reciprocal trade-agreement program as such, or support the agricultural workers and the manufacturers' pay rollees of this country, I do not have to debate as to whom I shall support. I will take care of our own people first in preference to any reciprocal trade-agreement program that has ever been advocated by the State Department of this great country of ours.

Now we are right up against this proposition. Our heads are right up against the snubbing post. This is the first round, on wool. You are going to face it on sugar. The day may come when you face it on peanuts, for instance; that has about six or seven dollars' duty per 100 pounds. The day may come when you face it on cotton, if you please. The day may come when you face it on livestock on the hoof, on vegetables, and on fruits, and you might just as well make your decision today whether or not you are going to follow Mr. Clayton and the reciprocal trade-agreement program as against the interest of the workers here in the United States, or whether or not you are going to protect these workers and protect America, protect industry so that it can continue to feed and clothe and shelter and defend and finance the balance of the countries of the world as you did under the $8,000,000,000 you have already poured into their sinkhole since VJ-day; the $4,500,000,000 which are immediately available to them and the $12,375,000,000 which will be potentially available just as soon as your international fund for the stabilization of currencies and the international credit bank gets well under operation. If the rest of the world is to receive all this support, you had better protect the economic interest of the people of the United States first so they will be in position to carry on. If this market is to be given to other countries, on what basis do you think American industry can prosper?

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY] to the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk again reported the Cooley amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COOLEY) there were—ayes 27, noes 102.

So the amendment to the substitute amendment was rejected.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, at the risk of repeating, and because of the limitation of time, the chairman of the committee had no opportunity to respond to the statement I made a few minutes ago, I should like to say at this time that it strikes me that inserting in the bill the language "Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended," would strengthen the bill. I want to be perfectly fair and candid. I stated to the chairman during the course of the general debate that I thought the language of the bill H. R. 1825 he introduced at the request of the Secretary embraced other programs, and I suggested that the language amending section 22 (a) and (b) might be included here in connection with the Wool Act of 1947 in his substitute. The gentleman stated that he did not want to open up this bill to other programs because wool was entitled to relief, and I agreed, because he said that matter in H. R. 1825 was going to be considered by the committee later on. But I now make this statement to the gentleman: In view of the threat that section 32 funds may not be made available for the fiscal year 1948, I have made inquiry and I am advised by competent legal authority, happening to be a lawyer myself, and this is my view, that while export subsidies and export quotas are authorized by other acts, in fact they cannot be invoked until first of all there is a program.

I am further advised that if section 32 funds are not available no program can be invoked or inaugurated by the Secretary of Agriculture and, therefore, there would be no export quota or export subsidies for cotton, corn, or wheat, and similar commodities.

I make the statement now that favoring as I do relief for wool inasmuch as there is put forward in this bill the substitute that you have proposed, the Wool Act of 1947, that that language gives wool a preferred status for 2 years, and even if section 32 funds are not available wool will still be entitled to a program whereas cotton, corn, and wheat will not have a program unless section 32 funds are available.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOPE. Of course, as the gentleman has stated, this legislation, so far as wool is concerned, is temporary. We are including wool under the provisions of section 22 during the existence of the Wool Act of 1947, which will expire on December 31, 1948. The bill if it becomes a law does not take anything away from cotton, wheat, or any other commodity but leaves them just the way they are.

I am in agreement with the views the gentleman has expressed as to the necessity for reconsidering the question of including some amendments such as the gentleman has suggested in section 22 legislation. I feel that the need for that consideration is imperative, and I can assure the gentleman that I will bring the matter to the attention of the Committe on Agriculture at a very early date. I hope at that time we can work out something along the lines of the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I appreciate that, but the fact remains that in the meantime if section 32 funds are withdrawn while nothing has been taken away until that is done, if they are taken away something will be done to cotton, to corn, and to wheat that is not being done to wool because we have put wool beyond section 32 in the pending bill.

I submit to the gentleman, and I respectfully suggest if the bill passes the House and it goes over to the other body that the gentlemen should very carefully look into the matter in conference as to the acts of 1938 and 1942 for whatever my views may be worth so that cotton, corn, wheat, and other basic agricultural commodities will at least have the same status that wool has under the terms of this bill.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. The point that the gentleman makes is that if section 32 funds are entirely withdrawn, all other commodities will in the future be in the position that wool has been in the past.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Exactly so. This language gives wool a preferred status for 2 years. In the interest of other agricultural commodities, frankly I cannot see why these two acts cannot be inserted as I have suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes in order to yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. So far as I am personally concerned, I think his amendment is sound and one that should be adopted, but I do not think this is the proper place to do it. I do not think we can consider it at this particular time. I would like to give more consideration to it. I give the gentleman all the assurance that I possibly can that it will be brought to the attention of the Committee on Agriculture and will be carefully considered.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. As well as in the conference on this bill if necessary?

Mr. HOPE. Yes; if it is in order in the conference meetings.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Of course, the gentleman is interested in protecting cotton, wheat, and other agricultural products. An amendment to your substitute to effectuate and clarify your substitute would be in order in conference.

Mr. HOPE. I say to the gentleman, that we are just as much interested in this provision in the wheat country as you are in the cotton country because we are probably going to have trouble with wheat before we are going to have trouble with cotton.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Exactly so, and for that reason I submit the matter to your judgment as a friend, not only of cotton, but of wheat, corn, and other basic agricultural commodities, and I respectfully suggest that before this legislation is passed the language ought to be clarified so as to at least put other products on a parity with wool.

Mr. HOPE. I give the gentleman from Mississippi every possible assurance that that will be done.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I shall go along with the gentleman, and I am not going to introduce the suggested language or acts as an amendment at this time. I rely upon him and his committee to protect the growers of other basic agricultural commodities, in the committee and in conference.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] for the committee amendment.

The substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment as amended by the substitute.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. The Commodity Credit Corporation may, until December 31, 1948, dispose of wool owned by it without regard to any restriction imposed upon it by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in the action taken by the committee this afternoon on the Cooley amendment and the Hope amendment, there was considerable debate. I think every Member who listened to the debate was well aware of the fact that if the Cooley amendment was defeated it would mean practically the defeat of the policy of international cooperation with respect to expanding the foreign trade of the United States. The action taken this afternoon was taken under the leadership and the specific direction of the leaders of the Republican majority in the House.

Mr. Chairman, I say that is absolutely contrary to all pronouncements that have heretofore been made by the Republican leaders in the country, because they said they favored international trade cooperation. They said they wanted only to cut tariffs by reciprocal agreements. That is the policy as announced by the Republicans when they went before the country in their platform of 1944. So I want the country to know, Mr. Chairman, that this action this afternoon was a backhanded action in crippling the policy of this country that will affect for years to come the domestic economy of this country and the economy of the entire world.

Mr. Chairman, the committee that has jurisdiction of the subject of tariffs and reciprocal trade agreements is the Committee on Ways and Means of this House. That committee has held hearings for more than 2 months on this subject, but no member of the committee made any motion or offered any resolution in the committee whereby the reciprocal trade agreement program was to be destroyed. Why did they not offer that? Because they did not want to go before the country and say, "We are going to kill this program." Because their pronouncements have always been that they are in favor of expansion of foreign trade. The committee that has had jurisdiction has been afraid to tackle it. Then they come around through the back door of the Committee on Agriculture and cut the heart out of that program, and against the advice of the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Commerce, when we are sitting around the table at Geneva trying to expand our trade and make honest bilateral agreements so that this country can go forward not only with economic expansion but also with political cooperation with all the countries of the world. Everybody knows that it helps toward permanent peace to have more trade. I charge the responsible leadership of this House this afternoon with destroying one of the fundamental policies that both parties have agreed upon and have sold the American public on during the last campaign, during the campaign of 1944. It shows that Republicans only gave lip-service to that policy.

Mr. Chairman, I want the leaders of the Republican Party, when they make up their platform for the 1948 campaign to keep in mind what happened this afternoon and not write some weasel-worded lip service to the policy of international trade and the policy of international cooperation. Will they proclaim to the country, as they did in their 1944 campaign, that the only way they want tariffs made or the reciprocal trade agreements program altered is by agreement, bilateral agreements, bilateral reciprocal agreements?

Mr. Chairman, this is going to be an issue of the 1948 campaign if this measure is passed by the House this afternoon and becomes law. It will have a tremendous effect on the economy of the country.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield. I know the gentleman from Illinois does not favor the reciprocal trade agreements program, and he has been very sincere in his opposition to it.

Mr. MASON. I agree fully with the gentleman. He is right when he says this will be one of the main issues in the 1948 campaign.

PROGRAM FOR WEEK OF MAY 26

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment and do so for the purpose of announcing the program for next week. I am announcing it at this time, because a large part of the membership is here, whereas if I waited until after the vote on the bill there might not be so many Members present.

Monday, we will have consideration of matters from the District Committee, and after that we will begin debate on the Agriculture appropriation bill.

Tuesday, consideration of the Agriculture appropriation bill.

Wednesday, continuation of the Agriculture appropriation bill if not disposed of on Tuesday.

Thursday we expect to call up House Resolution 178, providing for investigation by the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service; and House Resolution 166 providing for an investigation by the Committee on Agriculture in the matter of surplus potatoes; and in addition any rules that may be in order next week upon determination with the minority leader.

Friday, of course, is Memorial Day, and we shall have no session that day, it being expected that we will adjourn from Thursday over until the following Monday.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I recall vividly the emotional appeals by the proponents of free trade made in urging the adoption of the Trade Agreement Act. Nothing was said by the free-trade advocates in urging the adoption of the act that their real and only objective was eventually to reduce all tariff rates to a minimum. The cry that went out to the country was that only by means of trade agreements could exports be increased and world peace be assured. This appeal to the large exporters and to the anxious fathers and mothers caused many to yield to this bureaucratic deception, and thus support the free-trade and peace proposal. The tragic consequences of this false propaganda presents one of the most ghastly holocausts in our history—Pearl Harbor. The subsequent war in the Pacific can be truthfully charged to the attempt of the State Department to build up exports in an effort to justify their promise that the trade-agreement legislation, if adopted, would increase exports. When the State Department failed to increase exports under the act it turned in desperation to the possibility of building up exports by encouraging the export of war materials to Japan and Germany. This did not make for the promised peace, but it did prepare Japan and Germany to use these exports against our fighting forces. Thus the program of the trade-agreement advocates left a trail of blood and sorrow across this land. The character of the exports speak for themselves, and the consequences that followed are known in almost every home in this great land of ours. I insert a list of some of the exports that were to build up a record for the State Department in an attempted effort to justify the promises made to large groups in return for their support of the trade-agreement program.

During the period from 1937 to 1940 there was exported to Japan from this country, 8,000,000 tons of scrap iron, steel, and steel scrap, and also thousands of tons of other essential war materials. These annual shipments of war materials to Japan were so large and of such a variety and character that they could have been intended for no other purpose but conversion into a formidable war machine to be used on land, and sea, and in the air.

The very year—1937—that Japan opened war on China our exports of scrap iron and steel amounted to 2,081,037 tons, or enough material to build 20 battleships of 45,000 tons each, 200 submarines of 2,400 tons each, 10 aircraft carriers at 30,000 tons each, and 26 cruisers at 15,000 tons each. If Japan is not fully armed for a long war, it is not for lack of steel and other products that go into battleships, submarines, cruisers, and airplanes, because the materials were abundantly supplied by the United States.

We have mentioned the amount exported to Japan in 1937, and what its conversion meant in building up her fighting machine. But let us see what happened in the year 1938. There was exported from this country to Japan in 1938 a tonnage of scrap iron and steel amounting to 1,365,721 tons, and 97,713 tons of steel ingots, blooms, and so forth. It required a larger tonnage of war material in 1939 to appease Japan, for there was exported from the United States to Japan that year 2,035,000 tons of scrap iron and steel, and also 144,000 tons of steel ingots and blooms.

The shipments were less in 1940, but only because our supply of scrap iron was being depleted. Yet, as the result of the extraordinary effort made by American junk dealers, there was shipped to Japan during 1940 scrap iron and steel amounting to 963,000 tons, and in addition to this some 285,000 tons of steel ingots and blooms.

While this export program toward Japan exhausted our supply of material with which to make steel for our own defense, it armed her to strike her dastardly blow at Pearl Harbor. The shortage of scrap iron in the United States became so critical that the State Department came before the Ways and Means Committee with a bill to remove the duty on scrap iron imported into this country. It seems that we have had to send junkmen to Central and South America and to the islands in the Caribbean to buy scrap iron to replace the scrap iron and steel we shipped to Japan, and the removal of the import duty was requested to reduce the cost to the Government of these foreign purchases of scrap iron. The scrap iron and steel that was shipped from the United States to Japan in 1940 would have been sufficient to build 520 United States submarines of 2,400 tons each, a fleet that would have given us control of the Atlantic Ocean.

Thus the policy of appeasement employed by this administration, has proved to be ghastly in its consequences; for it has enabled Japan to prepare herself to strike her treacherous and deadly blow at Pearl Harbor. It has enabled her to butcher our forces in Midway, Bataan, and Corregidor, and to sink our ships.

More than this, the policy did not stop with furnishing Japan with the material to build her navy, her air force, and her tanks. There was also exported to Japan from the United States during the year 1937 aircraft and parts valued at $2,483,946; and the next year, 1938, we exported to Japan aircraft and parts valued at $11,062,777; in 1939 aircraft and parts valued at $3,306,000; and in 1940 aircraft and parts valued at $933,005.

During these same years we also exported to Japan petroleum valued at $219,856,062, with which to operate her war machine. It is interesting to note that of this vast shipment of petroleum 555,456 barrels of it was aviation gasoline, which was supplied in 1939. The next year, 1940, we shipped to Japan 776,499 barrels of high-grade aviation gasoline. The extent to which the appeasers went in arming Japan, in violation of public sentiment and of congressional protest, is disclosed by the official figures relating to the shipment of cotton, aviation gasoline, iron and steel scrap, steel ingots, blooms, tin plate, tin scrap, refined copper, scrap copper, motortrucks, aircraft and parts, ammunition, and machine tools.

The time came when our own country was so short of war material, especially steel scrap, that the State Department came before the Ways and Means Committee urging a reduction in tariff rates in order to import scrap iron from the Caribbean islands, Central America, and South America to make up for the 8,000,000 tons of scrap iron shortage caused by exports of this essential war material to Japan.

One contribution, if not the greatest contribution in a material way to our national security, is our protected market. It has been responsible for establishing the most efficient industrial system in the world. Furthermore, our tariff system has lifted our standard of living, created opportunities for the men and women in every walk of life, and provided other manifold blessings which makes this land of America the envy as well as the hope of the downtrodden millions of other countries. There are not enough ships on the globe to convey the persons who would, if they could, come to this country, where under protection they could rise from serfdom to the stature of free men and women.

This is no time to permit a group of bureaucrats from the State Department to enter into secret agreements secretly arrived at to barter away the security of our free-enterprise system. I do not believe in delegating the power of life and death over any segment of our economy to a group of free-trade bureaucrats. To do so is to betray industry, agriculture, and labor. The fact that S. 814, an act to provide support for wool in order to save an agricultural industry essential to our economy and our national security from destruction by threatened imports of foreign wool is fair notice of the danger which the future holds for the farmers, unless they are protected. Why this hysteria on the part of Secretary William Clayton because Congress is taking action to save an industry from ruin? Is he here to protect Great Britain in her effort to ship wool into our market, when our market is already glutted with 400,000,000 pounds of wool? For whom is Secretary Clayton speaking, surely not for this country when he opposes Congress in its endeavor to save our own agricultural economy.

I shall at this point quote a statement made by Mr. Clayton about a month ago in Geneva. It is difficult to reconcile some of the statements attributed to him on the floor today with these two statements from the newspapers:

QUOTE I

It is already clear that the Geneva meeting is going to produce, from the standpoint of the American delegates and the American people, several delicate problems. One of these involves the granting of tariff concessions immediately by this country in return for promises on the part of other signatories of future concessions. The United States, as it happens, is the only major industrial nation that is currently exporting more than it imports. Most nations consider themselves too weak to give up their trade restrictions at the present time. American concessions would take the form of early reductions in tariffs on imported agricultural and manufactured goods. Other countries, in return, would be expected to agree to lower their own trade barriers correspondingly as soon as their external trade reached something approximating a state of balance. (Source: New York Times, May 19, 1947, the Geneva Trade Conference.)

QUOTE II

It is not the fault of our customs barriers if our imports only represent half of our exports. It is because foreign producers are not yet up to increasing their deliveries. (Source: Journal de Geneve, Switzerland, April 18, 1947.)

I do not propose to turn against the farmers, who in cultivating the soil, have struggled against the tide of the unwise free trade policy pursued by the political group fighting for the trade agreement program by which they hope to achieve their low-tariff objective. I believe in supporting by proper legislation, the living standards that have lifted us above the world level.

Mr. DAWSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAWSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, American wool growers must be protected. American wool cannot compete in a free market against foreign wool. Most important is the disparity in wage levels between the United States and other wool-producing countries. The climatic and range conditions are reasons for a higher cost. Production of food and fiber through sheep is for the benefit and happiness of humanity.

Prior to, during, and immediately following World War II foreign wool under tariff rates provided by the Tariff Act of 1930 has been imported into the United States by tremendous volumes and at approximately 15 to 20 percent lower prices than the protected price which the producer received under the purchase program of the Commodity Credit Corporation. This has resulted in a substantial accumulation of domestic wools.

Importations of apparel wool, less wool reexported, has continued to increase from 13,343,000 pounds in 1932 to a peak of 819,253,000 pounds in 1946. The consumption of foreign wool has likewise increased from a ratio of 5 percent of the total consumption in 1932 to a peak of 80 percent in 1946. It is apparent from these facts that there is need for a program.

While a foreign product has been encouraged in the volume above indicated, wool production and sheep numbers have continued to decline from a total production of shorn wool in 1932 of in excess of 350,000,000 pounds to an estimated production in 1946 of less than 300,000,000 pounds.

The producing countries of the United Kingdom of Great Britain have formed a joint control for the liquidation of the present surplus of wool. Thus, unless some long-term protective marketing program is established in the United States, the domestic wool producer will be forced to compete with the United Kingdom of Great Britain and her wool-producing countries. Such competition would be extremely embarassing to the producer of wool in the United States.

The wool growing industry of the State of Utah is the most important division of agriculture and a necessary enterprise in the utilization of the acreage within the borders of the State.

In Utah most of the land is suited for grazing. In fact 87 percent of the area is used for this purpose. Mountain, forest, and desert lands are all used for grazing. The limited cultivated crops are offset by the extensive sheep and livestock industry made possible by the large grazing area throughout the State.

Agriculture has more persons gainfully employed than any other industry. The State of Utah is second in America in the production of Rambouillet sheep, fifth in the production of wool, and seventh in the value of sheep and lambs.

Utah contains about 52,597,760 acres of land. There is less than 3 percent of the area of the State under irrigation and less than 1 percent in dry farms. The total potential acreage subject to cultivation and irrigation is less than 5 percent. In other words, 95 percent of the State of Utah must be and is used primarily for livestock.

The United States Census of Agriculture in the latest figures available, 1935, sheep on farms and ranges, lists, 6,417 farms with 2,452,196 head of sheep. With an average of four persons to the farm a total population of 25,668 derive all or part of their livelihood from wool growing. You can therefore understand its importance to the State.

The prewar wool growing industry of Utah passed through a period during which there was little or no profit. A study of wool growers outfits which survived and are therefor what might be termed the successful operators, doing business in the section where supplemental feed generally is not required, shows that at the beginning of 1932 their average loan basis was $3.87, and that the average loan basis of these same outfits in 1936 was $4.38, indicating that 51 cents per head of their capital had been absorbed in losses. This does not include supplemental feed loans. The same outfits had an average cost of operation, not including replacements or any return on their investment, of $2.88, whereas the average annual gross proceeds was $2.84, an average annual loss during the 4-year period of 4 cents per head. It is apparent from these studies that a satisfactory wool market must be had for the product and that no concession can be allowed in the price of wool.

Evidence that the wool manufacturers of the United States could not, neither would they consume the domestic clip if concessions were made in the 1930 tariff on wool articles, is revealed in the importations of manufactured goods containing all or part wool. The United Kingdom is and has been importing into the United States articles manufactured in whole or part of wool under the tariff provisions of 1930, indicating that even the present tariff provisions are not adequate to protect the American manufacturer, and as indicated before with the American manufacturer out of the picture we would have no market to absorb the domestic clip. With a limited market for the domestic wool production, the wool industry would decline rapidly. In case of another war it would be difficult to secure wool in the interest of national defense. This has been the experience of every country that has been deficient in its wool production.

It is therefore very evident that the wool industry, as well as the woolen manufacturing industry, should receive sufficient protection so that they may continue as thriving industries.

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Chairman, one of the leading authorities in Congress on the wool problem, now under discussion, is the gentleman from Colorado, WILLIAM S. HILL, a member of the House Committee on Agriculture. Mr. HILL comes from a section of the country which is vitally interested in the passage of the wool bill in the form recommended by the committee.

A few days ago I received a letter from Mr. HILL outlining the problem confronting the wool industry and recommending a program of action to cope with the situation. Under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include Mr. HILL's letter in full:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 21, 1947.

Hon. GEORGE W. GILLIE,
Member of Congress,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: I will appreciate it deeply if you will take a few moments to review the wool bill. This is the situation in a nutshell.

Livestock is the basic industry of the West. The sheep industry is important in many States, but in Texas and in the 12 Western States it is of vital importance. Grass is the main crop harvested from 90 percent of the West's 800,000,000 acres. Thirty million head of sheep are presently grazing on the western ranges and daily gathering the products of the soil and processing them for utilization. The economy of 200 counties in the West can be maintained only by a stable and prosperous livestock industry.

The Department of Agriculture reports show that the stock sheep population of this country has dropped from 49,807,000 in 1942 to 32,542,000 head today. This represents a reduction of 35 percent. Our sheep population is the lowest in 50 years.

The Department of Agriculture reports that the production of wool has dropped from 459,073,000 pounds in 1942 to 300,000,000 pounds today, and that is a reduction of 35 percent.

The main reason for the decline in sheep population is due to the low price of wool.

In my own State of Indiana, the sheep population was reduced from 701,000 to 452,000. A two and one-half million industry was reduced to a one and one-half million dollar industry.

A report by the United States Tariff Commission after an extended study of the sheep industry shows that the wool growers of this country lost 9½ cents on every pound of wool produced in 1946 and a somewhat higher figure in the two preceding years. The report further shows that the wool growers sustained a loss of $1.18 per head of sheep in 1946 and a somewhat higher figure for the two preceding years.

These statements are significant in the light of the finding of the Army and Navy Munitions Board that wool is a strategic and critical material necessary for the security of the Nation.

The day after Pearl Harbor, the United States froze the price of domestic wool at the OPA ceiling price. The price has remained the same during the war or to the present time and there will be no increase under the bill.

While the price of domestic wool has remained fixed from Pearl Harbor to date, it is true that from September 15, 1941, to Pearl Harbor, wool prices increased 13.2 percent. Accordingly, since September 15, 1941, to September 15, 1946, wool prices increased 13.2 percent, but 24 principal agricultural commodities increased an average of 91 percent during that same period. It has been contended that wool is selling at an all-time high. But the facts show that the 1946 Boston price of fine-combing wool was 34 percent less than the 1920 price, 18 percent less than the price in 1923 and 1924 and 8 percent less than the average price from 1922 to 1928, inclusive. Most of the western wools are fine-combing wool. This fact is significant in the light of the Tariff Commission's study, which shows that the operating expenses of the sheep industry have increased 66 percent from 1941 to 1946.

Great Britain, with her dominions, produces most of the world's supply of wool. At the war's end, faced with a tremendous stock pile of wool, they formed the joint organization (JO) in order to protect their wool industry by an orderly liquidation of their stock pile of over 2,000,000,000 pounds. The joint organization controls 85 percent of the world's apparel wool supply, and it has the power to lower prices at will.

During 1946 over 1,000,000,000 pounds of wool was consumed in this country. More than 80 percent of it was foreign wool. Last year 819,253,000 pounds of foreign wool was imported into this country. During that year and as of today the Commodity Credit Corporation has a stock pile of around 450,000,000 pounds of wool. Foreign producers dumped their products on the American market, because domestic producers are wholly unable to compete with low-cost producing countries. The Commodity Credit Corporation is prohibited by law from selling at less than parity. This restriction must be removed, so that the United States can dispose of its stock pile while wool consumption is high.

After Pearl Harbor, the United States paid transportation, insurance and storage on 500,000,000 pounds of Australian wool in order to assist Great Britain in having a supply available in this country, in the event the sea lines to Australia were cut off. Later on, the United States purchased 300,000,000 pounds of wool from Great Britain and it was sold on the American market. Because of this situation, and in order to stabilize the domestic sheep industry the Government instituted the purchase program and assured the growers that the program would be extended for 2 years after the termination of hostilities.

The bill reported out by the Committee on Agriculture of the House provides:

1. That the Commodity Credit Corporation will continue its purchase program until December 31, 1948, at the 1946 price, which, as I have indicated, has not changed since Pearl Harbor. That price is less than parity.

2. It authorizes the Commodity Credit Corporation to sell its wool at competitive prices with foreign wool. This will enable the United States to dispose of its stock pile.

3. Amend existing law by adding wool to other commodities under section 22 of the AAA act and thus provide that if imports of foreign wool tend to materially interfere with the wool program, the President may require the tariff commission to make a study and after a hearing if the President finds such to be the fact, he is required to impose such fees on imports as may be necessary to correct the situation.

I am convinced that the provisions of the wool bill are sound and necessary to provide for the sale of the Government stock pile and in order to protect the American sheep industry from further liquidation. The bill will come up tomorrow and if you can give us a lift it will be appreciated.

Yours very truly,

WILLIAM S. HILL,
Member of Congress,
Second District, Colorado.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HULL] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the issue here seems to be whether or not we shall sacrifice the great sheep-raising industry in order to add to the profits of world-trade manipulators. I am not in favor of such sacrifice. Our farmers did a wonderful job toward winning the war. Three years ago, the slogan "Food will win the war" was plastered far and wide in the press and on the billboards. Our farmers responded and provided both food and fiber, and also furnished millions of men to the armed forces and to industry to make victory certain. Now come the money masters in world trade making their demands that Congress shall contribute to the downfall of agriculture in return for what our farmers accomplished. Congress should act promptly to thwart such a program.

In 1942, we had over 49,000,000 sheep producing over 459,000,000 pounds of wool. Those flocks also produced billions of pounds of wholesome meats annually for our armed forces and our civilian population. Under ceiling prices and foreign competition, our sheep population has been reduced to 32,000,000 head, and our wool production to less than 300,000,000 pounds. Our meat supply has been reduced in like ratio. And the end is not yet. With wool prices below cost of production every farmer and ranchman is selling his wool at a loss. But for the CCC and its purchases of 460,000,000 pounds, the losses would have been so great that every sheep raiser would have been compelled to sell his flocks at even more demoralizing prices. Wool growers sustained a loss of $1.18 per head in 1946.

We have had an antimonopoly law in this country since 1890. There has been a lack of enforcement which occasions criticism, but the law stands as the policy of Congress and the country. Were any combination to be formed in our own country to control 85 percent of any commodity and manipulate prices and markets, it would be subject to immediate prosecution. It would be a conspiracy in restraint of trade.

The war had not ended before a world cartel was organized to control 85 percent of the world's supply of wool. It came into being in Britain, which, with its dominions, had a stock pile of 3,000,000,000 pounds of wool. It is known as the joint organization. It has the power to fix wool prices at will. Whence came the money for its enormous capitalization is not stated. Whether the funds came from Britain or from the lavish grants and loans made by Congress to Britain, funds drawn from our own Federal Treasury, is not easily ascertainable.

The joint organization's 3,000,000,000 pounds of wool came principally from Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, all countries in which wool is produced at less than half its cost on our own farms and ranches. They are countries of mild climate and cheaper feed and pasture costs. Australia and New Zealand can and do ship their wools to our own ports and markets at less cost than that of getting our wools from farm to market. So great is the difference in cost of wool production at home and in these foreign lands that Congress fixed a tariff rate of 34 cents per pound on wool from abroad.

When the war came on, our country aided Britain and its dominions in stock piling wool from the countries in the Empire. Now the joint organization dominates the markets abroad and is in such great competition with our own production that in 1946 there were 819,000,000 pounds of wool imported mainly from the surplus in the control of that organization. That wool was bought at such low prices that the joint organization made enormous profits even when underselling our own wool for our own industries. It stands to make hundreds of millions in profits on its stock pile and to continue such profits indefinitely in the future.

The Commodity Credit Corporation holds 480,000,000 pounds of our domestic wool bought from our sheep farmers at a support price. It is held in warehouses at large expense while our textile mills continue to buy and use the cheaper imported wool. Until Congress acts, our warehouses will continue to house the CCC stock pile, and the joint organization will pile up the wool supplies from the southern hemisphere and dominate our own as well as all other wool markets in the world.

Thus, our farmers and ranchmen are being forced out of business by a foreign monopoly. Whether or not that foreign monopoly is financed directly or indirectly by our own Government is an open question. In any event, a foreign cartel or monopoly which could not be organized nor exist in our own land because of our own antitrust statutes, harbors the selfish interests which are determined to ruin one of our greatest agricultural resources. Home-made monopolies have extorted billions from our farmers and stock raisers in spite of our laws, but Congress should not tolerate the encroachment of a huge foreign monopoly in our field. It should pass this bill, and then draft other legislation to protect our people from a form of aggression as dangerous as war to our own well-being.

The success and huge profits of the joint organization will not stop at the wool markets. Similar gigantic cartels are in process of organization to further control world markets for agricultural products. A large part of the surplus dairy products of Australia and New Zealand are alleged to be under contract to a British cartel, and Denmark and Holland are said to be fearful that their dairy products soon may fall under like controls. How far the decline in prices on butter and cheese in the Middle West may be due to such manipulation remains to be seen. Monopolies are a form of gangsterism which thrives on darkness and secrecy.

A large vote for the pending bill will be notice to the foreign manipulators that our people are waking up to the dangers which threaten us under the guise of world brotherhood and peace.

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for this bill. I voted against the original reciprocal trade agreement, and I voted against every extension of that act. I did this because I knew that it was not for the best interest of our Nation.

When the reciprocal trade agreement was first passed in 1934 I stated that it was sponsored by the international bankers—those bankers who clip coupons from foreign bonds—and the international manufacturers. These two groups are interested in clipping coupons and selling manufactured products to foreign nations. This at the expense of the American farmer and the American laborer.

These internationalists—these betrayers of their country and their country's honor—are more interested in getting the "almighty" dollar than they are in the welfare of their own people—their Nation. I came to this conclusion in 1934 because of the lobbying of this international group.

That group has made some converts. It has converted to its cause some of our globetrotters. I can assure you that these converts do not represent the farmers but do represent the State Department. They are used by that Department in its horse trading with foreign nations—in selling America short.

I know that I represent the overwhelming majority of farmers and laborers of this Nation when I state that I am in favor of this bill. Why should we make agriculture and labor the goat? Are not our farmers to be preferred to the land barons of Australia, Latin America, and other nations? Are not our laboring people to be preferred to the peon of Latin America or other nations? Are not our people as a whole to be preferred to a few international bankers and manufacturers?

We have heard a great deal about isolationism and isolationists. The truth is that these words are used by the internationalists and globetrotters to either conceal their own ignorance, or to remove suspicion that they are representing other interests than that of America.

We never were an isolated nation. We always chased the almighty dollar on every ocean and on every sea and in every land. On many occasions we meddled in affairs that were not ours. We were always a nation of the world—always interested in all nations.

Now we are told that we must become the guardian of the world, that we must surrender the substance of our Nation that belongs to unborn generations. This in the name of peace and Christianity. When did it ever become necessary for this Nation to buy or bribe other nations? Such a doctrine is not only lunacy, but an insult to our intelligence and our dignity. We are just beginning to get our wisdom teeth in our dealings with Russia.

I am not impressed with the argument that we must destroy ourselves in order to comply with the reciprocal-trade agreement. I am confident that that agreement is void. A trade agreement is a treaty, and any attempt to deprive the Senate of the power to advise and consent to such an agreement is in violation of the plain, English language of the Constitution. I expect to test the constitutionality of that act when the Supreme Court is unpacked.

In the meantime, let us develop our own trade. Let us buy American. A vote against this amendment is a vote for Australian, Latin-American, and other nations' wool. A vote for the amendment and for this bill is a vote for America—a vote for the American producer. This issue will be drawn more clearly as time goes on.

Let us remember that 94 percent of our trade is with ourselves. Our boundary line to this 94 percent is the Atlantic on the east, the Pacific on the west, the Canadian boundary on the north, and the Gulf of Mexico and Mexico on the south. Out of the 6 percent of foreign trade, between 2 or 3 percent consists of trading in international money and credit—stock and bonds.

Why should we give part of our domestic agricultural market away so that the international banker can collect on stock and bonds, and the international manufacturer sell his wares at the expense of the American farmer—at the expense of the American taxpayers?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. HARNESS of Indiana, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill, S. 814, pursuant to House Resolution 214, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FOGARTY) there were—ayes 151, noes 65.

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the bill was passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York asked and was given permission to include as a part of his remarks certain facts, tables, and figures.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Sumner Welles. I am informed by the Public Printer that this will exceed two pages of the RECORD and will cost $159.75, but I ask that it be printed notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. BUFFETT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two instances and include editorial material.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. JENNINGS asked and was given permission to revise and extend the remarks he made in the Committee of the Whole today and include certain statistics.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the bill just passed, including those who have spoken on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON THE ARMED SERVICES

Mr. HESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Armed Services may have permission to sit during the session of the House on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1948

Mr. DIRKSEN, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 3601) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 450), which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RAYBURN reserved all points of order on the bill.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at noon on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SABATH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include certain telegrams he received from the president of the stock exchange and his reply thereto, and other letters and correspondence in connection with short selling.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. WORLEY (at the request of Mr. RAYBURN), indefinitely, on account of death in the family.

WILLIAM THOMPSON SANSOM

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following request:

MAY 23, 1947.

Mr. KILDAY requests, pursuant to rule XXXVIII, leave to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of H. R. 1549, for the relief of William Thompson Sansom, Seventy-ninth Congress, no adverse report having been filed thereon.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request is granted.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] is recognized for 15 minutes.

POLITICAL BANKRUPTCY OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Carroll Reece, chairman of the Republican National Committee, vividly demonstrated last week end the political bankruptcy of the Republican Party. In a statement sent to 10,000 party officials and leaders throughout the country, Mr. Reece blamed the Democratic Party for current high prices. And, he charged, "the administration is determined to keep prices high in the hope of reaping political advantages."

This accusation by the ranking authorized Republican spokesman is reminiscent of the little boy who tossed the brick through the plate-glass window and then blamed the neighbor lad who had tugged at his arm trying to keep him from doing it. Mr. Reece obviously is frightened over public reaction to the run-away price inflation since he and his party killed OPA. He might, perhaps, under the circumstances, be excused if he tried merely to befuddle the people by asking, "Who killed cock robin?" But it is certainly with ill grace that he now blames President Truman for cock robin OPA's demise.

Such silliness has already been properly labeled an insult to the intelligence of the American electorate. Even the Washington Star, which has never shown signs of a proadministration bias, compares the Republican chairman's comments with the flights of fancy of young men in the spring who lightly turn to thoughts of love. The Star editorialized on last Monday that "it is inconceivable that the voters will be fooled by any of this seasonal nonsense."

No, Mr. Speaker, the voters have not forgotten—nor will they soon forget. It is not by accident that the program of the Republican Party to end price controls coincided with the $200,000 advertising spree just a year ago by the National Association of Manufacturers against OPA. Historically, the NAM and the Republican Party see eye to eye, and it has always been true, Mr. Speaker, that the Democratic Party has in the Congress and in the Presidency—in the State legislatures and in the city councils—represented the interests of all the people as against the special interests of the few. No—the housewife who is trying to make ends meet for milk and shoes for the children after paying the rent knows that the family pay check is not what it was a year ago. The workingmen—the school teachers, the store clerks, the truck drivers will not forget these Republican NAM advertised assurances:

> Remove price controls on manufactured goods and production will step up fast. Goods will pour into the market and within a reasonable time prices will adjust themselves naturally—as they always have—in line with the real worth of things. Competition has never failed to produce this result. This is the way you can get the goods you want at the prices you can afford to pay.

Now, Mr. Speaker, have not we waited a reasonable time? How much longer must the working people of this country wait and suffer from this profiteering and greed? It now appears that the Republican Party leadership has abandoned its assurances. But instead of a legislative program to rectify their horrible mistake—if such deliberate action can be excused as a mistake—they heap abuse upon the President. But the people cannot forget, they will not forget, if I have anything to do and say about it, that Harry Truman vetoed one price-control bill because of its crippling amendments; that he reluctantly signed another because it was the best bill he could get; and that finally, under public pressure generated by ill-advised Republican campaign promises, he felt obliged to abandon his struggles to preserve price controls.

Nor will the people forget in 1948 how the President, after the end of OPA, continued the fight against inflation. The people know about his recommendations for voluntary price reductions, and his courageous opposition to tax reduction until the inflationary dangers have subsided. They know that he favors continuation of effective rent controls, and that the Federal budget he submitted to the Congress was the minimum below which a reduction means the impairment of essential Government services. They know where he stands on housing and health insurance and minimum wages.

But the public also knows, Mr. Speaker, the record of the Republican majority in this Eightieth Congress. And Mr. Reece knows that the public knows—and it is no wonder that he is worried. Shall we briefly review the record?

First, take rent control. For weeks the majority leadership debated whether to legislate a flat rent increase of 10 to 15 percent before proceeding to disguise their intentions to kill effective rent control by passing an extension bill so bad that long-time supporters of OPA voted against the legislation in the House. And the Republican strategy is reported to be to withhold Senate action until too late for the President to do anything but approve the bill. This, of course, is in line with their strategy for killing OPA last year.

Second, consider the Knutson tax-reduction bill. The President advised that now is not the time for cutting taxes. The Republicans, however, ran true to form by continuing the wartime rates for excise taxes, which fall heaviest on those least able to pay, and by reducing income taxes in such a manner as to provide a windfall to the rich. Even if inflationary threats were past, and the budget balanced with a substantial payment on the public debt assured, H. R. 1, as railroaded through the Ways and Means Committee by the majority, is a monstrous example of tax relief, not for the needy, but for the greedy.

Can the 45,000,000 taxpayers with incomes below $5,000 be expected to tolerate a tax bill which increases the take-home pay after taxes of the $300,000 man by 70 percent, but increases their own take-home pay by less than 4 percent? I am sure the more than 3,000,000 taxpayers in the State of Pennsylvania with incomes of less than $5,000 who receive their 5 percent are not going to be very friendly toward a party that provided their 68 neighbor Keystone-Staters having incomes over $300,000 with a generous 70 percent.

No, Mr. Speaker, the taxpayers will be heard from in 1948.

Third, this Republican Congress cannot refute the charge of gross neglect in failing to report a legislative budget for Federal receipts and expenditures for 1948. The debauchery of the Legislative Reorganization Act has resulted in the most reckless and ill-informed slashes of appropriation requests for the executive departments. The President's Bureau of the Budget already had reduced appropriation requests considered essential by department heads by some seven billion dollars, yet the House and Senate proceeded without consideration of fiscal requirements to vote for a legislative budget four and one-half to six billion dollars below the requested $37,500,000,000. The Republican leaders now realize, of course, that neither of these figures can be attained, for the conference committee on the legislative budget has met only once in the nearly 3 months since the conferees were appointed.

As if these dilatory tactics in defiance of the Legislative Reorganization Act were not enough, Mr. Speaker, the majority have made almost as many illusory paper reductions as they have actual cuts in the President's budget.

The $800,000,000 cut in Treasury estimates for tax refunds is not on the square, because overpaid taxpayers have a legal claim against the Government for the amounts overpaid. Another typical example is the disclosure reported in today's papers that an item for $641,832,000 for the Commodity Credit Corporation, requested by the President for 1948, has been charged by the majority against the current fiscal year. So by fair means or foul—and more foul than fair—the Republicans are striving for a reputation of economy. But these tactics are just as obvious as they are smooth, and the people will not be deceived.

Finally, let me refer to three prize misstatements by Mr. Reece in his letter to the Republican leaders. He accuses the administration of:

First. Incurable addiction to deficit financing. Now everyone knows that President Truman has balanced the budget for 1947, and the he will do the same in 1948 if the majority will only stop its headlong dash to reduce revenues in this period of highest national income in our history.

If we cannot balance the budget and begin debt retirement now, when on earth will we be able to do it? No, Mr. Speaker, the disease, if any, seems to be on the other side of the aisle.

Second. A reckless and ill-timed Government program for buying food for foreign relief. Unfortunately starvation and hunger do not respect marketing trends. If the foreign-relief bill recently passed by the Congress with Republican support is now repudiated by Mr. Reece, I might suggest that he get in tune with the statesmen within his own party.

Third. A political approach to labor-management relations. Mr. Speaker, if ever I have seen a political approach to labor-management relations, it is the Hartley bill drafted by outside lawyers in the hire of the chamber of commerce and manufacturers associations, beyond the reach even of the Democratic Members of the Committee on Labor. This bill will do more to create strife and discontent in the ranks of labor than any law ever passed by the Congress, and will only reduce productivity and thereby create scarcity and higher prices.

Mr. Reece charges that these fantastic assertions are proof that the President is making a drive to keep up high prices. Any sane man, Mr. Speaker, knows this is not true. The only conclusion to be drawn from this exhibition of Mr. Reece is, as suggested by the Washington Star, that the spring has affected somewhat the mentality of the Republican national chairman. If the Republican leadership in Congress and throughout the country does not repudiate the national chairman, it will be good evidence that this mental disease has become an epidemic of political degeneracy throughout the party.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is our former colleague, Carroll Reece, who is now the chairman of the Republican National Committee, that the gentleman is referring to?

Mr. EBERHARTER. That is correct.

Mr. McCORMACK. Who in a statement he made the other day put the blame on President Truman for the tremendous increase in the cost of living?

Mr. EBERHARTER. Exactly. That is the very same man.

Mr. McCORMACK. Why, that was politically insane. Then, just a few days before that he made a statement in which he called every labor leader a radical, including Bill Green; that is, he did not mention him by name, but he did not make any exceptions. He called every labor leader a radical, and that included Bill Green and even Bill Hutchison, who has been one of the bulwarks of the Republican Party. It includes them all.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I am just wondering if the Republican Members of the House and the Republican Members of the other body agree with Mr. Reece's statement. I have not heard anybody come up here and deny it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CASE of South Dakota). Under special order heretofore entered, the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD] is recognized for 30 minutes.

THE PRICE SITUATION AND OUR ECONOMIC FUTURE

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks at certain points some scales of figures.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, the present picture represents a critical stage in postwar economic development, a situation which we must appreciate and attempt to control.

First. The price structure:

(a) Price rises since 1939—United States News of April 25, 1947, page 29—retail:

	Percent
Food	95
House construction	84
Men's suits	72
Automobiles	56

(b) Wholesale prices in general—United States News of April 4, 1947, page 13:

	Nonfarm commodities	Farm products and food
August 1939 to June 1946 (7 war years)	Percent +36	Percent +64
June 1946 to April 1947 (9 months following the scalping of OPA)	+44	+48

Spot items—wholesale—increase from June 1946 to April 1947—United States News, April 4, 1947, page 13; The Price Situation, Congress of Industrial Organizations, page 3:

	Percent
Paint	66
Meat	83
Lumber	50
Drugs	67
Leather	63
Wheat	38
Hogs	94
Lard	121
Coffee	107
Steel scrap	100

(c) The misconception is that Government support prices have contributed to this situation.

Items covered by Government agreements to support agricultural prices at 90 percent of parity

		Support price (90 percent of parity price)	Present price
Hogs	100 pounds	$15.60	$25.40
Wheat	bushel	1.82	2.35
Eggs	dozen	.37	.40
Milk	100 pounds	3.25	4.10
Butterfat	pound	.55	.60

Potatoes are the only commodity presently being supported by the Government—at a cost of $80,000,000. Much of the blame for this can be laid to the Congress. If wheat and bread had been rationed after the war, more wheat would have been available to the Government at reasonable prices for shipment to devastated areas abroad and more potatoes would have been consumed domestically—United States News of May 5, 1947, page 13; Marquis Childs, Washington Post, April 17, 1947.

Second. The profit structure:

(a) Much talk about exorbitant corporate profits at the present time. During 1946 total corporate profits after taxes amounted to $12,000,000,000, 20 percent above the highest wartime yield.

Approximately $4,000,000,000 of this figure represents carry-back payments from the Government to cover the cost of reconversion. This figure is also affected by the repeal of the excess-profits tax—85 percent—in January of 1946. The present tax rate on corporate profits is 38 percent. Data on Profit and Wages, page 3; CIO Economic Outlook, an article entitled "Why Wages Must Be Raised," page 2.

(b) Nevertheless, profits after taxes in the first quarter of 1947 were running at a rate of $16,000,000,000 annually which represents a return of approximately 10 percent on net worth—National City Bank monthly letter on economic conditions and Government finance, page 46. The period of 1927–29 showed profits on only 8 percent of net worth. It seems clear that this is a higher return than can be borne in a steady-state condition. The best possible steady return on net worth is probably something close to 7 percent.

(c) The aspect of this profit figure which is most disrupting is the fact that only two-fifths of it is being distributed as dividends. The remainder, three-fifths, is being held in funds, partly for future plant expansion, partly as a reserve for the next depression, and partly for distribution when the income taxes are lowered. It is the creation of these funds which threatens to choke off our economic life. The phenomenon is a cumulative one—United States News, April 4, 1947, page 11.

(d) Instances of high profits in certain industries—developed from National City Bank monthly letter on economic conditions and Government finance, April 1947, page 46:

Industry	Percent increase in profits after taxes, 1945 to 1946	Percent return on net worth
Baking	209	21.8
Meat packing	202	10.8
Distilling	251	42.1
Cotton goods	358	27.1
Silk and rayon	296	24.5
Woolen goods	253	25.2
Hosiery, knitted goods	252	28.2
Other textiles	232	20.8
Clothing and apparel	238	23.3
Tires, rubber products	204	20.6
Lumber	222	14.1
Pulp and paper products	231	14.4
Cement	371	9.7
Chain stores:
Food	217	18.6
Other	202	23.0
Department stores	208	20.8
Mail-order houses	261	25.6
Miscellaneous and wholesale	203	20.2
Shipping	230	15.3

Third. The wage structure:

(a) Compensation of employees as a group declined from $114,500,000,000 in 1945 to $109,800,000,000 in 1946, while the net income of corporations and proprietors, including farmers, and receipts from interest and net rents, went up from $46,400,000,000 in 1945 to $55,200,000,000 in 1946, and $12,000,000,000 of this was clear profit—Data on Labor and Wages, pages 6 and 7. Labor's share of the national income shrank.

(b) There is much talk at the present time about wages being exorbitantly high, but although average hourly earnings have increased steadily during the war and since—66 cents per hour in 1940, $1.13 per hour in October 1946—weekly take-home pay for the average worker in manufacturing industries has declined from a high of $47.50 in January 1945, to the present level of $46.40. This drop has been the result of the reduction of the standard workweek from 45 to 40 hours in the summer of 1945 and the loss of overtime pay—The Economic Report of the President, pages 47 and 48; United States News of April 18, 1947, page 27.

(c) A study conducted by the Heller committee of the University of California in March 1945 revealed that a family of four required an annual income of $3,075 to maintain minimum standards of health and decency. If this figure is adjusted for the rise in the cost of living since that time, one arrives at the present requirement for an annual income of $3,545 or a weekly income of $68.19. Compare this with the average weekly wage now prevailing—CIO Economic Outlook, page 6.

(d) Taking into account the rise in the cost of living, the real earnings of workers in nondurable lines have risen only 22.8 percent since 1939, and of workers in durable goods industries only 9 percent—United States News of April 25, 1947, page 14.

Fourth. A brief glance at the breakdown of national income in 1946—The Economic Report of the President, page 41:

TABLE II.—National income by distributive shares, 1929–46 [1]

[Billions of dollars]

Year	Total national income	Compensation of employees			Net income of proprietors			Interest and net rents	Net corporate profits after taxes
		Total	Salaries and wages	Supplements	Total	Agricultural	Nonagricultural		Total	Dividends	Savings

[1] National income is the total net income earned in production by individuals or businesses. The concept of national income currently used differs from the concept of gross national product in excluding depreciation and depletion allowances and business taxes. A reconciliation between these two series and income payments is shown in Appendix A, table II, for 1939, 1944, and 1946.

THE LEGISLATIVE HISTORY OF THIS INFLATIONARY DEVELOPMENT

First. A year ago, when the question of extension of OPA was being considered by the Congress, many Members of the Republican group in this body—men whose economic prophecies have been refuted—availed themselves of the opportunity to do some economic forecasting in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The following quotations reveal their expectations concerning the effect of the removal of price controls.

April 17, 1946:

When price controls are ended, there will be confusion for a few months, whether it be now, next year, or some future year. But production will rapidly increase when controls are lifted, and the supply will rapidly come to equal the demand. Then confusion will end, prices will be stabilized, and production will be normal and sufficient. When this natural condition is reached, competition will keep prices stabilized on a reasonable basis.

June 25, 1946:

The only real remedy for the high cost of living, the only cure for inflation, is a return to a free economy; the noninterference of Government agencies with the operation of the law of supply and demand.

July 5, 1946:

I say that the Congress, if it wishes to preserve free enterprise, insure through it the highest standard of living at the lowest possible cost, cannot do so by fostering the OPA with its gestapo snoopers, kangaroo courts, and the black-market operators who are in league with and who are supporting this un-American dictatorial bureaucracy.

July 27, 1946:

Give our free economy an opportunity to function, unshackled, for a reasonable length of time and the old law of supply and demand will furnish us with plenty and at fair and reasonable prices.

Second. While on this point, I refer to the allegations of scarcities under the price-control system. I point out that there was irrefutable evidence of large-scale holding back of merchandise by producers in anticipation of the price rise which followed the forced removal of price controls.

Third. On January 8 of this year the President transmitted to the Congress, in keeping with the provisions of the Employment Act of 1946, a detailed and objective evaluation of the economic situation which confronted the Nation.

Attempting to suggest ways in which this situation might be effectively dealt with by means of legislation, he outlined a short-range program which included five main recommendations, recommendations carefully formulated by some of the best economic minds in the country.

(a) Prices and wages:

1. Extend rent controls.

2. Extend the coverage of the Fair Labor Standards Act and raise the minimum wage.

(b) Social security: 1. Raise the level of benefits.

(c) Housing: 1. Authorize a permanent, long-range housing program.

(d) Taxation: 1. Refrain from the unsound fiscal policy of reducing taxes at the present time.

(e) Labor-management relations—recommendations embodied in the President's state of the Union message of January 6, 1947:

1. Enact legislation to curb jurisdictional disputes and prevent some types of secondary boycotts.

2. Extend the facilities within the Department of Labor for assisting collective bargaining.

3. Broaden the program of social legislation by alleviating the causes of workers' insecurity.

4. Authorize the appointment of a temporary joint commission to inquire into the entire field of labor-management relations—the Economic Report of the President, pages 20 and 21.

All of these recommendations have a direct bearing upon the present picture of inflation.

According to the provisions of the Employment Act, the Joint Committee on the Economic Report made a report on January 31, 1947, in which it stated that these recommendations were too controversial to be treated at the time and that they would be dealt with by separate committees working in these fields. Since that time the joint committee has held hearings sporadically, but has contributed nothing of a constructive nature to the problem—Senate Report No. 11, page 2.

Let us look at the score to date. Of the five recommendations, one has been ignored effectively and the other four have been completely repudiated.

The detailed picture looks like this:

(a) Prices and wages:

1. Rent controls, although extended in name in the House bill just passed, have been effectively gutted.

2. Minimum wages and labor standards have been struck a heavy blow in the portal-to-portal pay bill recently passed by the House.

(b) Social security: This subject has been more or less ignored, except that there are ugly rumors about to the effect that the social-security tax will not be permitted to rise from 1 to 2½ cents on the first of next January as Congress originally intended.

(c) Housing: Although the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill was reported favorably out of committee by a slim majority in the other body, it is rumored that it will be ignored by the appropriate committee in the House. It can be considered as a dead duck in this session.

(d) Taxation: In direct contradiction of sound fiscal policy, a far-reaching tax reduction program has been adopted by the House, a program which extends mammoth benefits to the extremely wealthy at the expense of giving the low income taxpayers only moderate relief.

(e) Labor-management relations:

1. Hasty and drastic measures aimed at curbing labor's power have been adopted by the House, measures which attempt to resolve delicate and subtle working relationships by ill-considered and stringent restriction.

2. The Department of Labor, and particularly the Conciliation Service which specialized in improvement of the collective bargaining process, has been in effect emasculated by the action of the House with regard to its appropriation for next year.

3. Nothing appreciable has been accomplished toward increasing the security of the individual worker in our society, even though this hypothetical individual worker has been the hero of all attacks upon the union movement in this country.

4. Appointment of a temporary commission to give thorough and thoughtful consideration to labor-management problems has been ignored in the haste to restrict the bargaining position of the workingman.

Here, then, is the clear record of a congressional policy which flaunts short-sighted political expediency in the face of a remedial and beneficial economic program.

WHERE DO WE GO FROM HERE?

First. We are quite obviously moving into a recession. Forecasters in the Department of Commerce, the Department of Agriculture, the Civilian Production Administration, and the Bureau of Labor Statistics are agreed that there will be a decline in production and prices during the latter part of 1947. There seems to be general feeling that this will be a relatively minor and temporary phenomenon—Data on Wages and Profits, page 9.

The United States News attempts to outline the expectations in greater detail. It predicts drops in the level of economic activity throughout the country, as follows:

Measures of economic health:	Expected percent decline
Total industrial production	20
Civilian employment	8
(The unemployed group is expected to rise from 2.5 to about 6 million)
Iron and steel production	20
Machinery production	32
Lumber production	12
Textiles production	24
Manufactured goods production	11
Paper and products production	21
Food products production	12
Rubber production	22
Chemicals production	10
Gasoline production	4

The United States News predicts that this bottom will occur early in 1948 but that it will be of short duration with production recovering during the latter half of the year. They describe it as a process of correction which will lead to an extended period of prosperity:

Profits won't be as encouraging at the bottom of the dip as at present, but the current rate of corporate earnings is sufficient to make 1947 a prosperous year as a whole (averaging 176 percent of the prewar level as compared with 170 percent in 1946) even if the downturn comes relatively soon. (United States News, May 9, 1947, pp. 11–14.)

Second. Now the United States News is not generally considered as a radical organ. What do they regard as the present supports which "appear certain to cushion the effects on any business decline?"

(a) Savings: Although savings expressed as a percentage of disposable income declined from 28 percent in 1944 to 9.5 percent in the fourth quarter of 1946, the consumer savings accumulated since 1940 total $173,000,000,000. This reserve, located principally in the upper income brackets, will come into effect in the form of purchasing power as prices decline.—The Economic Report of the President, page 13. On top of this there is a reserve of $32,500,000,000 in undistributed corporate profits, accumulated since 1940, which can be expected to go into plant expansion as raw material prices are eased.—The Economic Report of the President, page 41. High-bracket income reserves and corporate reserves have only a limited function in the absorption of consumer goods.

(b) Consumer demand: There is sustained evidence of a pent-up demand for the durable manufactured goods which were so scarce during the war years. As the prices of these articles decline, the demand can be expected to provide a vigorous market. The automobile and construction industries will stand in a particularly favorable position in this respect, and the secondary effect of their demand for supplies will give life to a wide range of manufacturing and mining industries. The alarming drop in residential construction due to exorbitant prices challenges continuity of expenditures in this field.

(c) Government spending "is another factor that will support business activity. Federal spending is not likely to fall below $33,000,000,000 in the fiscal year that begins July 1, 1948, and this means a wide Government market for goods. The Government is as effective a customer as any other buyer, and its demand is more stable than that of business firms or individuals."

(d) Exports "provide another support. Foreign countries this year will take at least $12,000,000,000 worth of United States goods, ranging from grain and tobacco to machinery and movies. This amounts to about three times the wholesale value of the automobile industry's entire output."

(e) Social security "benefits will strengthen the buying power of the unemployed through unemployment and retirement insurance." It can be seen that the last three—Government spending, exports, and social security—of these cushioning effects are subject to the direct control of Congress. Intelligent and farsighted exercise of this control can determine the ease with which this price-adjustment period is met.

An impartial observer would be impressed with the fact that the control being exercised at the present time in two of these areas—Government spending as proposed in appropriations recommended for next year and export reduction as contemplated in current criticism of the proposed International Trade Organization—is neither intelligent nor farsighted.

Third. One aspect of the current situation which appears less encouraging than the United States News picture is the large expansion of commercial-bank loans since the end of the war.

Business loans expanded 33 percent in the last half of 1946.

Consumer loans increased by more than 50 percent during 1946.

Real-estate loans jumped more than 50 percent in 1946.

These trends, coupled with the rapid return of installment buying following the end of the war, are the raw materials of a credit bubble, the bursting of which could compound the severity of the recession which confronts us. The degree of inflation of values, against which these credits are extended, will control the severity of the recession.

Fourth. During the past months there has been much screaming about the price situation.

The President, robbed by the Congress last summer of any effective implements for controlling prices, has offered a plea to business groups throughout the Nation to reduce their profit margins in the interest of the country's economic health; the so-called suasion method.

Business being what it is, and human beings acting as they do, this plea has fallen, with a few laudable exceptions, upon deaf ears.

Congress holds it in its power to put teeth into price reduction by the simple expedient of reinstating the 85-percent excess corporate profits tax which it so generously removed in January of 1946. Better than this, the tax could be applied with large-scale exemptions for corporate profits which are employed in plant expansion. In this way a premium would be placed upon greater production, greater employment and resulting lower prices.

It is pretty late in the game for such a measure. The horse has already been stolen. Nevertheless, it would still have a salutary effect upon the present price structure and would increase popular confidence in American business at large by recapturing from a small group of manufacturing and distributing companies the really exorbitant profits which they are presently enjoying.

Such an excess-profits tax would be politically unacceptable to Congress, however, in its present mood, and so we will have to stumble along without it. The scattered cases of piracy in the post-war market will continue unmolested. The exorbitant profits will continue to add to the inflationary pressure.

THE LONG-RUN PICTURE

Since it is generally assumed that the "recession" confronting us will be a short and mild one, let us look ahead at the following years.

The United States News sees a period of full production and general prosperity in the years following this adjustment—and then, "a postwar depression comparable to that following 1929 is improbable before sometime in the 1950's." The views of the United States News can probably be said to reflect fairly accurately the generally held opinion of American business on this question.

Gentlemen, my point is this: our country cannot afford another depression comparable to that of 1930 and 1931. Such a period of economic crisis would leave us prone to an authoritarian corrective program. The people of this country, afflicted by economic stagnation and resulting physical distress, might well be tempted to turn to a totalitarian program which would offer food and shelter in return for the sacrifice of democratic principles.

To illustrate this point, let me quote to you the last sentence of an editorial in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch of May 5:

As our economy is constituted, we have got to expect cyclical difficulties; if the difficulties before us, however, approach in severity the deep depressions of the past, the people are going to demand some drastic changes in our system.

We are the only great Nation left which has not turned away from the free-enterprise system.

Here is where the danger to democracy lies, gentlemen, and we have the power to control that danger now. Rather than succumbing to short-run political and economic pressures, let us adopt a long-term corrective fiscal policy, a policy based on the experience which we gained in our attempts to recover from the last great depression. Many lessons in large-scale administration, some good and some bad, were learned from that phenomenon, and those lessons should be applied in the formulation of corrective measures to prevent the recurrence of such a disaster.

The President has embodied the results of comprehensive thought along these lines in the recommendations for a short-range and long-range program contained in his economic report to the Congress. I have attempted to show that we have, in effect, repudiated his short-range recommendations thus far. Let us reconsider our actions on these points as the bills concerned go into conference, giving further consideration to the economic issues involved and attempting to meet the situation intelligently.

In conclusion, let us analyze briefly the long-range recommendations in the President's report.

First. Efficient utilization of the labor force: The emphasis here must be placed upon increased productive efficiency—the largest single factor in the development of the present American standard of living—and intelligent use of a coordinated placement service. Arbitrary discrimination in employment, discrimination based upon irrational prejudices with regard to race, religion, and sex, must be actively discouraged.

Second. Maximum utilization of productive resources: The Government has a real responsibility here in providing assistance and intelligent advice, legally implemented, to private enterprise in order that the levels of employment, production, and purchasing power in this country may be kept both stable and high.

(a) Agriculture: Improvements in farming techniques and the mechanics of distribution make it possible, with long-range Government advice and encouragement, to maintain farm incomes at a decent level—avoiding an agricultural depression similar to that which followed the First World War—and to steadily improve on the American diet. The fundamental unit in this development must be the family-sized farm.

(b) Regional development: Here the problem is one of realizing the tremendous economic potential of regional programs in development of power and effective means of flood control and irrigation—such as the Central Valley project in California—in improvement of facilities for transportation by land, by inland waterway, and by air, and in farsighted management of public lands. Such programs can benefit the entire Nation by promoting regional prosperity and, through sound community development, reviving stranded and depressed areas across the country. Appropriations for these purposes should be considered as capital investment rather than expenditures, as in most instances they are wealth producing and self liquidating.

(c) Federal-aid programs: These represent the financial manifestations of all programs for improvement of the country's resources, both natural and human. Through the grant-in-aid mechanism maximum reliance can be placed upon local autonomy in the construction and management of facilities for transportation, hydroelectric control, education, welfare, public health, and the like.

(d) Public works: The effect of Government construction activities upon the economic life of the Nation and their practicability as a cure-all for recessions can be overestimated, but the compensatory effect of such spending cannot be denied. A well-planned, long-term program of physical development, applied with an appreciation of the impending level of business activity, can contribute greatly toward stabilization of the private economy.

(e) Research and patents: Our increasing dependence upon technological development makes it imperative that the Government sponsor scientific research. Social gains can be realized from this sponsorship, both from the acquisition of more precise information concerning the nature of the social sciences and from intelligent and humane control of progress in the anti-social sciences. The passage of the national science bill a few days ago in the Senate is an important step forward. Action by the House should not be delayed.

Third. Encouragement of free-competitive enterprise:

We are at present the only great nation on earth that has not abandoned a system of free private enterprise. In order that the soundness of our judgment in relying on this system can be demonstrated, it is necessary that competition be kept really free. This freedom demands more than the simple payment of lip-service to the law of supply and demand.

(a) Enforcement of existing antitrust laws:

We are informed that concentration of the means of production in the hands of a relatively few giant corporations is proceeding at a rate hitherto unknown in our history. This disturbing movement, oiled by soothing phrases extolling the virtues of free competition, has accounted for the corporate acquisition of 1,833 mining and manufacturing firms in last 6 years. And we note with alarm that nearly three-fourths of this total have been swallowed up by corporations with individual assets of over $5,000,000. One hundred and twenty of the 200 largest corporations in this country have bought up 27 percent of this total.

The best initial move to check this trend would be to provide increased appropriations for the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission and to extend section 7 of the Clayton Act in order to prohibit mergers by the acquisitions of assets.

(b) Encouragement of small business: This sector of our economy, heart of the vital and traditional concept of commercial initiative, must be provided with all possible advantages in its formative stages. These advantages include the availability of long-term credit and equity capital, the provision of detailed information on markets and technical data by the Department of Commerce, and arrangement of favorable tax conditions—increased exemption on current profits when reinvested in plant expansion.

Fourth. Promoting welfare, health, and security:

What must be appreciated here is the fact that the Nation's economic health bears a direct relationship to the well-being and peace of mind of its citizens.

(a) Public health and education programs:

It is more economical to prepare people to earn a decent living than to care for them through relief. (The Economic Report of the President, p. 29.)

With adequate governmental provision for protection of health, increase in nutrition level, and popular education (both academic and vocational) the physical and mental vitality of the Nation becomes a tremendous economic asset. Remember, too, that the terrible complexity of modern life demands the highest possible level of education and intelligence among the citizens of a democracy. The President's recent message to Congress on health services and sickness compensation should be heeded.

(b) Social security: In order that the Nation's purchasing power may be sustained on a long-term basis and that insecurity in employment may be reduced to a minimum, it is necessary that the coverage of old-age and survivors' insurance be extended, that a comprehensive program of sickness and disability insurance be adopted, and that unemployment benefits be increased in duration and amount.

Do not be intimidated, gentleman, by violent and irrational criticism of the so-called cradle-to-grave philosophy. The age of the iron law of wages is drawing to a close. Governments that ignore social needs are forced into political oblivion by their desperate citizens.

Fifth. Cooperation in international economic relations:

A steady high level of international trade will be a vital component of extended prosperity in this country. The value of our exports in 1946 amounted to about $15,000,000,000 military costs, commodity and credit exports, and we should attempt to keep our volume at or above this figure in the future, gradually bringing our foreign trade into balance with a growing volume of imports. Working through the International Trade Organization on commercial matters and through the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development on financial matters we can establish our foreign trade on a sound and dynamic basis, permitting our economy to concentrate to a moderate degree upon the exportation of those commodities which we can produce with the greatest efficiency. Mutually beneficial commercial ties may thus be established with the rest of the world. A peaceful world can only be established on the basis of economic stability.

Sixth. Combating economic fluctuations:

An effective approach to this problem involves intelligent blending of the programs just described. All action in this connection must be aimed at stabilizing the Nation's economy at a high level of activity.

Let me quote to you the last paragraph of the President's recommendation on this point.

Continuing policy cannot be extemporized from month to month or even from year to year; most policies designed to increase the stability of the economy are of long-range character. Fortunately, we have time in which to plan deliberately and wisely, and in which to secure the cooperation of all our citizens in driving toward our common goal: An expanding economy of maximum production, employment, and purchasing power under a system of free competitive enterprise, with full recognition of the duties and responsibilities of forward-looking Government. (The Economic Report of the President, p. 32.)

These recommendations merit the careful study of every conscientious Member of Congress. These are the programs which will control the severity of the next great depression and, indirectly, the future of democracy in our Nation. These principles must be borne in mind as this year's legislation is formulated.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I have heard advanced as reasons why a tax reduction bill should be passed, statements made by Republican spokesmen that private enterprise needs incentive; in other words, they are not making enough money and in order to keep in business, to go ahead, they need an incentive, and that that is a reason why there should be immediate tax reduction. I am delighted that the gentleman has shown us the profit that business has made in the last year. It seems to me from that showing that they do not need a reduction of taxes as an incentive to make more profits.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I think the gentleman is exactly right.

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I yield.

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. The gentleman's address has been very interesting and I am glad to have his views on this subject so important to the consumers of this country. I want to make the observation that the gentleman himself is a successful businessman, being the operator of a large men's furnishing store in his own city. He speaks from an actual knowledge of the situation.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. We had another illustration only this afternoon of a bill passing by which they are going to gouge the public again.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. That is right. It is the old, old game of playing to a certain class and giving them a financial advantage at the cost of all the people.

Mr. McCORMACK. They wanted to please one group, all right. Did not want to displease another group, all wrong. The result is they passed a bill in which they said: "We will pass it on to the public," the dear old worker and the consuming public which in their concept of government always pays the price.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. The gentleman from Massachusetts is correct.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, the gentleman spoke a while ago of 20-percent drop in production.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. That is in production; not in price.

Mr. EBERHARTER. That is beyond the marginal level that is necessary in order to have a reasonably prosperous economy.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. That is correct.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Twenty percent is a tremendous amount.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. There is no limit. Once the guaranty of production at the mill level starts down, it cannot be controlled; the old vicious circle that we have been so accustomed to in the past will occur again.

Mr. EBERHARTER. That is exactly what I mean. When you get just below the marginal level of a reasonably prosperous line, then the depression has started and it is very, very hard to stop it from obtaining tremendous proportions.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. That is right. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Before concluding, I want to congratulate the gentleman from California and also the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] for the two constructive speeches that they have made this afternoon. We all know of the promises that were made last year; promise after promise on the floor of this House that within 60 days, if price controls were taken off, if the law of supply and demand were permitted to operate, the people would pay less, and there would be plenty of goods around, more so than when the OPA price ceilings were on. Now, over 6 months have gone by and it has not materialized, and the converse has taken place. Instead of lines of people trying to get something, there are people now with no money to buy at the high prices, and there is a consumer resistance going on. It is very apparent that they have had enough of 1946, and it is going to have a throwback on those who employed them, and the people will have had enough in 1948 of the present controlling party in the Congress. Furthermore, this is the first time in 14 years that the people have had an opportunity of contrasting the leadership of the Democratic Party with the Republican Party. They have had 5 months of it now. Throughout the entire length and breadth of the country there is complete dissatisfaction with the leadership of the Republican Party in Congress after only 5 months. The comparison is very favorable to our constructive leadership of 14 years.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. The gentleman is exactly right. In 5 months' time we have seen these things happen. We have seen corporate profits go up out of reason. We have seen take-home wages go down. We have seen great manufacturing companies and great financial institutions become alarmed over an impending crisis. We are seeing the stock market go down. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] spoke on the floor in the last 2 days regarding the short-selling wave on the stock market. The short-selling wave, of course, is an effort on the part of speculators to take advantage of certain market factors which they see in the offing. Even some of the great industrialists who railed against controls and who did everything they could to get those controls taken off, now begin to see that the situation is getting out of hand. A few of them have agreed to the President's request and have made some small temporary price reductions. We know about the Newburyport plan, but we can also predict that the moral suasion of the President will not be listened to by greedy competitive producers who are out to wring the last dollar out of the wages of the American people. They continue to pile up these unexpended and undistributed reserves, and get themselves in a position where they individually can ride out the depression regardless of what happens to the rank and file of the American people.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think one of the most unfortunate things that has ever happened is the stock-market situation. Earnings are high. Stocks usually sell for 10 times their earnings. That is a cardinal policy in the stock market. Yet you find stocks selling for hardly more than two, three, or four times their earnings. Since election day of last fall there has been a tremendous wiping out of billions of dollars of investments. People put in fear, have lost billions of dollars, driving the price down. Speculators now will step in and the market will take a turn upward. There is no real reason justifying this. There is every indication that stock values should be higher than they were last November, if anything, yet there has been this collapse and in its wake has followed the wiping out of billions of dollars of money invested by the average people of America. They are in fear, and many of them are selling out. Then the big speculators will step in at the low prices and, when the stock market bounds back, the poor people who had invested their money and lost billions of dollars will again, in plain language, be the losers. It is the same old story of shearing the lambs.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. The savings of individuals throughout America have grown to the greatest height in the history of America, the individual bondholdings and savings accounts. The speculators want to get hold of that money, and this is the way to do it.

Mr. McCORMACK. They cannot blame the Democratic Party for this collapse in the stock market.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. No, because the lack of confidence of which we have heard so long on the part of business is now beginning to show up in the stock market. The lack of confidence is coming because of the reversal of the policies of the Democratic administration.

Mr. McCORMACK. What about the person who through fear sells his stock or has sold his stock at a tremendous loss, when every factor existed for higher values, if anything?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. That man has lost the savings of the war years, the prosperous years, the Democratic, last 14 years. He has lost those savings because of the lack of confidence of even the big businessmen of America in a continuation of the prosperity which is now prevalent but which is nearing the end of its term.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KELLEY. Those things concerning which the gentleman has spoken have done something else, they have further promoted the feeling of insecurity among the working classes of our people. The great nemesis which follows them from the cradle to the grave is insecurity. That has been instanced in history where people have sacrificed their freedom for security. They talk about that in Russia. They have no freedom, but they do say they have security. The greatest bulwark against communism in this country, it seems to me, would be to promote security rather than desperation.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I think the gentleman is exactly right. Communism is built on insecurity and desperation of peoples.

May I point out that the measures which the President advocated in regard to establishing security for the workers, providing that the social-security base is broadened, and seeing that certain types of health insurance are given to the people who are unable to buy that health insurance themselves; in other words, investing in the future of America, all of those things have been discarded and repudiated.

I bring that out in the body of my speech. They have all been repudiated and the old system of laissez faire has taken over. We are going to see industry in the place of giving workers security, punish the workers by supporting a Republican Congress in passing the harshest labor laws we have ever had. In place of giving the raise in social-security rates which the President has asked for, we are going to continue depreciating what we have. In the place of building homes for veterans, we see the appropriations being cut down. In the place of bringing in a long-range public housing bill to the floor of the House, such as the much talked of Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill in the other body, we see no action on the part of the respective committees to bring out that long-range housing program not only for veterans but for all the people of America who are in the subincome brackets and who need housing. We see nothing done about that. None of the things that the President has recommended is being done, nothing is being done except punitive things against the workers and small investors and small businessmen and the rank and file of people of America.

COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the District of Columbia have until midnight tonight to file reports on the bills, H. R. 494, 497, and 3515.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BENNETT of Missouri asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a speech.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED

Bills and joint resolutions of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 50. An act for the relief of Joseph Ochrimowski; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 116. An act for the relief of Mrs. Mildred Wells Martin; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 272. An act to provide for the utilization of surplus War Department-owned military real property as national cemeteries, when feasible; to the Committee on Public Lands.

S. 315. An act for the relief of Reginald Mitchell; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 317. An act for the relief of Robert B Jones; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 470. An act for the relief of John H. Gradwell; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 512. An act to extend provisions of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act and the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Acts to the Virgin Islands; to the Committee on Agriculture.

S. 514. An act for the relief of the legal guardian of Sylvia De Cicco; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 526. An act to promote the progress of science; to advance the national health, prosperity, and welfare; to secure the national defense; and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 561. An act for the relief of Robert C. Birkes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 597. An act to provide for the protection of forests against destructive insects and diseases, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

S. 805. An act authorizing an appropriation for the construction, extension, and improvement of a high-school building near Roosevelt, Utah, for the district embracing the east portion of Duchesne County and the west portion of Uintah County; to the Committee on Public Lands.

S. 824. An act for the relief of Marion O. Cassady; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 882. An act for the relief of A. A. Pelletier and P. C. Silk; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 1020. An act to amend the Philippine Rehabilitation Act of 1946, as amended; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

S. 1230. An act to amend section 2 (a) and 603 (a) of the National Housing Act, as amended; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

S. J. Res. 64. Joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim the 9th of October of each year as Leif Erikson Day; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. J. Res. 78. Joint resolution designating September 17 of each year as Constitution Day; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. J. Res. 92. Joint resolution designating April 5 of each year as Booker T. Washington Day; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. LECOMPTE, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 236. An act to amend the Nationality Act of 1940 so as to permit naturalization proceedings to be had at places other than in the office of the clerk or in open court in the case of sick or physically disabled individuals;

H. R. 384. An act for the relief of W. H. Baker and Walter Baker.

H. R. 428. An act for the relief of Charles N. Bemis;

H. R. 444. An act for the relief of the estate of Archie S. Woods, deceased;

H. R. 603. An act to amend an act of September 27, 1944, relating to credit for military or naval service in connection with certain homestead entries;

H. R. 1494. An act for the relief of the estate of Nellie P. Dunn, deceased;

H. R. 1844. An act to authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to grant easements in lands belonging to the United States under his supervision and control, and for other purposes;

H. R. 2094. An act for the relief of Isaac B. Jones; and

H. R. 3245. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 854. An act to amend section 502 (a) of the act entitled "An act to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes."

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) under its previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, May 26, 1947, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

703. A letter from the executive secretary, National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to cover appropriation items for the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics in the 1948 budget which may be subject to points of order; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

704. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to revise the method of issuing patents for public lands; to the Committee on Public Lands.

705. A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a draft of a proposed joint resolution to enable the President to utilize the appropriations for United States participation in the work of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration for meeting administrative expenses of United States Government agencies in connection with United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration liquidation; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

706. A letter from the Acting Administrator, Federal Security Agency, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to authorize intra-agency transfers and consolidations of appropriations by the Federal Security Administrator, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

707. A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill providing for participation by the United States in the Inter-American Conference on Social Security and its permanent committee and authorizing an appropriation therefor; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

708. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year 1948 in the amount of $350,000 (H. Doc. No. 267); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

709. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriation for the fiscal year 1948 in the amount of $61,580,000 for the War Department (H. Doc. No. 268); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

SENATE

MONDAY, MAY 26, 1947

(Legislative day of Monday, April 21, 1947)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, our Father in Heaven, for this sacred moment when our hearts may be united in prayer, and when, forgetting all else save our need of Thy guidance and help, we may reach up to Thee as Thou art reaching down to us.

Let not the beauty of this day, or the glow of good health, or the present prosperity of our undertakings deceive us into a false reliance upon our own strength. Thou hast given us every good thing. Thou hast given us life itself with whatever talents we possess and the time and the opportunity to use them. May we use them wisely, lest they be curtailed or taken away.

Deliver us from the error of asking and expecting Thy blessing and Thy guidance in our public lives while closing the doors to Thee in our private living. Thou knowest what we are wherever we are. Help us to be the best we can be.

We ask in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. WHITE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Friday, May 23, 1947, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 814) to provide support for wool, and for other purposes, with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 2094) for the relief of Isaac B. Jones, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

REDUCTION OF INDIVIDUAL INCOME-TAX PAYMENTS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would like to indicate that the Senate is moving today under the following unanimous-consent agreement:

Ordered, That on the calendar day of Monday, May 26, 1947, at the hour of 4 o'clock p. m., the Senate proceed, without further debate, to vote upon the motion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] to postpone to June 10, 1947, the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce individual income-tax payments.

Ordered further, That the time intervening between the meeting of the Senate on said day of May 26 and the hour of 4 o'clock p. m. be equally divided between the proponents and the opponents of the motion, to be controlled, respectively, by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN].

Under the circumstances, the Chair is unable to recognize any Senator except by permission of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] or the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN].

THE LATE JOSEPH MEDILL PATTERSON

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair inquires whether the Senator from Georgia wishes to yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from New York to present a matter briefly, the time to be charged to the proponents of the motion.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I have just returned from attending a memorial mass for the late Joseph Medill Patterson. The memory of the life and works of this extraordinary man will long endure.

Born and bred to aristocracy, he made his life's crusade the understanding and the fulfillment of the common man's aspirations.

As soldier and citizen, as public official and newspaper publisher, he contributed far more than his share to the progress, security, and happiness of his fellow man.

I rise on this anniversary of his death to pay this brief tribute to his memory, and to place in the RECORD at the close of my remarks a more extended testimonial which I delivered on another occasion, September 9 last. I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

There being no objection, the tribute was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

My friends, we have met here today in response to a single impulse: To draw inspiration once more from the memory of a great and valiant man whom we learned to love. Our purpose is to erect a perpetual testimonial of our admiration and affection for Capt. Joseph Medill Patterson.

You and I, who knew and worked with Captain Patterson, have no need for speeches to explain our presence here. Each of us could commune with himself and from his own association with this man of vigor and vision, readily call to mind the qualities which evoke our fond recollection and command our loyalty and homage. But we are not content with such silent communion. We want the whole community to hear our reflections, to learn and to know that a great-hearted giant had lived in our midst. We desire to communicate to future generations our response to his greatness, his simplicity, and his humanity.

Let us, therefore, record the noteworthy fact that we, who are here assembled, are the members of the Daily News chapel of the Typographical Union No. 6. We are members of a labor union which chooses to commemorate in honor and affection the man who was our boss. This novel and arresting fact alone, this departure from the usual pattern, vividly demonstrates that Captain Patterson was an unusual man. The stereotyped cartoon of a publisher as a fat man, chewing a fat cigar, his vest besprinkled with dollar signs, was not conceived with Mr. Patterson as the model.

He was an extraordinary man, and he exhibited the rare man's paradoxes. He was born and bred to aristocracy, but none despised more vehemently the trappings of caste and class. He was accustomed to great wealth, but few had keener understanding of the problems of poverty. He had access to the high and mighty of the land; he preferred to know the aims, ambitions, and strivings of the little people. By natural aptitude he was a fighter and a man of action, but he selected the printed word as his sword and tool.

Already, even in his lifetime, his name was embroidered with legendary exploits. There is the story that he used to come to his editorial desk at the Chicago Tribune dressed in corduroys and a turtle-neck sweater. You have heard reports of his excursions among the derelicts, sampling their lonely and bitter existence. Numerous tales have circulated about his uncanny perception of the trend of public taste and mood. There are two stories that I like best, because they hold up a clear mirror to the man himself.

The first is the story of an argument between Patterson and one of his executives, which concluded with these words of the publisher: "The fact that I decide against you is no proof that I'm right and you're wrong. It may be that I'm wrong and you're right. It's purely because of an accident of birth that I happen to be in a position where I get my way." Few men of wealth and power see themselves with such candor and clarity.

The second incident I cherish as the symbol of his simplicity. It is the text of what he wrote when his circulation manager passed away: "Memo to Max Annenberg," he wrote. "Good-by, I am going to miss you a lot. Hope to be seeing you someday." There were no flourishes, but all who read that unadorned memo know that here was a man mourning the loss of his friend.

He was a playwright whose plays appeared on Broadway. He was a soldier so conspicuous that General MacArthur spoke of him as "the greatest natural-born soldier that ever served under my command." It was not in his make-up to seek an easy assignment or a safe berth. In five of the most violent engagements in World War I he demonstrated the stuff he was made of. Before World War I he had already served a term in the Illinois Legislature and in the office of Commissioner of Public Works of the City of Chicago. Already he was giving conspicuous evidence of those qualities which ultimately produced his greatest enterprise, the New York Daily News. Each day during the past 28 years that paper has reflected his singular independence of mind, the vividness of his imagination, his genuine understanding of the great masses of his fellow citizens. That understanding never failed him because it was founded upon a true sympathy with the common people. With Patterson it was not a rhetorical flourish but the expression of his very being when he carved upon the face of this building the closing phrase of Lincoln's immortal saying, "God must have loved the common people; he made so many of them."

When I consider the magnitude of his achievement in building this great institution, the News, I put in second place the fact that it is a stupendous business undertaking, outstripping all its competitors in a contest in which all the odds were against him, providing a livelihood for thousands of families, and great wealth for its stockholders and managers. What I put in first place is that he succeeded in building a pipe line for the transmission of news, opinion, and intelligence into 4,000,000 homes—the largest channel of its kind in the United States. He was its inventive genius, its architect, its designer. It is today a photographic image of his versatile personality. You, my friends, helped to maintain it, to sustain its pressure, and to carry its life-giving cargo to a vast population.

In many a cause in which I was privileged to carry the banner, he was a potent, resourceful, and trusted ally. There were times when we disagreed and then he was an equally potent, resourceful, and always chivalrous opponent. Even in the grimmest disagreements, no one could ever question the integrity of his motives, the purity of his patriotism, or his complete devotion to our country.

Men capable of wielding great power frequently become obsessed with a sense of their own wisdom and lose respect for the view of others. That sorry trait Mr. Patterson never exhibited. No one whose character is marred by such a flaw could have invented the idea of the annual Battle Page, where both sides in the campaign could equally and freely express their views regardless of the position taken on the editorial page. And there is not a newspaperman on the staff of the News who has not felt perfectly free to espouse any public cause without fear of reprisal.

Men who can command the fulfillment of their every wish sometimes become thoughtless of the fate and fortune of their struggling brethren. Not so Mr. Patterson. He said to me once, "I have to go slow. I have to consider so many people—the people who work with me. If I make a business mistake I am likely to penalize them without intending to do so. If I should wreck this business, thousands of people I have never seen would suffer; their children might go hungry. The responsibility frightens me sometimes. That's why I have to go slow."

And that is why we have come to lay a wreath of our tribute, our esteem and affection at his feet. That is why, I am sure, in the Great Beyond he is happy to witness these ceremonies, happy to win that which no one has ever amassed enough wealth to be able to buy—a little silver plaque bearing the evidence of the love of his coworkers. The price of that is a great human heart.

Captain Patterson, we salute you. Well have you earned the rest that Kipling spoke of:

"When Earth's last picture is painted, and the tubes are twisted and dried,
When the oldest colors have faded, and the youngest critic has died,
We shall rest, and faith, we shall need it—lie down for an eon or two,
Till the Master of all good workmen shall set us to work anew!

"And only the Master shall praise us, and only the Master shall blame;
And no one shall work for money, and no one shall work for fame;
But each for the joy of the working, and each, in his separate star, Shall draw the Thing as he sees it, for the God of Things as They Are!"

RESPONSE OF WAR DEPARTMENT TO HANSON BALDWIN'S EIGHT OBJECTIONS TO UNIVERSAL MILITARY TRAINING

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me for a few moments?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, on May 4 Mr. Hanson W. Baldwin, the military expert of the New York Times, published an article in that newspaper in which he raised eight objections to universal military training on the broad ground that it does not meet the challenge of modern war. Mr. Baldwin's standing is so high and the subject is so important that I deemed it advisable to refer his article to the Secretary of War, requesting him to comment in detail on Mr. Baldwin's eight points.

I have just now received a letter from Hon. Robert P. Patterson, the Secretary of War, in which he encloses a statement which responds to Mr. Baldwin's objections. But it is much more than a rebuttal to what Mr. Baldwin says. I regard it as one of the clearest, most illuminating, most comprehensive, and most authoritative statements on American strategy as a whole which I have seen published since I came to the Senate in January of this year.

Because of the vital importance of this subject to every Senator, I believe that Mr. Baldwin's article and the War Department's rebuttal thereto, together with Mr. Patterson's letter to me, should be printed in the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, that the article, together with the letter from the Secretary of War and the War Department's rebuttal, be printed in the body of the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Armed Services for their attention.

There being no objection, the matters presented by Mr. LODGE were received, referred to the Committee on Armed Services, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UMT'S VALUE WEIGHED—EIGHT REASONS WHY UNIVERSAL TRAINING IS OF DOUBTFUL MILITARY WORTH

(By Hanson W. Baldwin)

Peacetime universal military training, soon to be submitted to Congress, stands or falls on its military utility.

Its fair-minded opponents concede that despite its repugnance to the American tradition, UMT must be supported if it is proved essential to United States security. But the burden of proof, they rightly add, rests upon the military.

The War Department holds, and its official view is probably supported by a majority of Army officers, that UMT is a vital part, in fact, a cornerstone, of our national defense program.

Some few officers and outside critics are, however, emphatic in their opposition; they charge the War Department with deception in insisting that UMT is essential to national security and flatly deny this assertion.

ON CONTROL OF AIR, SEA

There are extremists on both sides of the argument, but any consideration of all the factors makes it plain that UMT is a very dubious form of security, if, indeed, it offers any security at all, in this technological and industrial age. Here are some of the factors that tend to minimize its military value:

1. Attack can come to the United States, and we can attack any enemy, only through the air or by sea. In the initial phases of any war—of any nature using any weapons what is of primary and fundamental importance is, therefore, control of the air and the sea. Emphasis, therefore, should be on insular strategy as opposed to continental strategy, on air-sea strategy as opposed to mass army strategy.

2. The problem of United States defense breaks down into time periods, the short term and the long term. In the immediate future when the only component of push-button war that we have is the push button—perhaps for 10 years, perhaps longer—the weapons and techniques that won the last war will still have validity. It is in this period, before transoceanic guided missiles with atomic warheads have been developed, that large ground armies, to follow up and complete offensives launched by sea and sky, will continue to have a very considerable degree of usefulness. But during this period the United States has a reserve of trained manpower (declining in skill and usefulness as the end of the period is reached) already trained far more thoroughly by one, two, four, or more years in the wartime services, than any 6 months' trainee could be.

In the long-term future, when transoceanic missile war may become possible, initial victory or defeat would not in any case depend upon a mass of semitrained reserves for the ground army. If the war ended quickly it would be won or lost by our superiority or inferiority in missiles, air power, the atomic bomb, and other new weapons of destruction, and a large ground army could not greatly influence the course of the brief conflict.

TIME FACTOR CONSIDERED

If the war continued without decision, virtually complete control of the air and the sea would be necessary in any case before we could transport large armies overseas by sea or air and time would be required to equip those armies. There would thus be time for training; in fact, training for the ground battlefield is one of the lesser problems of any future war. This is not to say that ground troops will not be necessary; in any future war clearly they will—certainly for occupation after conquest, very probably to help to win the victory. But they cannot possibly influence (except by the firing of projectiles) the initial and supremely vital phases of any push-button war, and if a push-button war devolves into a war of attrition there will be ample time to train large ground forces, and to train them under wartime incentive far better and with the benefit of higher morale than is possible under a 6-month peacetime system.

3. Today, and even more tomorrow, the offense has such an edge on the defense that the greatest hope of victory, or of avoiding atomic attack, is the threat of tremendous and overwhelming retaliation.

In other words, we cannot build any Maginot Line that will protect the United States against all forms of attack, but we can create a mobile, instantly ready striking force, planes, guided missiles, aircraft carriers or fast surface missile launchers, submarines, and small but highly trained forces of airborne troops, which can strike at once against any enemy that attacks us.

This force will need manpower, but it must be full-time, highly trained manpower, not half-baked, half-trained reserves. This force will need large numbers of men to launch missiles (it takes several hundred to prepare a single German V-2 rocket for launching), but UMT will not provide the type of training needed.

4. There is need in any future missile war for large forces to provide military or semimilitary disaster control and civilian defense duties on the home front. This should be the mission of the National Guard or some similar force, and it should be specifically trained to that end, but the UMT training program is not pointed toward any such end.

5. A good military case might have been made for extension of the wartime draft act until our occupation duties overseas had ended, but UMT—limited to training in this country—will not provide a single man for overseas service, and, in fact, will add to the Army's manpower problem by requiring an added 130,000 to 150,000 men for training overhead and cadre.

FLOW TO GUARD, RESERVES

6. UMT will provide a flow of manpower for the National Guard and the Organized Reserves, but these civilian components, or part-time soldiers, cannot possibly be ready for instant action in an emergency, and yet instantly ready forces are the type required in the atomic age.

7. The cost of UMT—direct and indirect—is likely to be so large as to starve—particularly in this essential era of economy in government—more important aspects of national defense—the diplomatic service; the regular services, which must be instantly ready; intelligence, research, and development; the services' school system; industrial mobilization; etc.

8. UMT by its very size and cost may build up the shadow of security without its substance; there is grave danger we may create in our military psychology a Maginot Line concept. Air power, missiles, new weapons, sea power must have priority.

In this atomic age, the military emphasis—if there is to be any degree of security—must be on regular forces, highly trained, instantly ready; not on some mass army that may be ready many months after M-day. As Maj. Gen. John S. Wood, wartime commander of the famous Fourth Armored Division, has put it, UMT will not produce a single unit ready to fight or a single fighting man for immediate use.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 23, 1947.

Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE, Jr.,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR LODGE: In reply to your letter of May 6, 1947, requesting an answer to the eight objections to universal military training raised by Mr. Hanson Baldwin in his article in the New York Times of May 4, 1947, I am attaching a statement which answers Mr. Baldwin point by point.

I am glad to submit this answer to you for your own information and, as you suggest in your letter, for introduction into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, where it will be available to other Members of Congress.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT P. PATTERSON,
Secretary of War.

UNIVERSAL MILITARY TRAINING MUST STAND ON MILITARY NECESSITY

Universal military training is a military program. Its primary purpose is to build up a reservoir of trained manpower for a military emergency. Its byproducts of great moral and social benefits are very important for a democracy such as ours, but its principal product, trained manpower, must be the real reason for its establishment.

In the New York Times of May 4, 1947, Hanson Baldwin accepts the basic test of the potential usefulness of universal military training but proceeds to give eight factors that, in his opinion, minimize its value.

Mr. Baldwin first states that universal military training is based on "continental" strategy instead of "insular" strategy.

The terms "insular" and "continental" are not defined by Mr. Baldwin, but the implication appears to be that the War Department strategy is based on the use of a large mass army. It might be well, therefore, to analyze the American strategy of war for an atomic age.

In planning strategy for the future, America must face tomorrow as well as next month, next year or two, the next decade, and the next score of years. For tomorrow, or for next year, "push button" warfare is but a promise. No possible enemies have now, or in the near future will have, any guided missiles with which to attack us from the Eurasian land mass. Meanwhile, we must be prepared for the immediate future—not with so-called mass armies but with balanced armed forces. These forces will be composed of naval forces, large air forces, complex logistical forces, and highly mobile combat divisions of air-transportable troops, to seize bases close enough to the enemy to permit the rapid employment of our maximum power against the enemy's home country. This will take trained manpower, but all of this manpower must have the benefit of basic military training. The war will be shortened in proportion to the time it takes to seize and hold key bases. This will depend largely on the time it takes us to mobilize and train our men. For every day of training we undertake in peacetime we may save weeks and months of war.

In order to control the sea or air we must, of course, first of all hold the fortress of America and essential air and sea bases. However, to seize and hold such key bases, from which otherwise an enemy might launch air missiles against the United States, will require combined land, sea, and air operations on a large scale. In other words, a sound strategic defense will require the early assumption of the tactical offensive. We visualize that the first of such operations will be conducted largely by air forces and air-and-sea-transported land forces. Such forces require the deployment of great numbers of men, on the ground, at air and sea bases, launching sites, ports, depots, communication lines, and elsewhere. It is not conceivable that personnel employed in these activities could be fully effective in the numbers and at the time required, without previous basic military training. Certainly, the numbers involved will be far larger than we will be willing or able to maintain in a standing peacetime establishment.

We must distinguish between massed battle formations and large armies. Massed infantry formations on the battlefield have declined since Napoleonic wars and we may expect this tendency to continue. America, since colonial and Indians days, has led the world away from mass formations and toward wide deployment and open warfare. Atomic and other scientific developments will, without question, further accelerate this trend. We had no mass army in World War II. We had only 89 divisions scattered over the whole world. Even within these divisions, the proportion of technical and logistical troops to riflemen was high. The over-all proportion of air and service troops to ground combat troops was, of course, much higher. This proportion can be expected to grow. However, there is no historical or scientific evidence that armies are becoming smaller because of this trend. On the contrary, all the evidence proves that, as weapons and means become more powerful, armed forces have necessarily become much larger. Logistical requirements to support the more powerful weapons and the necessity for wide deployment make more men necessary in the battle and communications zones, even though there are fewer infantrymen on the firing line.

No one can foretell when the methods, weapons, and techniques of the present will finally be replaced. Revision and improvement is a continuing process. Our best advices are that push-button warfare is many years away.

We must do everything we can now to prevent a long war—if war comes. UMT offers a sure saving in time. No reasonable and practical alternative has been suggested.

WORLD WAR II VETERANS MUST BE RELIEVED BY TRAINED REPLACEMENTS

Mr. Baldwin's second proposition is that we already have trained and battle-tried troops to meet an immediate emergency. Even with universal training, it will be more than 5 years before a substantial new reserve would be trained. During those 5 years, the reserve of trained veterans, upon which Mr. Baldwin is willing to rely, will be depleted at the rate of over a million a year, by reason of the fact that these men are acquiring dependents, and are taking on weight and infirmities with their added years. If we do not start now to replace this trained manpower it will be almost wholly dissipated in about 5 years. UMT cannot safely be delayed.

UMT WILL SHORTEN A FUTURE WAR

Mr. Baldwin, in the discussion of his second point, arrives at the conclusion that because men would not be completely trained the whole program should be abandoned. It has never been contended that UMT would turn out a finished product. The increased velocity and power of weapons and means for waging war available to our enemies make the task of total preparation far greater than can reasonably be accomplished after the advent of war. If we are to reach maximum effectiveness in time for the decisive phase, many time-consuming steps must have been taken well in advance. Obviously the whole job cannot be done in advance without staggering cost. We must search for an optimum balance between ideal requirements and practical capabilities.

UMT WILL ALLOW DECISIVE OFFENSIVE TO BE ASSUMED MUCH EARLIER

Mr. Baldwin's third proposition emphasizes the fact that the offensive has many advantages over the defensive. However, as applied to the United States, this maxim may very well run against us—not for us—in the initial stages of a future war. We have no aggressive intent anywhere in the world. We may be confronted with a long-planned surprise offensive. Therefore, we are almost certain to pass through an initial defensive phase which we should contrive to shorten as far as possible. UMT is the best means of shortening this phase. It is the best insurance that our scientific air-sea-land effort can quickly reach its maximum power.

It is certainly not clear how Mr. Baldwin could interpret a trained civilian manpower as a Maginot Line, when the whole philosophy of UMT is to speed up the time it takes to shift to the aggressive decisive counterattack. It is pertinent that only last March Prof. Albert Einstein, who is intimately familiar with the capabilities of atomic energy, specifically and publicly warned us that we may be treating the atom bomb (and by implication other scientific means), as a Maginot Line. He stated that the bomb secret gives us "security only in imagination. * * * and to that extent is a great danger."

We agree with Mr. Baldwin that reserves, no matter how well trained, cannot possibly eliminate the need for a highly skilled Regular force. But the existence of trained reserves will make whatever standing force we are allowed to retain much more readily available for immediate action. Our Regular forces will always be largely committed abroad in insular possessions. We will never have enough men, in Regular Army units alone, to undertake all the initial tasks of total mobilization. They must be supported immediately by the National Guard, ORC, and other civilian components which must, in turn, be backed up by UMT to provide the requisite manpower and training. Lacking this support they will be depleted at the outset to do jobs which trained reserves could otherwise do. And when committed to action they will be subject to suicidal sacrifices if they have no early support.

UMT ESSENTIAL TO CIVIL DEFENSE

Mr. Baldwin's fourth proposition is that UMT does not point to civil defense, now becoming extremely vital in case of war. This is exactly contrary to the fundamental basis of the whole UMT plan as envisaged by the War Department. Training in first aid, basic hygiene, sanitation, organization, discipline, the use of small arms and sentry duty are all included in universal military training. These subjects are of the essence of civil defense training. True, UMT itself creates no organization for civil defense, but it is an essential first step, for it provides a trained nucleus of able-bodied men in every community.

CONSCRIPTION NOT A PRACTICAL PEACETIME ALTERNATIVE

Item number five states that a good case could have been made for the extension of the wartime draft and that UMT provides no men for overseas. That is certainly true. But the certainty of lack of public and congressional support for an extension of the World War II Selective Service Act ruled that out as a practical peacetime alternative to UMT. A fair trial of the voluntary method of maintaining the regular forces is essential. The volunteer system is far superior if it produces sufficient troops. If it fails, the public and the Congress will then have to face the question of some form of peacetime selective service as a remedy, as was stated in my recommendation to the President last spring not to seek extension of selective service then. But this remedy is directed to the question of maintaining our standing forces and not of training our civilian reserve. UMT is the only practical solution to that problem.

REGULAR ARMY SHOULD BE MUCH LARGER WITHOUT UMT

A much larger Army will be required without UMT than will be required with UMT to attain the same degree of security. Universal military training increases the peacetime responsibilities of the Regular Army but does not increase its burdens as Mr. Hanson Baldwin indicates. On the contrary, it lightens the burden. At the opening of hostilities, days and months have been lost while training cadres were set up and fundamentals inculcated in new soldiers. With universal military training, there will be called into service thousands of men who will not have to begin from scratch.

The Regular Army has responsibilities for the training of the National Guard and Reserves. Trained manpower will facilitate efficient performance.

The Regular Army's main job today is occupation. Universal military training will not solve the problem of manpower for our forces in Germany and Japan except insofar as it may stimulate interest in the Army as a career. The primary and traditional job of the Regular Army, however, is training, and universal military training will give the Army the men in peacetime, before hostilities begin, who will be invaluable if war comes and will save time, money, and lives.

To rely wholly on a Regular Army, especially of the size needed in a war of today or tomorrow, would be far more expensive and moreover would be contrary to the American traditional attitude toward standing armies. The concept of universal preparedness for all able-bodied men, however, is as old as the English common law.

CIVILIAN COMPONENTS ESSENTIAL TO NATIONAL DEFENSE

Point No. 6 in Mr. Baldwin's article states that the program is primarily designed to strengthen the National Guard and Reserve components, the value of which he impugns as not being immediately ready for combat service in this atomic age. Certainly, the program is pointed towards strengthening the National Guard and Organized Reserve (among other essential goals). UMT will make the National Guard more efficient in the future than ever before. There is now the richest reserve of trained and war-experienced National Guard and Reserve leadership in history to train and lead its new organizations. The National Guard and Reserve in World War II enriched their tradition in the service of the Nation. The National Guard and selected units of the Organized Reserve will be able in the future to meet certain vital, early, emergency missions better than ever in the past. The National Guard will be ready for decisive combat missions months earlier, with UMT, than ever before. It must be realized that all M-day missions are not necessarily combat missions on a battlefield. Many such missions require troops, which can still be in their training phase, for example, civil defense and to relieve Regular Army units of their zone of the interior, communications-zone and base-defense missions to make them immediately available to the mobile striking force for active combat. The proper performance of such vital support missions, in the very earliest stages of a future war, may turn a threat of early defeat into eventual victory. They cannot possibly be performed in time without well-trained reserve units. UMT will thus make a major and perhaps decisive contribution in the very first phase of a future war. Its value during the later build-up stage, in speeding up replacements and supports and in furnishing the life blood of the civil defense structure, will be equally great.

MILITARY BUDGET MUST BE BALANCED AMONG ALL ESSENTIALS

The seventh proposition is that the UMT program will be costly and will thus starve other activities, such as the State Department, intelligence, research and development, service schools, and industrial mobilization. All of these programs are as vitally essential as UMT and must be preserved. All elements of preparedness must be balanced within the funds that can reasonably be made available. Such funds as are made available for security, which includes sizable appropriations for other departments of the Government than War and Navy, must be apportioned among all essential preparedness programs without eliminating any one essential. UMT, in terms of eventual dividends, is one of the cheapest of all preparedness measures. The savings in months of war expenditures of billions of dollars and hundreds of thousands of lives will be incalculable.

The eighth proposition states that UMT, by its very size, may build a shadow of strength and security without substance—that air and sea power and guided missiles and new weapons must have priority. Here Mr. Baldwin reveals a fundamental misunderstanding of UMT and of a proper balance of armed forces required to achieve victory should we be forced into a war now, or in the foreseeable future. UMT is not an end in itself. It is not another weapon or another armed force to be gaged in comparison with land, sea, and air power. It is the means of providing trained manpower to make the Navy and Air Force as well as the ground Army and the civil-defense structure quickly effective in the event of war. It is essential to a quick build-up of all of those forces. And in a future war speed will be of the essence of victory. Mr. Baldwin's whole article is based on a basic misapprehension of the importance of this fundamental fact. He treats UMT as essentially a negation of modern developments in air, sea, and land power. Whereas, actually, it is the very speed and complexity of modern warfare which makes UMT, for the first time, an absolute essential to our military security. The speed of war requires that men be made effective much quicker than ever before. The complexity requires that they receive more training than ever before. Further, UMT is the only substitute for the strong Allies who in our last two wars bore the brunt of the attack while we were building up our fighting forces.

NO PRACTICAL ALTERNATIVE TO UMT

Nowhere in his article does Mr. Baldwin face these simple facts—that a war of the future will require a more comprehensive and a more rapid mobilization than we have ever faced before, that this will require us to train more men in a shorter time than ever before and that the only way we can shorten the time is to train them before the advent of war. This requires peacetime military training of civilians in large numbers. For the foreseeable future, every man in the armed forces, regardless of his branch or how technical his ultimate assignment, must have basic training of the type contemplated under UMT. That is universal military training by any name you choose to call it.

The value of the trained man as compared to the untrained man is as undeniable in the military field as in the field of medicine, law, science, or industry. This need of trained manpower, if the country is to have a strong defense establishment, was as manifest to Washington, Jefferson, and Jackson in former times as to Pershing, Marshall, and Eisenhower in our own times.

President Washington stated: "It may be laid down as a primary position, and the basis of our system that every citizen who enjoys the protection of a free government, owes not only a portion of his property, but even of his personal services to the defense of it."

General Marshall stated: "I think you have to frankly face two things: Either universal military training or the hope—that is all you can possibly have—the hope that you will have better than a year for preparation. Of course, if you decide to repeat the policies of the past and rest your security on a hope, it means that your lack of readiness would, in my opinion, encourage the very thing you wish so earnestly to avoid, namely, the tragedy of another war."

Washington's statement of a fundamental requirement of our democratic system has now become an urgent necessity to the survival of that system. The drastic developments in the speed and destructive power of modern war make unavoidable the choice presented by General Marshall. We can be guided by the founder of our democracy and insure our system of a reasonable chance of survival; or we can be guided by wishful thinking, and stake the survival of our system on a reckless gamble.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

By unanimous consent, the following routine business was transacted:

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

REINCORPORATION OF THE INSTITUTE OF INTER-AMERICAN AFFAIRS

A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to provide for the reincorporation of the Institute of Inter-American Affairs and for other purposes (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

UTILIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS IN CONNECTION WITH UNRRA LIQUIDATION

A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to enable the President to utilize the appropriations for United States participation in the work of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration for meeting administrative expenses of United States Government agencies in connection with United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration Liquidation (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

PARTICIPATION IN INTER-AMERICAN CONFERENCE ON SOCIAL SECURITY

A letter from the Under Secretary of State, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation providing for participation by the United States in the Inter-American Conference on Social Security and its Permanent Committee and authorizing an appropriation therefor (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AUTHORIZATION FOR CERTAIN TRANSFERS AND CONSOLIDATIONS OF APPROPRIATIONS BY FEDERAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATOR

A letter from the Acting Administrator of the Federal Security Agency, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize intra-agency transfers and consolidations of appropriations by the Federal Security Administrator, and for other purposes (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the PRESIDENT pro tempore:

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii; ordered to lie on the table:

"Senate Concurrent Resolution 17

"Concurrent resolution requesting the Congress of the United States to enact the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill, S. 866, of the Eightieth Congress, first session

"Whereas the Territory of Hawaii is faced with a housing crisis so far reaching in scope and so serious in nature that the Territory is unable to cope with it fully if unassisted by Federal aid; and

"Whereas until the enactment of further legislation by the Congress additional Federal funds will not be available to alleviate the discomfort and suffering of countless residents of the Territory who are now living in inadequate accommodations; and

"Whereas the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill, S. 866 of the Eightieth Congress, first session, entitled 'A bill to establish a national housing objective and the policy to be followed in the attainment thereof; to facilitate sustained progress in the attainment of such objective and to provide for the coordinated execution of such policy through a National Housing Commission, and for other purposes,' presents a well-considered program for housing which, if enacted, would be of aid to all the States as well as the Territory in assuring adequate housing both through privately financed construction and public low-rent projects: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the twenty-fourth session of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, requested to enact said Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill; and be it further

"Resolved, That certified copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress, to the Secretary of the Interior, and to the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii."

A resolution adopted by the Engineers' Club, of Minneapolis, Minn., expressing that club's appreciation and gratification for changing the name of Boulder Dam to Hoover Dam; ordered to lie on the table.

A resolution adopted by the American Veterans' Committee, Territory of Hawaii, Chapter No. 7, Lower Manoa, Honolulu, T. H., favoring the enactment of the bill (H. R. 857) to remove the racial restrictions upon naturalization and to amend the immigration laws, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Petitions of the members of the Pensacola Townsend Club, No. 1, and sundry citizens of Boynton Beach, both in the State of Florida, praying for the enactment of the so-called Townsend plan to provide old-age assistance; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. LUCAS:

A resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the General Assembly of the State of Illinois, favoring location of an atomic-energy laboratory on Government-owned land near Elwood, Ill.; to the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

(See resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate by the President pro tempore on May 23, 1947, p. 5706, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

MISSOURI LEGISLATURE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION APPROVING PRINCIPLE OF WORLD FEDERATION

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present for appropriate reference and to have incorporated in the body of the RECORD Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 6, adopted on May 13, 1947, by the Senate, and on May 15, 1947, by the House of Representatives of the Missouri Legislature, being a concurrent resolution approving the principle of world federation.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was received, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and, under the rule, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 6

Concurrent resolution approving the principle of world federation

Whereas it is necessary at the present juncture of human affairs to enlarge the bases of organized society by establishing a government for the community of nations, in order to preserve civilization and enable mankind to live in peace and be free, the following principles and objectives are hereby enunciated in—

"THE DECLARATION OF THE FEDERATION OF THE WORLD

"Man, the source of all political authority, is a manifold political being. He is a citizen of several communities: the state, the nation, and the world. To each of these communities he owes inalienable obligations and from each he receives enduring benefits.

"Communities may exist for a time without being incorporated but, under the stress of adversity, they disintegrate unless legally organized. Slowly, but purposefully, through the centuries civilization has united the world, integrating its diverse local interests and creating an international community that now embraces every region and every person on the globe. This community has no government, and communities without government perish. Either this community must succumb to anarchy or submit to the restraints of law and order.

"Governments can only be established through the deliberate efforts of men. Man has struggled from time immemorial to endow the individual with certain fundamental rights whose very existence is now imperiled. Among those rights is man's freedom to worship, speak, write, assemble, and vote without arbitrary interference. To safeguard these liberties as a heritage for the human race, governments were instituted among men, with constitutional guaranties against the despotic exercise of political authority, such as are provided by elected parliaments, trial by jury, habeas corpus, and due process of law. Man must now either consolidate his historic rights or lose them for generations to come.

"The ceaseless changes wrought in human society by science, industry, and economics, as well as by the spiritual, social, and intellectual forces which impregnate all cultures, make political and geographical isolation of nations hereafter impossible. The organic life of the human race is at last indissolubly unified and can never be severed, but it must be politically ordained and made subject to law. Only a government capable of discharging all the functions of sovereignty in the executive, legislative, and judicial spheres can accomplish such a task. Civilization now requires laws, in the place of treaties, as instruments to regulate commerce between peoples. The intricate conditions of modern life have rendered treaties ineffectual and obsolete, and made laws essential and inevitable. The age of treaties is dead; the age of laws is here.

"Governments, limited in their jurisdiction to local geographical areas, can no longer satisfy the needs or fulfill the obligations of the human race. Just as feudalism served its purpose in human history and was superseded by nationalism, so has nationalism reached its apogee in this generation and yielded its hegemony in the body politic to internationalism. The first duty of government is to protect life and property, and when governments cease to perform this function, they capitulate on the fundamental principle of their raison d'être. Nationalism, moreover, is no longer able to preserve the political independence or the territorial integrity of nations, as recent history so tragically confirms. Sovereignty is an ideological concept without geographical barriers. It is better for the world to be ruled by an international sovereignty of reason, social justice, and peace than by diverse national sovereignties organically incapable of preventing their own dissolution by conquest. Mankind must pool its resources of defense if civilization is to endure.

"History has revealed but one principle by which free peoples, inhabiting extensive territories, can unite under one government without impairing their local autonomy. That principle is federation, whose virtue preserves the whole without destroying its parts and strengthens its parts without jeopardizing the whole. Federation vitalizes all nations by endowing them with security and freedom to develop their respective cultures without menace of foreign domination. It regards as sacrosanct man's personality, his rights as an individual and as a citizen and his role as a partner with all other men in the common enterprise of building civilization for the benefit of mankind. It suppresses the crime of war by reducing to the ultimate minimum the possibility of its occurrence. It renders unnecessary the further paralyzing expenditure of wealth for belligerent activity, and cancels through the ages the mortgages of war against the fortunes and services of men. It releases the full energies, intelligence, and assets of society for creative, ameliorative, and redemptive work on behalf of humanity. It recognizes man's morning vision of his destiny as an authentic potentiality. It apprehends the entire human race as one family, human beings everywhere as brothers and all nations as component parts of an indivisible community.

"There is no alternative to the federation of all nations except endless war. No substitute for the federation of the world can organize the international community on the basis of freedom and permanent peace. Even if continental, regional or ideological federations were attempted, the governments of these federations, in an effort to make impregnable their separate defenses, would be obliged to maintain stupendously competitive armies and navies, thereby condemning humanity indefinitely to exhaustive taxation, compulsory military service and ultimate carnage, which history reveals to be not only criminally futile but positively avoidable through judicious foresight in federating all nations. No nation should be excluded from membership in the federation of the world that is willing to limit its military, naval, and air forces, retaining only a constabulary sufficient to police its territory and to maintain order within its jurisdiction, provided that the eligible voters of that nation are permitted the free expression of their opinions at the polls.

"It being our profound and irrevocable conviction:

"That man should be forever free and that his historic rights as an individual and as a citizen should be protected by all the safeguards sanctioned by political wisdom and experience.

"That governments are essential to the existence of communities and that the absence of government is anarchy.

"That there exists an international community, encompassing the entire world, which has no government and which is destined, either to be ruthlessly dominated and exploited by totalitarianism or to be federated by democracy upon the principle of freedom for all nations and individuals.

"That all human beings are citizens of this world community, which requires laws and not treaties for its government.

"That world federation is the keystone in the arch of civilization, humanity's charter of liberty for all peoples, and the signet authenticating at last the union of the nations in freedom and peace.

"That there are supreme moments in history when nations are summoned, as trustees of civilization, to defend the heritage of the ages and to create institutions essential for human progress. In the providence of God, such a crisis is this hour, compelling in duty and unprecedented in responsibility—a fateful moment when men meet destiny for the fulfillment of historic tasks": Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring):

SECTION 1. That the General Assembly of Missouri does hereby solemnly declare that all peoples of the earth should now be united in a world federation, and requests the Senators and Members of the House of Representatives in Congress from the State of Missouri to support and vote for a resolution in the Congress of the United States, approving the principle of world federation and requesting the President of the United States to initiate the procedure necessary to formulate a constitution for the federation of the world, which shall be submitted to each nation for its ratification.

SEC. 2. That a copy of this resolution be sent to each of the Senators and Members of the House of Representatives in Congress from the State of Missouri.

SEC. 3. That this resolution shall be in full force and effect from and after its ratification.

FARM BUREAU SOIL CONSERVATION AND FERTILIZER PROGRAM

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I have received a telegram from H. A. Praeger, president, Kansas Farm Bureau, expressing approval of Senate bill 1251, known as the Farm Bureau soil conservation and fertilizer program. I ask unanimous consent to present the telegram and request that it be appropriately referred and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was received, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOISINGTON, KANS., May 15, 1947.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Thank you for sponsoring S. 1251, the Farm Bureau soil conservation and fertilizer measure. Forty thousand Kansas farmers who are members of Kansas Farm Bureau are asking Congress to pass this bill. Appreciate your influence for an immediate hearing in the committee of this proposed legislation. Your cooperation in getting this bill through the Senate appreciated.

H. A. PRAEGER,
President, Kansas Farm Bureau.

UNIFORM MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE LAW

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD an editorial published recently by the Presbyterian magazine of Philadelphia, endorsing the Capper divorce bill now before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A BILL TO SUPPORT

Hundreds of bills go into the hopper in the halls of Congress, but few emerge from the pigeonholes of committees. Senator CAPPER has introduced one which should interest all citizens who are troubled by the lax divorce laws of most of the States. His bill would establish, by constitutional amendment, a uniform Federal divorce law. It would prohibit divorce except on one of these six grounds: adultery, cruel and inhuman treatment, abandonment, or nonsupport for 1 year, habitual drunkenness, incurable insanity, conviction for an infamous crime. Although such a law would mean a relaxation in such States as New York, it would mean a great improvement in the conditions that now exist in quite a few States. It would wipe out overnight the scandalous divorce mills of such States as Florida and Nevada. Reno would sink again to its rightful level as a frontier town—or, rather, it would rise to that decent level. And although the Capper bill does not conform to the Biblical and Christian standard, it promises so much in approaching that ideal that it should receive the hearty support of all Christian citizens and churches. Fanatical supporters of State's rights should keep their hands off. Here is a moral issue that concerns the whole Nation.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

H. R. 1237. A bill to regulate the marketing of economic poisons and devices, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 199).

By Mr. ECTON, from the Committee on Public Lands:

H. R. 2353. A bill to authorize the patenting of certain public lands to the State of Montana or to the Board of County Commissioners of Hill County, Mont., for public-park purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 202).

By Mr. BUTLER, from the Committee on Public Lands:

S. 1318. A bill to provide funds for cooperation with the school board of the Moclips-Aloha district for the construction and equipment of a new school building in the town of Moclips, Grays Harbor County, Wash., to be available to both Indian and non-Indian children; with an amendment (Rept. No. 203).

By Mr. CORDON:

From the Committee on Appropriations:

H. R. 2436. A bill making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for other purposes; with amendments (Rept. No. 201).

From the Committee on Public Lands:

S. 1185. A bill to provide for the disposal of materials on the public lands of the United States; without amendment (Rept. No. 204); and

S. 1262. A bill to provide a central authority for standardizing geographic names for the purpose of eliminating duplication in standardizing such names among the Federal departments, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 205).

CONSTRUCTION OF RURAL POST ROADS—REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, from the Committee on Public Works, I ask unanimous consent to report favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 1874) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 200) thereon. Similar bills were introduced in the Senate by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] and by the Senators from Alabama [Mr. HILL and Mr. SPARKMAN].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be received, and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. IVES:

S. 1336. A bill for the relief of Abbot Low Moffat; and

S. 1337. A bill for the relief of Hou Chung Chay; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GURNEY (by request):

S. 1338. A bill to amend the Articles for the Government of the Navy to improve the administration of naval justice; and

S. 1339. A bill to amend the Armed Forces Leave Act of 1946, approved August 9, 1946 (Public Law 704, 79th Cong., 2d sess., 60 Stat. 963), and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

S. 1340. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act to provide additional protection for owners of patents of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910, as amended, so as to the protect the United States in certain patent suits; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LUCAS:

CONTROL OF PISTOLS AND OTHER DANGEROUS WEAPONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—AMENDMENT

Mr. COOPER submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 493) to amend section 4 of the act entitled "An act to control the possession, sale, transfer, and use of pistols and other dangerous weapons in the District of Columbia," approved July 8, 1932 (sec. 22, 3204 D. C. Code, 1940 edition), which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

JOINT COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT INFORMATION PROGRAMS

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the other day in commenting upon the program commonly referred to as the Voice of America I made a suggestion that the Congress should have additional information obtained by its own committees. I made the suggestion in the hope that the members of the majority party would submit a resolution. It has not been done to my knowledge. However, I have seen that the House Committee on Appriations through a subcommittee is planning to conduct such an investigation. I realize the importance of this matter to the Appropriations Committee, but I believe a question of permanent policy is involved which ought to have consideration by the appropriate committee of the Senate. I have therefore drawn such a resolution and am offering it this morning with the request that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

I said the other day that there was no pride of authorship and there is none. I ask unanimous consent to submit the concurrent resolution in the hope it will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and that the committee will take such action and make such changes as may be appropriate or proper.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 16), was received and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there is hereby established a joint congressional committee, to be known as the Joint Committee on Government Information Programs (hereinafter referred to as the joint committee), which shall be composed of five members of the Senate (three from the majority party and two from the minority party) appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate and five members of the House of Representatives (three from the majority party and two from the minority party) appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Vacancies in the membership of the joint committee shall not affect the power of the remaining members to execute the functions of the joint committee, and shall be filled in the same manner as in the case of the original selection. The joint committee shall select a chairman and a vice chairman from among its members.

SEC. 2. The joint committee shall—

(1) make a full and complete study and investigation with respect to the nature, manner of performance, and effect of all activities carried out by the State Department or any other agency of the Government for the purpose of acquainting the peoples of foreign countries with the United States, its people and their activities, and the policies and objectives of its Government, including, without limitation:

(a) the policies and methods employed, and their objectives;

(b) the qualifications of all personnel engaged in any such activities;

(c) whether the costs of such activities are justified;

(d) whether such activities are a proper function of government or should be carried out by privately owned organizations, with or without subsidies; and

(2) report to the Senate and the House of Representatives at the earliest practicable date, not later than January 15, 1948, the results of its study and investigation together with such recommendations as to necessary legislation as it may deem desirable.

SEC. 3. (a) The joint committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act at such places and times during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Eightieth Congress, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to procure such printing and binding, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words.

(b) The joint committee is empowered to appoint and fix the compensation of such experts, consultants, and clerical and stenographic assistants as it deems necessary and advisable, but the compensation so fixed shall not exceed the compensation prescribed under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for comparable duties.

(c) The expenses of the joint committee shall not exceed $. Disbursements to pay such expenses shall be made by the Secretary of the Senate out of the contingent fund of the Senate, such contingent fund to be reimbursed from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives in the amount of one-half of disbursements so made.

MEETING OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, by request, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary may sit during today's session of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

THE INTER-AMERICAN MILITARY COOPERATION ACT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Congress of the United States:

I submit herewith for the consideration of the Congress a bill to be entitled "The Inter-American Military Cooperation Act" authorizing a program of military collaboration with other American states including the training, organization, and equipment of the armed forces of those countries.

I submitted a similar bill to the Seventy-ninth Congress and recommended at that time that the Congress give the bill favorable consideration and enact it. The Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives reported the bill with amendments to the Committee of the Whole House as H. R. 6326. This present draft agrees with H. R. 6326. World developments during the year that has passed give still greater importance to this legislation, and I again ask the Congress to give this bill favorable consideration and enact it.

As stated in my message to the Seventy-ninth Congress, our Army and Navy have maintained cordial relations of collaboration with the armed forces of other American Republics within the framework of the good-neighbor policy. Under authorization of the Congress, military and naval training missions have been sent to various American Republics. During the recent war, even prior to Pearl Harbor, this collaboration was intensively developed on the basis of inter-American undertakings for hemisphere defense. Training activities were expanded, and under the Lend-Lease Act limited amounts of military and naval equipment were made available to the other American Republics as part of the hemisphere defense program. Forces from two of the American republics participated in combat overseas, and others joined in the defense of the shores and seas of the Americas at a time when the danger of invasion of our continents was all too great.

The American Republics have assumed new responsibilities, for their mutual defense and for the maintenance of peace, in the Act of Chapultepec and the Charter of the United Nations. The close collaboration of the American Republics provided for in the Act of Chapultepec, the proposed treaty to be based upon that act, and other basic inter-American documents, make it highly desirable to standardize military organization, training methods, and equipment as has been recommended by the Inter-American Defense Board.

I can find no better way to describe the intent and purpose of this bill than to repeat my message to the Congress of May 6, 1946.

Under the bill transmitted herewith, the Army and Navy, acting in conjunction with the Department of State, would be permitted to continue in the future a general program of collaboration with the armed forces of our sister Republics with a view to facilitating the adoption of similar technical standards. Certain additional training activities, not covered by existing legislation, would be permitted. The President would also be authorized to transfer military and naval equipment to the governments of other American states by sale or other method.

The collaboration authorized by the bill could be extended also to Canada, whose cooperation with the United States in matters affecting their common defense is of particular importance.

A special responsibility for leadership rests upon the United States in this matter because of the preponderant technical, economic, and military resources of this country. There is a reasonable and limited purpose for which arms and military equipment can rightfully be made available to the other American states. This Government will not, I am sure, in any way approve of, nor will it participate in, the indiscriminate or unrestricted distribution of armaments, which would only contribute to a useless and burdensome armaments race. It does not desire that operations under this bill shall raise unnecessarily the quantitative level of armament in the American Republics. To this end the bill specifies that amounts of nonstandard material shall be sought in exchange for United States equipment.

It is my intention that any operations under this bill, which the Congress may authorize, shall be in every way consistent with the wording and spirit of the United Nations Charter. The bill has been drawn up primarily to enable the American nations to carry out their obligations to cooperate in the maintenance of inter-American peace and security under the Charter and the Act of Chapultepec which is intended to be supplanted by a permanent inter-American treaty.

It is incumbent upon this Government to see that military developments in which we have a part are guided toward the maintenance of peace and security and that military and naval establishments are not encouraged beyond what security considerations require. In this connection the bill provides that operations thereunder are subject to any international agreement for the regulation of armaments to which the United States may become a party. In addition, provision will be made for continuing coordination of the actual operations under the legislation with developing plans and policy in the field of armaments regulation.

In executing this program it will be borne in mind, moreover, that it is the policy of this Government to encourage the establishment of sound economic conditions in the other American Republics which will contribute to the improvement of living standards and the advancement of social and cultural welfare. Such conditions are a prerequisite to international peace and security. Operations under the proposed legislation will be conducted with full and constant awareness that no encouragement should be given to the imposition upon other people of any useless burden of armaments which would handicap the economic improvement which all countries so strongly desire. The execution of the program authorized by the bill will also be guided by a determination to guard against placing weapons of war in the hands of any groups who may use them to oppose the peaceful and democratic principles to which the United States and other American nations have so often subscribed.

In entering into agreements with other American states for the provision of training and equipment as authorized by the bill, the purposes of this program will be made clear to each of the other governments.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 23, 1947.

SUPPORT FOR WOOL

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 814) to provide support for wool, and for other purposes, which were, on page 1, to strike out lines 4 to 10, inclusive, and insert:

SEC. 2. (a) The Commodity Credit Corporation shall continue, until December 31, 1948, to support a price to producers of wool in the continental United States and Territories at the price it supported wool in 1946.

On page 2, to strike out lines 7 to 19, inclusive; on page 2, line 20, to strike out "SEC. 4" and insert "SEC. 3"; on page 2, to strike out lines 24 and 25; and on page 3, to strike out lines 1 to 9, inclusive, and insert:

SEC. 4. Subsections (a) and (b) of section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended and reenacted (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 7, sec. 624), are hereby amended to read as follows:

"(a) Whenever the President has reason to believe that any one or more articles are being, or are practically certain to be, imported into the United States under such conditions and in sufficient quantities as to render or tend to render ineffective or materially interfere with any program or operation undertaken, or to reduce substantially the amount of any product processed in the United States from any commodity subject to and with respect to which any program is in operation, under this title or the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, or section 32, Public Law No. 320, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 24, 1935, as amended, or the Wool Act of 1947, he shall cause an immediate investigation to be made by the United States Tariff Commission, which shall give precedence to investigations under this section to determine such facts. Such investigations shall be made after due notice and opportunity for hearing to interested parties and shall be conducted subject to such regulations as the President shall specify.

"(b) If, on the basis of such investigation and report to him of findings and recommendations made in connection therewith, the President finds the existence of such facts, he shall by proclamation impose such fees on, or such limitations on the total quantities of, any article or articles which may be entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption as he finds and declares shown by such investigation to be necessary to prescribe in order that the entry of such article or articles will not render or tend to render ineffective or materially interfere with any program or operation undertaken, or will not reduce substantially the amount of any product processed in the United States from any commodity subject to and with respect to which any program is in operation, under this title or the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, or section 32, Public Law No. 320, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 24, 1935, as amended, or the Wool Act of 1947: Provided, That no limitation shall be imposed on the total quantity of any article which may be imported from any country which reduces such permissible total quantity to less than 50 percent of the average annual quantity of such article which was imported from such country during the period from January 1, 1929, to December 31, 1933, both dates inclusive: And provided further, That no limitation shall be imposed on the total quantities of wool or products thereof which may be entered or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption."

SEC. 5. The Commodity Credit Corporation may, until December 31, 1948, dispose of wool owned by it without regard to any restriction imposed upon it by law.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. AIKEN, Mr. BUSHFIELD, Mr. YOUNG, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, and Mr. ELLENDER conferees on the part of the Senate.

REDUCTION OF INDIVIDUAL INCOME-TAX PAYMENTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce individual income-tax payments.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to me to make a point of no quorum?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the point agreeable to the Senator from Georgia, inasmuch as the time taken by the roll call is chargeable to both sides?

Mr. GEORGE. It is agreeable to us.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY] is necessarily absent.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Ninety-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I yield 30 minutes to the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I would like very much in the present session of Congress, if it is prudent to vote for tax reduction, to vote for a payment on the national debt, and for such financial program as would carry out those two very desirable objectives. Wartime taxes have been an enormous burden. A few of them have been eliminated; some of them have been modified; but, even so, the people of the Nation, both those poorly circumstanced and those well-to-do, are still carrying a tremendous amount of the burdens which war made necessary.

The question before the Senate is: Can we do these things now with that degree of certainty which would impel prudent men to take the necessary steps to carry these objectives into actual being? I am a member of the Appropriations Committee, and I want to say now that while the cuts in appropriations made in the House and those made in the Senate have been considerable, I think that all fair-minded men who will face the facts will agree that they have been very much less than what we hoped and expected could be accomplished when we voted on the separate measures providing for reductions in appropriations of $6,000,000,000 and $4,500,000,000, adopted by the House and Senate, respectively, some time ago.

Mr. President, I want to vote for tax reduction and for payment on the national debt with the reasonable knowledge that 14 months from now when the fiscal year 1948 draws to a close, I, as one Member of the Senate, shall not feel that I have overdone it, and will not again be confronted with another deficit.

For 17 years as a Member of this body I have lived under administrations that practiced deficit financing. Some of the Members of the Senate who have served all or a part of that time will remember that at almost every session of the Congress I have done what I could, both by speech on the floor and by vote in the Appropriations Committee, to try to get our budget in balance because, among other things, in my judgment not to do so was dangerous and unwise. The rise of Mussolini in Italy and the rise of Hitler in Germany came about more than anything else by reason of deficit financing in those two countries.

For 44 of the 66 years of the life of the royal Italian Government after the revolution led by Garibaldi, Italy practiced deficit financing. Almost every administration that ran for office in that country promised to balance the budget. Every administration, as soon as it got in power, immediately began to practice deficit financing to satisfy the clamor of the people. Adequate taxes were temporarily postponed from time to time and in the end and then and then only, when the delayed taxes finally came, the Italian people found out that in proportion to the income of its people Italy was the heaviest-taxed nation on the face of the earth.

The same thing was true in Germany, where the tax system was primarily not lodged in the federal or central government, but in the states of Germany. Even the railroads paid separate taxes in each state rather than national taxes.

In the case of this rich and prosperous country I do not see any prospect of a dictator arising because of deficit financing. We have such great and varied resources, so much know-how, so much potential and intrinsic wealth in our people and in our soil, that I think it would stretch the truth to say that a reasonable continuance of deficit financing would bring on a dictator, and I do not wish to draw that inference. Nevertheless, a debt of $260,000,000,000 is still a tremendous amount of a burden for the people of this Nation to carry, now that we have good times, and the opportunity has come to taper it off and whittle it down.

Recurring to the happenings of the present session of Congress, I remind the Senate that the able Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], introduced a measure to cut down Federal spending for the next fiscal year by $4,500,000,000. The House of Representatives passed a similar measure, but fixed the amount at $6,000,000,000. What are the prospects of reaching either of those goals? Here is what has actually happened up to now, and as I read these figures keep in mind that only one of the regular appropriation bills for the next year has been passed by both branches of the Congress.

The appropriation for the Labor Department and for the Federal Security Agency was reduced $103,000,000. The appropriation for the Treasury and Post Office Departments was reduced $56,000,000. The appropriation for the Interior Department was reduced $134,000,000. The appropriation for the State, Justice, and Commerce Departments was reduced $160,000,000. The appropriation for the Navy Department was reduced $377,000,000. The appropriation for the Department of Agriculture, just reported in the House, was reduced $375,000,000. Thus if we add the actual cuts in appropriations made in bills which have either passed the House or been reported to the House, we find over-all cuts so far in nine of the principal departments of the Government to the extent of only $1,205,000,000.

I am not counting the $800,000,000 of tax refund money which was taken out of the Treasury appropriation bill, because that does not represent a reduction in expenditures. Of the $1,600,000,000 set aside for this purpose, the Congress determined to leave only $800,000,000 in the bill, upon the theory that if tax reductions exceeded $800,000,000, the amount provided for by the House—and which will probably be provided for by the Senate—there would be a separate bill to appropriate the money for any additional tax refunds we might have to make. But that is mere bookkeeping. The point is that there was no real reduction of expenditures by that transaction.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is not a tax refund almost like interest on the debt? It is an obligation which we must pay, is it not?

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course it is an obligation of the Government. We cannot tell how much the obligation will be. The President wanted the amount to be ample. The House thought that half the amount recommended would be ample.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I invite the attention of the Senator to the fact that the Interior Department bill has not yet been reported to the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am coming to that.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. And the Agriculture bill has not passed the House or Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am coming to that.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is obvious from newspaper comments and other reports that appropriations contained in those bills will be substantially increased before they reach the President.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is correct. But even conceding for the moment that there will be no increase in those appropriations in either the House or the Senate, the unassailable truth of the matter is that the extent of the actual proposed cuts in expenditures in all those bills, including the Agriculture appropriation bill, represents a total of $1,205,000,000. That is a fact which cannot be denied. The total reductions in expenditures up to this good hour assuming that no additions will be made to the appropriations when they reach the Senate, amount to $1,205,000,000. Where is the $4,500,000,000 cut which we, with high ideals and endeavors, set as the goal in this body several months ago? Where is the $6,000,000,000 cut to which the House dedicated its effort? There remain only the Army appropriation bill and the independent offices appropriation bill, in addition to one or two minor appropriation bills which do not involve large sums of money. So even if we were to make a drastic cut in the Army appropriation bill, we could not reach a cut of $6,000,000,000, because the Army appropriation bill is only for approximately $6,000,000,000. We would not have a corporal's guard left if the remaining bills were cut to such an extent that a $6,000,000,000 reduction would be possible. Indeed, it is doubtful if they could be cut to such an extent as to produce a reduction of $4,500,000,000.

These appropriation bills deal with the period of time beginning July 1 next and extending to July 1, 1948. It is called the fiscal year 1948. Therefore, nothing has happened in the Senate to date to give a prudent man justification for assuming that appropriations will be reduced to the extent of more than approximately $2,000,000,000, less than half of what the Senate promised the people in its resolution of several months ago, and about a third of what the House promised the people at the same time.

It is significant that the House and Senate have been unable to agree, even at this late stage, as to how much of a reduction can be made. So far there has been a failure of the conferees of the House and Senate even to agree that four and a half billion, five billion, or six billion can actually be cut from Federal expenditures.

Therefore we shall not be able to effect a saving of three and a half billion dollars by reducing expenditures. Already we have been over 9 of the 12 departments of the Government, and we have reduced their appropriations $1,205,000,000. We have three departments left. In my judgment we shall not be able to reduce expenditures by $3,200,000,000.

What do the advocates of "act now" suggest? They say, "This is a great year. Income is soaring. The people are prosperous. There is a great deal of money in the country. Corporations are making enormous profits. This condition will continue for the next 14 months. There will be no substantial dip. There will be no loss in Federal revenue. Profits will continue, and therefore tax revenues will continue." They say that if that situation continues for 14 months longer, we can expect $4,000,000,000 or $5,000,000,000 more in revenue in the Federal Treasury than we anticipated we would have, so great are profits and earnings and income-tax payments of both corporations and individuals into the Federal Treasury.

Apparently no one else shares that view. I do not often read the stock-market page, but in the past 3 or 4 months I have noticed that the prices of stocks have declined, many of them as much as 50 percent. Billions of dollars of paper values have disappeared. If the statements of our friends on the other side are accurate, if we are to have continued high profits for another 14 months, why is it that the investors of the country do not realize it? Based upon such a supposition, stocks can be bought on the New York stock exchange today which would yield a return of 8 or 10 percent on investment, assuming that the present high level of profits will continue for another 14 months.

When we boil the situation down, what do we make of it? The proposed tax reduction and debt reduction are predicated upon two things: First, that there is to be an ultimate reduction in taxes of between $4,500,000,000 and $5,000,000,000; second, that income coming into the Treasury from large profits will continue for another 14 months.

The latter of those two propositions is in the realm of pure speculation. It may happen. It may be that revenues will be even greater than we estimate. However, 14 months in this war-torn and sick world is a long time. As conditions now exist, looking ahead 14 months is like looking ahead 10 years in the early twenties or in the early 1900's. The whole world is in turmoil. We have not settled down from this terrific war, and therefore we are not in a position to prophesy or predict what will happen in the next 14 months.

My able colleague, the eminent Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], because of his long service in this body, because of his vast experience in the handling of fiscal matters for the Government—he has had more such experience than has any other man in this Chamber—judicial by temperament, moderately conservative by temperament on financial matters, has asked the Congress one thing only in the form of the motion which is pending. Says the Senator from Georgia, "Why do we not wait until the 10th of June? That is only 3 weeks away. By that time all the appropriation bills will have reached the floor of the House of Representatives, and we can then see the extent of the proposed cuts suggested by the House Appropriations Committee. If those cuts are sufficient to warrant a tax reduction, all well and good. If they are not sufficient and we act beforehand, we will have reduced taxes beyond the point of prudence." He asks only that we have all the information obtainable before we decide the matter; he asks only that we have all the facts before us. If the facts are as predicted in some quarters, I shall be in favor of tax reduction. If, on the other hand, they are not as predicted, then I should want to modify the proposal of the able Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN].

In reading the newspaper this morning I was astounded to find that the very able and industrious Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], in a Nation-wide radio address, as reported in the press, had made the statement that he had no fear of a deficit for the year 1948, assuming that the tax-reduction bill becomes a law. In other words, the Senator made the prediction that for the next 14 months business would boom; there would be no recession sufficient to prevent the raising of revenue which would, at all events, balance the Federal budget. It seemed to me that he was taking in a great deal of territory. I am utterly at a loss to know why, with billions upon billions of dollars in the banks of the country, with billions of dollars in the portfolios of the insurance companies, with stocks away down, and with dividends on stocks at present away up, the public is reluctant to invest. Certainly the investors do not share the optimism of the Senator from Ohio. We can examine the big-board Stock Exchange list and read the dividends and then look at the prices at which stocks are selling, and, assuming that the dividends hold up, we could make scores of investments today, based on the dividends and the present prices, which would yield 8, 10, 12, or, in some cases, 15 percent on the investment. Yet no one buys. The great moneyed interests of the country, which quite often find themselves in the majority in the party across the aisle, do not share this optimism. We are here to chart a course for our Government, which ought to be predicated on proof, not on the uncertainties that may arise at home and abroad. In the estimate which I have read, to point to some of those uncertainties, I have not taken into account the $400,000,000 that has recently been appropriated for Greece and Turkey, and $350,000,000 for relief. I understand that other bills are coming. Who knows that but before this session is over we may have other bills which will carry foreign expenditures beyond the billion-dollar mark? It was only at the last session of Congress that we passed a bill carrying more than $3,000,000,000 for Great Britain. It was called a loan. In my opinion, it was not a loan at all. I doubt that much of it will be paid back or can be paid back by the British Government.

All of these things are hanging loose in the air, and yet this proposal is made before we know anything about the amount of the cuts. We should not anticipate that they will be greater than we now know they will be. In my judgment, when many of the bills which have been reported to the House or acted upon by the House come before the Senate there is no question that many of them will have some of the cuts restored to them. Already the Republican Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] has said that $180,000,000 of the cut in the Agriculture Department bill ought to be restored. Already western Senators on both sides of the aisle are saying that the cuts in the Interior Department bill having to do with reclamation and irrigation should be restored. If those things come to pass—and we have already made many restorations in other appropriation bills in the Senate Committee on Appropriations—then the $1,205,000,000 of the $9,000,000,000 already reported to the House will shrink, in all probability, to six hundred or seven hundred or eight hundred millions of dollars. That will represent all the cuts in all of the bills so far reported to or acted upon by the Senate.

Therefore, we have only the Army and the Veterans' Bureau to fall back on. In my judgment, we are not going to save $4,000,000,000 or $5,000,000,000 out of either one of those appropriation bills, or even both of them put together. The Navy bill has been reported with a cut of $377,000,000; and it would be very unusual if a considerable amount of that sum does not find its way back into the bill before it finally passes both branches of the Congress.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and I served in the House together some years ago. I do not want to reflect on the House at all, but there was a policy over there then, which still exists, that when they are ready to make a cut in an appropriation bill they make it as much as they think it ought to be, or perhaps a little beyond, and each Member of the House says "The Senate has to review it anyhow, and when it gets over there they will look into it again, and if the agency or department deserves the extra money the Senate will put it back into the bill."

So these figures which I have read this morning are the maximum amount of cuts, the maximum suggested even by the committee. The House must yet act on them, and then they must run the gantlet of the Senate Appropriations Committee, the Senate itself, and then a conference of the two Houses.

I repeat, that up to this good hour, for Labor and Federal Security the reduction has been only $103,000,000; for the Treasury and Post Office Departments, $56,000,000; for the Interior Department, $134,000,000; State, Justice, and Commerce, $160,000,000; Navy Department, $377,000,000; Department of Agriculture, $375,000,000; making a total of $1,205,000,000 as to bills on which neither the House nor the Senate has acted and as to which the percentage of restoration will be considerable.

Yet in the face of all that we speak of reducing taxes by three and one-fourth billions of dollars, and we say we shall pay on the national debt $2,600,000,000, making approximately $6,000,000,000. When asked, "Where are the cuts to justify this action?" the reply is made, "We have estimates; we have beliefs; we have suppositions that the income of the Government will continue high for the next 14 months, to the same extent it has existed in the first part of 1947, and that will cause more money to come into the Treasury than we had expected, and thus we will have enough." That notwithstanding the fact that we have not cut appropriations sufficiently to make the tax reduction to enable us to pay this amount on the national debt.

The Senator from Ohio—and I am sorry he is not in the Chamber at this time—said in his radio address last night—and I had one of the best laughs on my way down in the train, as I read the report of his address, that I have had for a long while—that the Democrats were playing politics with tax reduction. "The Democrats," said my good friend, the industrious and able Senator from Ohio, "are playing politics with tax reduction."

My fellow Senators, it is admitted on the floor that in 9 of the major 12 appropriation bills, even if every cut recommended by the Appropriations Committee of the House holds fast, the cuts amount to only $1,205,000,000; and there is not a Senator on this floor who will not concede that that amount of cut will not hold when it runs the gantlet of the Senate Appropriations Committee and the Senate itself. Yet we hear the cry of "politics." I know that the Senator is not a candidate for the Presidency, and I know he would be the last one——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAIN in the chair). The time of the Senator from Maryland has expired.

Mr. GEORGE. I extend the time of the Senator from Maryland by 10 minutes.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, as I was saying, I know that my good friend the Senator from Ohio would be the last one to play politics in this matter, because he is thoroughly detached. He is as high as he wishes to go. He considers the office of Senator one of the great offices of the Nation and of the world, and I do not believe he could be induced to run for a higher office. Therefore, when he says that the proposed tax reductions should be made now, notwithstanding that the appropriation cuts are only one-quarter of what was promised a few months ago, and notwithstanding the fact that the proposed tax reductions are predicated on the assumption that good times will prevail for the next 14 months, I know that my good friend the Senator from Ohio is not thinking in terms of politics and, heaven knows, he is not thinking in terms of the next national election, because all of us here know that he will not be a candidate then, even if they draft him and seek to compel him to run, and all of us know that there is no politics at all in putting through a tax bill before we have the appropriations bills on which to predicate the tax-reduction bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator has been speaking of politics, and let me suggest that he is getting on somewhat touchy ground.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have found that everything here is contagious. Perhaps I have been taking too seriously the position of our good friend across the aisle with respect to Republican tax cuts, which have been only about 25 percent of what was promised.

Mr. President, there is just one course that the Senate should adopt in this matter, and every Member of the Senate knows in his heart what it is: We should do what is best for the welfare of our country. Taxes cannot properly be reduced now on the basis of future cuts in expenditures. There is not a Member of this body or of the body at the other end of the Capitol who could do that.

I make the prophecy with respect to the nine appropriation bills which have already been passed by the House of Representatives—leaving out the three to come—that when they finally pass both Houses of Congress, the total cuts will not amount to $1,000,000,000. In making that statement, I leave out of account the extra appropriations which we have made for aid and relief to Greece and Turkey; I make the capitulation without taking them into account. I say that the total expenditure cuts will not be $1,000,000,000. There is not a thing to support prudence in this matter except the expectation, which is a very doubtful one, that good times will continue for the next 14 months, and that there will be such an avalanche of revenues into the Treasury that notwithstanding the reduction or lack of reduction in the cutting of expenditures, there still will be enough revenue to permit the reduction of taxes and the balancing of the national budget.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask the Senator to let me finish this remark: I shall yield to him in a minute.

Mr. President, when we had the $4,500,000,000 budget-reduction bill before us, I went to the other side of the aisle and said to some of my good friends there, "I think you gentlemen are very short-sighted to support a tentative reduction of $4,500,000,000 in the budget. Why do you not make it two and one-half or three billion dollars, and then shoot for $6,000,000,000? If you go beyond what you promise the people, that will be all to the good; but if you fall far short of what you promise, you will be a proper subject of ridicule for not being able to measure your own prowess in the field of reduction of Government expenditures."

But, Mr. President, the pressure was so strong from the other side of the Chamber that the Senate set the ceiling at $4,500,000,000 anyhow, just as Senators on the other side of the aisle are talking now. Mr. President, is there one Member of either branch of Congress who, from the point of view of the actual reduction of expenditures, will now rise and say that we shall save, from a reduction of expenditures, $4,500,000,000? The estimates were totally haywire then; they were totally exaggerated. But, now, Senators are proceeding with something which means a great deal more. The measure previously before us was only an idle resolution, whereas the measure now before us means the financial integrity of the United States Government.

I remember that after World War I, the Government bonds went down to 80, 81, or 82. So far they are up; but, as the Senator from Georgia pointed out the other day, in our present financing on the basis of short-term notes and whatnot, in excess of $50,000,000,000 of Government obligations are floating around, and they might be dumped on the Treasury without notice.

Now I yield to the Senator from South Carolina, but I ask him not to be long, please.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I wish to commend the Senator from Maryland for his statements regarding the national income and his references to the declines which have occurred in the stock market. I should like to say to him that the figures at home and from the Bureau of Internal Revenue show a continuous falling off each month. There have been marked declines in the commodity market. For instance, cotton sold at 35 or 40 cents last year, but for next year's delivery is selling at 30 cents; and lumber has declined in price, and potatoes have declined. The commodities in the South now are bringing in only the support prices, and today the Government is having to take in the potato crop.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not wish to be a calamity howler, but let me point out what we find. The Glenn Martin Co., one of the big aviation companies of the United States, has closed down. The steel concerns are curtailing their operations. There is a threatened coal strike in the offing as of the 1st of July. No one knows how it will be handled or how long it will last. The stock market has gone down and down and down. During the last 4 or 5 months it has been possible to buy, at the prevailing rate, plenty of stocks which would pay 12 percent or 14 percent, but no one has been buying. Yet our friends on the other side of the aisle, who purport to speak for the large interests of the country, are saying that good times are going to continue, and that for the next 14 months the income of the Government will exceed all estimates by $3,000,000,000, or $4,000,000,000, or $5,000,000,000, or $6,000,000,000.

All that the Senator from Georgia asks is that we wait until these cuts are finally made, and that with the definite appropriation figures before us we then proceed into the field of tax reduction.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Does not the Senator from Maryland agree with me that it is most encouraging to find the majority party constantly predicting a $180,000,000,000 of national income? Of course, I hope the national income reaches that figure. If it does, that will be a genuine endorsement of the Democratic Party.

Mr. TYDINGS. It certainly will be. If the national income does continue at a high level, I do not believe the majority party will give us the credit for it. But if the national income declines, they will give us the devil for it, even though their tax-reduction bill at this time may be the one thing that will force it down quickly.

Mr. President, there has been a great deal of talk about inflation. I shall not go into that subject; but if the taxes are reduced at this time, the effect will be to put more money into the people's pockets, thus making it all the easier for them to buy the limited number of things which are available for purchase. Such a situation is not conducive to a reduction of prices, in my judgment. Personally, I can stand having some tax reduction, as can every other citizen of the United States. But that is not the point in connection with this matter. The point is that we should know what the future reasonably holds in store for us, before we go to the extent of reducing taxes, and doing so before we finish appropriating, and without any thorough knowledge of what the expenditure cuts will be.

So, Mr. President, just as the leadership on the other side of the aisle missed the target by a wide margin in setting a $4,500,000,000 reduction goal in connection with the legislative budget, so I feel that they will miss the tax-and-debt-reduction target by a wide margin again. I feel that when the Congress meets next January—although I hope I am wrong—there is going to be a trifle of embarrassment on the other side of the aisle.

I feel that many good men who are going to vote for some of the proposals made without being able to look ahead, will be somewhat sorry, particularly if we suffer a little depression during the summer, and their faces are going to be a little red as they go to the voters in next year's election.

The prudent course, therefore, would be to adopt the motion of the Senator from Georgia, and wait and see what the cuts are, and then frame the tax bill so as to fit Government finances. The Senator from Ohio said a few days ago that we should fit finances to taxes. I say we should fit the taxes to the finances. It is not possible to run a business in any other way than on the basis of knowing what one's income is going to be and what the expenses will be.

I hope the mistake made after the last war will not be repeated, when money was sent abroad from this country so that purchasers abroad would have money with which to finance purchases here. Now Senators are shooting at tax reduction, and I do not believe it is advisable or prudent at this time. In my opinion, before the session next year is very old, many Senators will find that they have opened Pandora's box, for when taxes are once reduced after a war, they cannot successfully be raised in the face of the pressure groups which would oppose such increases, or their restoration after they are once off the books. The cat will then be out of the bag, and it will be too late.

There are 3 weeks left for us to look at the picture of our economic situation, and I implore my colleagues to take the prudent view, in the interest of national solvency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Maryland has expired.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN].

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, it has not been easy to determine how to vote on the question of postponing consideration of income-tax reduction.

I believe that the majority policy committee was in error in bringing this bill before the Senate before it had been decided what the appropriations would be for the ensuing year, but now that the matter is before us, we have to determine whether we should continue with it and dispose of it now or lay it on the table for consideration at a later date.

I have consistently taken the position that we should first of all determine what amount is necessary to maintain essential Government services. Having done this, we should make sure that the budget is entirely balanced.

We should provide for a reduction of from three to five billion dollars in the national debt.

Then—and only then—can we reasonably determine the extent to which tax reduction may be made.

Even these things, however, are not easily determined because we must take into consideration the probable amount of income and this appears to be the most difficult part of the problem.

Less than 2 years ago, Republican leaders of the Senate estimated a national income of not more than $120,000,000,000 for the postwar era. This estimate has been proven very inaccurate.

The estimate of income made by the executive department for the current fiscal year has also been proven wrong, thus showing the difficulty of predicting both the national income and governmental receipts, even 1 year in advance.

Fortunately, both the estimates made by the Republican leadership in 1945 as to national income and the estimates made by the Budget Bureau for governmental income have fallen far short of both national income and Government receipts.

It is entirely proper that estimates of tax receipts should be conservative. It is better to have a balance than a deficit.

In regard to estimates of Government income for the year 1947, we find the executive department estimating $38,800,000,000 based on a national income of $168,000,000,000, whereas the Republican leadership of the Senate estimates a Government income of $41,200,000,000 to be derived from a national income of 170 plus billion.

As one reads official reports and financial and business reports in the press, the only conclusion to draw is that both these estimates are underestimates.

Only yesterday the New York Times carried the story of industrial profits being at a record level for this year.

A survey of 942 companies in 79 fields shows that in 1946 they earned 34 percent over the 1945 record.

With 5 months of the calendar 1947 almost gone, industrial profits are showing a wide increase over even the 1946 profits.

With no break in the huge backlog of unfilled business in sight, only a major unforeseen calamity can prevent the year 1947 from being the greatest year in history so far as our national income is concerned.

Such being the case, I believe it is safe to say that the estimate of $41,200,000,000 of Federal receipts for the year 1947, which has been given us by the chairman of the Finance Committee, is indeed conservative.

In fact, it seems to me that those who scoffed at the estimate of $150,000,000,000 of national income a couple of years ago can well reconcile themselves to a national income of $200,000,000,000 in the near future if we as a nation make the most of our opportunities.

Let us now consider the matter of appropriations. The President has requested appropriations to the amount of $37,500,000,000 for the coming year. Republican leaders in the House and Senate estimate that this amount should be cut from $4,500,000,000 to $6,000,000,000. In my opinion, both the President and the Republican leadership are wrong. My work as chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments has convinced me that substantial savings in Government expenses can be made without sacrificing in any degree essential services of Government. I do not know how great these savings can be. I am satisfied that administrative expenses have been excessive, that unnecessary personnel has and is being employed. I agree that there was an excuse for this in the last decade when it was necessary to employ many persons somewhere at some cost in order to keep relief rolls down, but certainly employment of superfluous personnel is unwarranted at a time when our national economy is at its peak.

It is my belief that administrative costs of the Federal Government may well be reduced 20 percent over-all. I am speaking only of administrative costs, and not of Government expenditures. There are many expenditures which cannot or should not be reduced in the slightest.

The Congress has made definite commitments to the States. The Congress has made definite commitments along the lines of social legislation in the form of grants-in-aid. These commitments should be kept. Not only is national integrity concerned, but continuance of national economy at its present high level is also involved. We must keep our pledges, explicit and implied.

We must provide the funds for our highway program, our program of airport expansion, and for the building of new hospitals. We must not only keep our pledges to old people and the blind and the crippled and the dependent children, but I believe we should materially increase such assistance. We must not impair the health of the Nation's children by eliminating or reducing the school-lunch program.

We must not permit a return to the old days of mining the soil—the soil, that is the most precious and necessary of all our heritage—by reducing or discontinuing the soil-improvement program.

We must not court the possibility of famine in foreign nations by reducing the incentive to our farmers to produce record crops in order to save a few million dollars.

At a time when the world is in a state of political and economic confusion and there is continued talk of war, we must not be niggardly in respect to developing the natural resources of America, for the very security of our Nation depends upon our ability to defend ourselves against all comers until such time as the nations of the earth recover their equilibrium and agree upon an international plan for peace.

Besides providing money for the continuance of these programs so necessary to our national welfare and our national security, we should without delay provide for material assistance to the educational systems of the 48 States unless we are willing to turn our backs upon our schools and the boys and girls of the coming generation.

All these things must be taken into consideration in determining whether and to what extent we can reduce the tax bills of our citizens.

It is out of the question to say that the President's budget of $37,500,000,000 cannot be reduced at all without materially affecting services of Government. In the light of reductions in appropriations which have been made and prospects for future reductions, it would be no less than folly to say that Government expenses can be reduced $6,000,000,000 or even $4,500,000,000 at this time without materially reducing the services which the people of this Nation demand and have a right to receive.

Assuming, however, that Government receipts will total $42,000,000,000 and budget requests are reduced $2,500,000,000 to a total of $35,000,000,000, there would be left $7,000,000,000 to apply to new appropriations, such as Federal aid to education, debt reduction, and tax reduction.

I believe that an estimate of $7,000,000,000 for these purposes is not exaggerated, but rather a conservative estimate. Such being the case, it is possible to enact a tax reduction bill at this time without jeopardizing national security.

I do believe the bill should be amended so as to provide a greater amount of this reduction to those who need it most and who, through the purchase of necessities of life, would contribute most to a further expansion of our national economy.

In the light of all that has been said on this floor and in view of the information which I have received as a result of studies made independently of either side in this controversy, I am led to believe that an over-all tax reduction not exceeding $3,200,000,000 can be made without jeopardizing our ability to reduce the national debt and without reducing those services of Government which contribute materially to the welfare of our people and the security of our Nation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Vermont has expired.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I yield 15 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I arise in opposition to the motion requesting delay in considering the tax-reduction bill until June 10, made by our distinguished colleague the senior Senator from Georgia. Those who would favor this motion fall into two classes: First, those who believe that no tax reduction should be made; second, those who favor a tax reduction but contend that we will be in a better position to determine the amount of such reduction at the later date now proposed. For my part, I am satisfied that there is need for tax reduction and for immediate action to bring it about.

Let us consider first those who belive no tax reduction should be made at all. They subdivide into two categories: Senators who want neither tax reduction nor reduction in Federal expenditures, and Senators who would cut Federal expenses and would apply the savings entirely to other purposes, such as reducing the national debt and providing money for foreign relief and assistance in other forms.

To the first category—those who are opposed to any tax reduction—apparently, the $260,000,000,000 debt is not alarming. To them the $7,500 Federal indebtedness per family of this Nation is a small matter, even though indebtedness in lesser amounts has resulted in bankrupting nation after nation over the face of the globe.

The cost of the Federal Government and the burden it places upon the people of our Nation does not even appear to be of minor concern to this group. The $37,500,000,000 Presidential budget is accepted by them as fair and reasonable, in spite of the fact that the highest previous peacetime expenditures were only $9,000,000,000. Prior to 1932 the highest annual peacetime expenditure by the Federal Government was only $4,000,000,000. For example, in 1940 the Department of Commerce spent about $75,000,000, which was $43,000,000 more than was expended by Herbert Hoover in his biggest spending year as Secretary of Commerce. Mr. Hoover's expenditure was branded by the late President Roosevelt in the campaign of 1932 as so high as to be an outrageous injustice to the taxpayers. But now the Presidential budget calls for an expenditure of $260,000,000 for this same department.

In 1940 the Department of the Interior spent $71,000,000, but now it asks six hundred and sixty-three million. In 1940 the Department of Labor spent $18,000,000. But now it is asking one hundred and six millions. In 1940 the Post Office Department operated on forty-five million, but now it wants $356,000,000.

The independent offices are now asking for $5,500,000,000 more than they expended in 1940. To me this is shocking. It points out that at the end of the road we shall find national bankruptcy unless we rein in sharply—not later, but now.

Mr. President, I find, however, a wide area of common ground with those who recognize the need for curtailing Government expenditure, even though they would apply all savings so achieved to purposes other than tax reduction. It is, indeed, strange—but refreshing—to hear certain of our colleagues and other leaders advocate the application of our entire saving toward reduction of the national debt. When I came to the Senate I had much the same feeling. I, too, would like to be able to see the national debt reduced by the full amount of the savings. But my study of the subject and consultation with citizens in all walks of life has convinced me that it is not in the best interest of America and the American people to permit the present excessively high wartime tax rates to continue unchanged. To do so would dry up the productivity of America. Risk capital would not venture out into channels of industry and commerce. In the end, the national income would be reduced and the revenues to the Federal Government would be decreased rather than increased.

What we must do here is to assure our people that its Congress is not trying to destroy incentive. We are at a point where the law of diminishing returns has set in and where sterility will begin to affect the free-enterprise system. The way to insure against such a condition is to lift some of the burden from the shoulders of those who want to contribute fresh mortar and bricks to the building of a more powerful and stronger America. For that reason, I say, some of the Federal savings should be allowed to remain in the savings of the people to be used for productive purposes and to contribute to an expanding economy for the Nation.

And now we come to the group which believes in both cutting governmental costs and in effecting tax reduction, but who argue that we will be in a better position to determine the amount of tax reduction after June 10.

I see nothing to be gained by further delay. I do not believe that the information we will have then will differ materially from what is before us now.

What has happened up to now in the cutting of budget requests provides a blueprint of what is to come. We know that we shall make good the promises to wring out the water and hack away the deadwood.

Certainly, I find it impossible to believe that any Member of the Senate doubts for a moment that the present Congress is cutting and will continue to cut deeply into the tangled jungle of bureaucratic spending.

I cannot foresee any appreciable error resulting from acting now. But even if there should be such error, it would be offset by the great advantage of assuring the American people that its Congress is acting without delay to redeem promises of economy and tax reductions that have gone unredeemed since 1932.

Millions of our citizens have been living in hope for the last 15 years that part of the staggering burden of excessive taxation would be lifted from their backs. Any miscalculation that we might make will be far outweighed by the incentive that we are giving our people to go ahead and keep business and employment in high gear.

Mr. President, with the disturbing reports from business statisticians everywhere, that kind of incentive can hardly be measured by dollars alone.

Let me point out, too, that if we cut the taxes now, and if we know we have to reduce appropriations because of that cut, we will reduce, and we will be more diligent in our search for wasteful spending to be pruned from the widespread tree of Government bureaucracy.

There is also this mechanical feature which is most important. It is our plan to have these income-tax reductions become effective July 1 next, and that is only a little time in the future. Millions of our people are on a weekly withholding basis with their employers. This means that tens of thousands of firms across the country must revamp their operations and do it without delay if they are to be able to deduct the proper amounts beginning July 1. It means that the Treasury must also make changes and amend its regulations and forms. These things cannot be done at the drop of a hat. They take time and work. Time is now very short. Let us give these people as much time as we can. Let us not pull a rabbit out of the hat at the last minute. Let us avoid the colossal confusion which would result and would bring ridicule upon Congress if we delay too long.

Because I think it would be of interest to my colleagues on the other side of the aisle, I call their attention to a poll made by the Philadelphia Bulletin indicating the opinions of the people of that area on the subject of an immediate tax cut. According to the Philadelphia Bulletin tabulation, 63 percent wanted a tax cut now, 28 percent were willing to wait until next year, and 9 percent had formed no opinion.

And mark this—of the Republicans who voted in the poll, 60 percent wanted an immediate tax reduction and only 29 percent were willing to wait.

Of the Democrats who voted, 67 percent were recorded in favor of immediate action, and only 27 percent indicated a willingness to wait.
